The enemy permitted the squadron to approach unmolested. At half-past four, when abreast the stockade, I made the signal to anchor; immediately afterwards, Lieut. gen. Godwin expressed his wish to land the troops, which was effected in perfect order in a very short period. They had scarcely formed, under the Lieut. General's direction, when a heavy fire was opened both with cannon and musketry from the various stockades, which was instantly answered by a cheer from the party landed, who stormed and carried the pagoda. As soon as the enemy commenced firing, the ships opened their fire on the different batteries. Observing the stockade opposite the town had been silenced, I directed Commander Campbell, of the Sesostris, to land with the boats of his own ship and the Mozuffer's, and to storm it, which he effected in gallant style, driving the Burmese from their guns with considerable loss to them in killed and wounded.

Commander Campbell has called my special attention to the zeal and activity displayed on this occasion by Lieuts. Robinson and Lewis, of the Indian Navy.

At half-past five, I had the satisfaction of hearing that the last and most formidable of the stockades had been carried, but not without considerable loss on our part, from the great resistance shown by the enemy.

Amongst those I have to enumerate as sufferers on this occasion, I have to name Lieut. George W. Rice, of H.M.S. Fox, who received a severe and painful wound through the right hand whilst gallantly leading his party of seamen into the stockade. I feel it my duty also to mention the steady conduct of the Royal Marines, under the command of 1st Lieut. John Elliott; and I cannot conclude without expressing my best thanks to Commanders Campbell and Hewett, of the Indian Navy, for the skill and ability with which they brought their ships up a river, which had hitherto been but imperfectly surveyed, for a distance of more than sixty miles; nor can I refrain from expressing how much I am indebted to Commanders Dicey and Burbank, of the Bengal Marine, for the assistance I received from them, and I attribute our being able to perform this service without accident, to the careful and judicious manner with which the commander of the Pluto went in advance, and communicated the soundings. I cannot forbear bringing to his lordship's notice, Mr. Francis Duncan, second officer of the Tenasserim; he was by the side of Lieut. Rice when he was wounded; and in storming the stockade his conduct was most gallant.

My thanks are general to the officers and men who served under my orders on this occasion for the steady, gallant, and cheerful conduct with which they performed the duty; neither can I omit remarking that the most perfect unanimity prevailed between the two services.

Since my last visit to Negrais the old governor of Bassein has been removed, and the government entrusted to another officer, who arrived here from Ava with 4,000 regular troops, which increased the strength of the garrison to 6,000 men.

I have the honour to forward herewith a list of killed and wounded in the squadron: the casualties among the troops I understand amounted to about twenty-five more; and I also inclose a return of the number of cannon captured from the enemy.

I have, &c.

GEORGE R. LAMBERT, Commodore.

List of Killed and Wounded in the Squadron under the command of Commodore Lambert, at the capture of the city of Bassein, on the 19th May, 1852.

Total, one killed and nine wounded.

Commodore G. R. Lambert to the Secretary to the Government of India.

H.M.S. Fox, Rangoon, May 24, 1852.

Sir,—Referring to my despatch of the 20th inst., I request you will inform his lordship in council, that, after we had obtained possession of the city of Bassein, I sent the Pluto a short distance up the river, to endeavour to intercept the retreating army. She returned next morning, and Commander Burbank acquainted me that he proceeded up the river above Bassein about forty miles, that he communicated with the village of Mamoon, from which the inhabitants came off, and informed him that one of the party then on board was a person of high command at Bassein, during the attack; that he then arrested this person, and he has delivered him over to me, together with another officer of high rank.

Commander Burbank having been informed that a party of the retreating force, in two boats, had that night left the village, he proceeded in chase, succeeded in capturing one of the boats, in which he found a quantity of arms and ammunition, which he destroyed; the troops landed and fled into the jungle. The Pluto afterwards fell in with another portion of the defeated Burmese, encamped, but who fled on being observed, leaving their arms, all which have been destroyed, as well as their barracks. A party of seamen from the Fox embarked in the Pluto, to assist in the operations, under Mr. Lisboa, midshipman (Brazilian navy).

The Proserpine steam-vessel having joined me from Moulmein, I despatched her, with the Fox's marines, to destroy some unoccupied stockades in the neighbourhood of the village of Naputa, which was accomplished without any opposition, assisted by the villagers.

I also request you will inform his lordship, that the squadron under my command, detached to Bassein, returned to Rangoon on the 23rd, with the exception of the Sesostis, which I left to co-operate with the troops in garrisoning that place, and of the Pluto, which I have sent to Penang, agreeably to orders I had received from Rear-Admiral Austen.

In continuation of my letter of the 11th May, I request that his lordship may be informed that the Phlegethon returned here to-day, having made a most successful expedition, in conjunction with the barge of this ship, in charge of Acting Lieut. Lawrence, which I had despatched to rejoin that vessel.

While Commander Neblett was waiting for sufficient water to get into the Rangoon river, I directed him to reconnoitre Donabew; he accordingly proceeded to that place, and found that the governor of Dallah had fled, and that this once famous stronghold was unoccupied and defenceless. The inhabitants seemed desirous of affording every assistance, and informed him that a considerable force was collected further up the river, to which spot he also proceeded, and at about ten miles above Donabew, near the town of Sagadjee, he fell in with them. The Phlegethon opened fire upon this force, consisting of about 5,000 men, which retreated and fell back upon Sarawah, a town thirty miles higher up the river; he afterwards ascertained that a portion of them crossed over to Henzadd, at the junction of the Bassein river.

Commander Neblett informs me that, wherever the Phlegethon made her appearance, he was received by the natives with every demonstration of friendship, and an anxiety for him to afford them protection from the marauders and Burmese troops.

I have, &c.

G. R. LAMBERT.

India Board, July 19, 1852.—The following despatches have been received at the East-India House:—

Lieut. General H. Godwin, C.B., commanding the forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim Provinces, to C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

Head-Quarters, Rangoon, May 14, 1852.

(Extract.)

"In my report of the 18th of April I had the honour to recommend to the favourable consideration of the Governor-General in Council the valuable service I had received during the operations of the 12th, 13th, and 14th, from Brevet-Major Boulderson, the deputy judge advocate-general of the force, who had requested to follow me in the field; and who, when Captain Allan, the deputy assistant quartermaster-general, was wounded at the White House Stockade, was appointed to officiate for him. He has been of the greatest assistance to me in both departments by his ability and zeal, and I therefore venture to bring to notice the omission of his name in the general orders of the 28th of April, which I entirely attribute to oversight, and earnestly request may be rectified.

"A few omissions and errors, inseparable from the recent formation of the forces I command, have occurred in the preparation of my despatch of the 18th of April, which I solicit the favour of being allowed to correct, should his lordship in council see fit to extend his grace.

"Brigadier Warren, whose absence from the army I greatly regret, has reported to me the services of the companies of the 18th Royal Irish, which, under his immediate command, assisted in the Tenasserim at the destruction of the three stockades at the entrance of the Rangoon river on the 5th of April. The brigadier was with the same companies under the heavy fire of the stockades on the Dalla and Rangoon sides of the river on the 11th of April. He also was in command of his brigade during the greater part of the 12th of April. Major Fraser has brought to my notice the very gallant conduct of his adjutant, Lieut. Williams, of the engineers, at the White House Stockade, where he was very prominent. The major has also pointed out that Lieut. Ford was the officer who commanded the detachment of Madras sappers and miners at Martaban, and who should have received the thanks of Government instead of Captain Rundall, who had not joined the force, and who very honourably disclaims the praise. Captain Christie, of H.M.'s 80th regiment, has been brought to my notice as the officer who commanded the portion of the storming party from that corps at Martaban; he partook in the subsequent operations on that day. The Commandant of Artillery has also pointed out the omission on my part of the services of Brevet-major Back, in command of the Madras artillery contingent, who directed the heavy battery in the action of the 14th of April, which I commended as having been served with precision and effect. The services of Brevet-captain Scott, of the Madras brigade of the artillery, have also escaped my notice; he has been mentioned in very complimentary terms by the officers commanding the Bengal and Madras contingents of artillery."

(Then follows a "Notification," dated May 27, 1852, with reference to the omission of the names of Brevet-major Boulderson and Lieut. Ford, which was inserted in the last Mail, p. 417).

(From the London Gazette, Aug. 10.)

Admiralty, August 6, 1852.—Despatches have been received at this office, from Commodore Lambert, of H.M.'s ship Fox, of which the following are copies:—

Fox, at Rangoon, May 11, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to request you may be pleased to inform the Lords of the Admiralty that, on the 2nd inst., I despatched the Hon. East India Company's steamer Phlegethon, commanded by Mr. G. T. Niblett, and the barge of H.M.'s ship Fox, in charge of Acting-Lieut. John R. Lawrence, to the great entrance of the Irrawaddy, to try and effect a passage through the Panlang branch. On the morning of the 11th, the barge returned; and Mr. Lawrence reported that they had advanced as far as Yangernsiah, where the water shoaled so considerably that the Phlegethon could not cross into the Panlang branch; the barge, however, was enabled to do so, and proceeded down into the Rangoon river, in order that I might be acquainted with the result, and the cause of the steamer's long absence. It is with much satisfaction I learn that the object of the expedition has been accomplished.

I have further to request you may be pleased to inform their Lordships that, on the Phlegethon and the Fox's barge arriving off Yangernsiah, they discovered the governor at Dalla, retreating with eight armed boats; chase was immediately given, and, on coming up with them, the enemy ran on shore, leaving their boats, in one of which was the governor's wife, with her attendants; they also abandoned a quantity of treasure, and most of their arms.

The treasure captured amounted to eleven thousand rupees; the arms, which consisted of muskets and swords, were destroyed; and the boats, with the women, were allowed to proceed.

I have, &c.

A. Stafford, Esq. M.P.
&c. &c. &c.

COMMERCIAL FAIRS IN INDIA.

The Bombay Government having given notice of the establishment of two new fairs in Scinde, one at Kurrachee, near the mouth of the Indus, the other at Sukkur, in Upper Scinde, the former to commence on the 1st of December, and last sixty days, and the latter to commence on the 1st of January, and last forty-five days, a meeting of the Manchester Commercial Association was held, on the 17th July, to consider the advantage likely to result therefrom to British commerce: Mr. J. Aspinall Turner, president of the Association, in the chair.

The Chairman said he had taken the liberty of inviting to be present several gentlemen connected with the East-India trade, because he thought that, on an occasion like the present, they ought to give the utmost publicity to their proceedings. There could not be a more important subject for the Association to consider, after that of the supply of the raw material upon which they worked in that neighbourhood, than to ascertain where new markets might be opened for their manufactures; and where there was a prospect of facilitating trade with parts of the world with which they had very little communication. If they could by any means cheapen the goods to the customers in any part of the world they were to that extent increasing the demand for those goods. There had been a very important instance of this during the last quarter of a century, with which many of his hearers would be familiar; he alluded to their gradually extending and increasing communication with the port of Trebizonde, on the Black Sea. Although Trebizonde was an important port at an early period, about twenty-five or thirty years ago it was little more than a fishing village. But it was evidently the main highway to Persia and Central Asia, as was ascertained long ago, for a very different purpose, by Alexander the Great, who led his armies by that route into the East. His modern countrymen, although they might be less celebrated in history, song, or story, had, of late years, been adopting that route for the extension of commerce and the progress of civilization. The Greeks of our day, although they might not be so eager in the pursuit of conquest and military renown, were, at all events, advancing in the peaceful arts of commerce. They had established themselves in Manchester, in considerable numbers, and he would pay them the compliment of saying that they had always borne a good name there. They were very enterprising men, and, although difficult to deal with, yet, when a bargain was completed with them, they were noted for the punctuality with which they fulfilled their engagements, and the public of Manchester were greatly indebted to the Greek merchants for their exertions in introducing the manufactures of that district into Persia and the East via Trebizonde. At the present time something like 1,500,000*l.* worth of cotton goods were exported to the East. But for this important improvement they were also in a great measure indebted to an individual who was, in 1825, our Minister at the Court of Persia, and who at that time called the attention of Mr. Canning, then Minister of Foreign Affairs, to the great importance of Trebizonde as a port, and suggested that a consulate should be established there. He at the same time sent various specimens of goods which were introduced into Persia by Astrachan and Resht, on the Caspian Sea, but pointed out that Trebizonde was the most direct route. At that time Russia supplied nearly all the goods sent to those regions. The same person, Sir H. Willock, now Vice-Chairman of the East-India Company, had addressed to him (the chairman) the following letter, which, though marked "private," was only private so far as that it was not written in his official capacity:—

"East-India House, June 25.

"Dear Sir,—I believe you are aware that the Court of Directors of the East-India Company have sedulously turned their attention to the improvement of the British commerce with Central Asia, and have been desirous that the attention of the commercial world should be turned to the advantage of the position of Kurrachee, the port of Scinde, as convenient for the introduction of British manufactures to the vast extent of countries immediately west and north-west of that province. Personally feeling a deep interest in these matters, I have been in private communication with Mr. Frere, the Political Commissioner and Governor in Scinde. The Court of Directors having given every encouragement to the establishment of a fair at Kurrachee, it has been resolved and proclaimed that the first assembly of merchants shall be held at Kurrachee on the 1st of December next; and I send you notification to this effect, which has been published by the Bombay Government, and which has been spread far and wide through Asia in several native languages. I do not think that this plan and intention are sufficiently known, and I should be glad if you could call the attention of the manufacturing community to the benefit of this opening. I send you an extract from Mr. Frere's communication to me; and I do wish that some enterprising house or houses would make an experimental investment direct to Kurrachee to meet the coming occasion. I have no doubt it would lead to great results, for that Kurrachee will become a great emporium for British piece goods, to meet the wants of Central Asia, I am quite confident. I do not speak idly, or without some experience in such matters, for I have been instrumental in obtaining an extensive market for our manufactures in another quarter of the globe. When I was minister at the Court of Persia, in 1825-26, I called the attention of Mr. Canning, then Secretary of State for the Foreign Department, that the trade between England and Persia was carried on solely by the Cape of Good Hope; that there was first a voyage of four months to Bombay, where the fabrics were landed; that the Persian merchants came from the Gulf to make their purchases, which occasioned a second delay, and the expense of a second shipment; then came the outlay attendant on land carriage to the interior of Persia, which was so great that the enhanced value of the goods precluded an extensive sale. Teheran, Tabriz, the western provinces of Persia, and the eastern provinces of Turkey, were almost exclusively supplied by Russia from Astrachan, through Resht. I sent to England samples of these commodities; I pointed out that Trebizonde, on the south-east coast of the Black Sea, formerly a port of great resort, now a fishing-town, was most conveniently situated for the introduction of our manufactures into the ports above cited; and I recommended the appointment of a consul there, to attract the attention of the commercial world. Mr. Brant was nominated to the post; at that time not a bale of our goods went there, and now woollen and cotton goods are there imported for the Persian market to the amount of a million and a half annually. I am satisfied that similar results may be obtained at Kurrachee. I beg to call to your particular notice the concluding part of Mr. Frere's communication. I am quite ashamed of the inertness of my countrymen, and that the Americans should beat us on our own ground.

"The little memorandum which I enclose will show how greatly the quantity of wool, as a return, may be expected to increase.

"I beg you to believe me, dear Sir, faithfully and obediently yours,

"HENRY WILLOCK.

"James Aspinall Turner, Esq."

"MR. FRERE, POLITICAL COMMISSIONER IN SCINDE, TO SIR HENRY WILLOCK.

"Kurrachee, May 3.

"I think you may safely rely on the first fair being held at the end of this year, and if we could get a cargo or two of well-assorted goods direct from England, there could be no fear of any want of immediate success. Among the Afghan and Sindian merchants I have not met a single opinion unfavourable to the result, provided English or Bombay traders will attend. The lighter the draught of the vessels employed the better; there is not more than 19 feet of water on the bar at high water spring tides, so that vessels requiring more would have to anchor in the harbour, where, of course, the loading and unloading is less convenient than inside the harbour. I had hoped to have sent you a memorandum on the subject of the articles of import trade most in demand, but Mr. M'Leod, the collector of customs, was interrupted by illness while drawing it out, and has not yet finished it. I believe, however, a cargo assorted as for Bombay would answer very well; perhaps a larger proportion of coloured goods would be desirable. Mr. M'Leod has brought to notice, that during the last three years an export of wool from the Mekraee coast has commenced on American bottoms. The wool is purchased partly with dollars, and partly with coarse cotton goods. The vessels, I am told, are fitted for whaling or trading, as the captain, always half-owner and supercargo, may find most advantageous. It is the power which the employment of men of intelligence and ability gives to vary the plan of operations and the scene of trade, which confers on American vessels so great an advantage in trading here and on the African coast, and in other seas where it is not easy to give exact instructions. I hear that news of the Americans having actually opened a trade direct with Mekraee has excited some attention among mercantile men at Bombay."

Some conversation took place amongst the persons present at the meeting.

The Chairman said he had fulfilled his duty in bringing the subject before the association, and the proceedings then terminated.

INDIA IN THE NEW PARLIAMENT.

At this critical juncture in the affairs of British India, it is consolatory to find that the number of members returned to the new Parliament, who are officially connected with the Government of that empire, is not less than in the last, and that of individuals qualified by personal knowledge and local experience to afford information or to act upon committees, in Indian matters, the number has been augmented.

There are still five directors of the East-India Company who have seats in the House of Commons. Mr. Masterman has been re-elected for the City of London, Sir James Hogg for Honiton, Mr. R. D. Mangles for Guildford, and Mr. M. T. Smith for Wycombe. Mr. Plowden has lost his seat for Newport in the Isle of Wight; but Lieut.-General Caulfeild has been returned for Abingdon.

In addition to those members, not officially connected with the Indian Government, who are conversant with Eastern topics,—such as Sir James Matheson,—who served in the last Parliament, Mr. Macaulay has been returned for Edinburgh, and his splendid talents will contribute much aid to the discussions upon the renewal of the Charter Act.

All the old members connected with the Direction are Liberals, or Free-traders. General Caulfeild, the new member, in returning thanks to his constituents, thus expounded his sentiments upon the prominent political topics: "With regard to Reform, you need not be told that everything human is imperfect; nothing can stand still; it must either progress or else go backwards. Nevertheless, I consider any incautious advances to be as pernicious as retrogression. I shall not vote for any speculative changes in the constitution of the country; but whenever I see that reform is necessary, and the constitution manifestly requires a change (and experience alone can point out defects), then I shall devote all my energies to carry out improvements. There is one little matter that, like an old coat, is threadbare, and I hope now worn out. I allude to the corn laws. I think the corn laws ought to be a question between the landlord and the tenant, and that Government ought not to interfere in the matter. And I trust the Government will be wise enough not to interfere. It is in my opinion quite unnatural that the tenant farmer can be expected to pay the same rent, with wheat at an average of about 45s. per quarter, as he did when wheat was up at 65s., 70s., and 80s. per quarter. The fair way for a proprietor was to have his estate re-valued, and let the rent be settled according to present circumstances, and at a price which the tenant is enabled to pay. I do not preach that which I do not practise; but I have carried out on my property what I am now recommending. All that I possess in the world, with a little exception, is in land. I have had my property re-valued—my tenants are satisfied, and so am I. With regard to the franchise, I do not believe in my heart that the great mass of the people of this country are properly represented in Parliament. This is a question, I confess, that will require a vast deal of consideration—and mature consideration, too; but I do hope that, old as I am, and white as is my head, to live to see the day when the base of the franchise will be placed on such a foundation as will ensure the representation of the feelings, the wants, and the opinions of the great majority of the people of England. With regard to the assumption of power in this country by any foreign potentate, and more especially by the Roman Pontiff, any attempted interference on his part with the religious institutions of this country shall meet with my most undeviating opposition. There is no doubt about that. Lord Derby has introduced a Minute in Council, the effect of which will be to hand over the superintendence of the whole of the national schools to the clergy. Now, no man can respect the clergy more than myself; my father was a clergyman, and I have many friends in the church; I love the throne as I love the church; I respect the pastors, and while I am disposed to think they are excellent judges of morality, and I will willingly listen to them as pointing the way to Heaven; I cannot consent that the instruction of the children of the whole population, comprising various sects, should be left entirely in their hands. And I am not prepared to advocate such a system—no, not even to secure a seat in Parliament. We must have education on a broad basis; and in order to conciliate all classes, we must ensure a sound education; for without it, it is impossible that the people can properly discharge their duty to God, to themselves, or to their country."

THE TRIESTE ROUTE.—The Austrian Lloyd informs us that its negotiations with the Eastern Steam Navigation Company having failed, it has entered into arrangements with the Peninsular and Oriental Company for the conveyance of the luggage of persons travelling by way of Trieste to Alexandria. In other words, travellers to the East Indies who book their passage at the offices of the Peninsular Company can go by way of Trieste to Alexandria, while their heavy luggage is taken from Southampton to Alexandria by the English Company's boats.

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE.—The examination of the candidates for admission into the East-India College next Term took place at the East-India House on the 22nd, 23rd, and 24th ultimo, when the following candidates were reported duly qualified, viz.:—Messrs. Bainbridge, Crawford, Fairfax, Gooch, Hall, Hunter, Lane, Macready, Melvill, Morris, Robinson, Sheppard, Simson, Thornhill, Waid, Waterfield, Wynch. With a view to increase the number of admissions into the College next Term as much as possible, the Court have appointed a second examination of candidates to take place on Thursday, the 9th of September, and two following days.

OUR INDIAN RELIEFS.—Some months since Mr. Fox Maule, then Secretary-at-War, stated in the House of Commons the intention of Government to relieve all regiments in India as soon as possible after the expiration of fifteen years' service abroad. We fear, however, that this was but an empty promise, as the Royal Irish and 60th regiment have been sent on active service to Burmah in their sixteenth year of foreign service, and that too in a most unhealthy climate. Surely the gallant corps which, ten years ago, distinguished itself by its intrepidity in China, might have reasonably expected to have seen its native land ere this. As no mention of reliefs for these two regiments has as yet been made, another year will elapse before the 18th and 80th can expect to land in the United Kingdom, and many a gallant fellow in their ranks will have then been laid low by the unhealthy climate of Burmah, owing to the supineness of the home authorities and the parsimony of the East-India Company in providing timely reliefs. There are now two corps at home, both nearly six years and a half returned from abroad, one of which has never served eastward of the Cape, and it would be but common justice that they should be selected to relieve our long-banished battalions.—United Service Gazette.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY.—At the meeting of this Company, held on the 17th July, the report and accounts were unanimously adopted. The litigation arising from the charges preferred by Sir James Brooke, the answer of the directors, and the steps they proposed to take, with the view of obtaining a full investigation into the circumstances attending these differences, were discussed, the chairman (Mr. H. H. Lindsay) commenting severely upon the alleged causes which had led to the attack. Mr. MacGregor explained the motives inducing him to resign the post he originally held, and stated that he was determined the matter should not be allowed to rest until it had been thoroughly inquired into. In answer to a shareholder, it was mentioned that the directors, although the operations of the Company had been to a certain extent successful, did not propose to declare a dividend on the present occasion. They anticipated, however, at a future meeting, to be enabled to make some distribution. The retiring members of the board, Lord Albemarle, Capt. Bethune, R.N., and Capt. Nairne, H.C.S., having been re-elected, a vote of thanks, moved by Sir George B. Robinson, Bart., and seconded by Col. M'Douall, was given to the directors, and the meeting separated. At a Court of Directors held subsequently to the meeting, Mr. Lindsay and Sir John Campbell were elected chairman and deputy-chairman for the year ensuing.

ASSYRIAN ANTIQUITIES.—The Minister of the Interior at Paris has received despatches from M. Place, the French consul at Mosul, giving an account of further discoveries made by him during the search at the Mount of Khorsabad over the ruins of Nineveh, and which had been interrupted by the return of M. Botta to France in the year 1845. One of the most interesting discoveries made by M. Place is the wine-cellars of the ancient kings of Assyria. The jars which served to contain the wine have been found ranged in order, and though broken and filled with earth from the ruins, they have not been displaced. A purple deposit is still visible at the bottom of each vessel. M. Place further announces that he has obtained the consent of Colonel Rawlinson to pursue his researches, and to cut fresh trenches in the mount.

THE YOUNG PRINCESS OF COORG.—The superintendence of the education of the young Christian Princess of Coorg has, we understand, been transferred from Mrs. Drummond to Viscountess Hardinge, who will assume the charge after the departure of the Rajah, which is at present fixed for the autumn.

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—Between February 19 and June 6 there arrived at San Francisco 6,770 Chinamen. The feeling, against the Celestials had evidently not subsided, as was imagined. In El Dorado county, several waggons containing Chinamen had been stopped, and in some cases considerable property belonging to them, in the shape of tents, merchandise, &c., was destroyed. Amongst the immigrants from Hong Kong were eighteen Chinese women, attired in the costume of their country.

M. BURNOUR, one of the most profound Oriental scholars of France, died at Paris on the 28th May. "The Asiatic Society," says the Journal Asiatique, "has suffered an irreparable loss in its secretary. Unremitted mental labour gradually undermined his health, and he has died without being able to complete those works upon ancient Persia and India by which he opened to history avenues entirely new, and which will remain magnificent monuments of a brilliant literary life conferring glory upon France."

BILLS ON INDIA.—The amount received at the East-India House for bills on India, from the 8th to the 23rd July, has been 906,936l.; and from the 24th July to the 7th inst., 301,937l.

THE SHIPMENTS OF SPECIE by the Bentick amount to 167,892l., of which 50,300l. is gold for Alexandria and Ceylon, and the remainder silver for Calcutta, Bombay, and Singapore.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Constantine has been engaged for the conveyance of troops to Calcutta, and the Queen for freight of stores, to the same presidency. The Minden for conveyance of troops to Madras.

BOOKS.

The Englishman's Magazine, and Literary and Political Essayist, for August, 1852. Bosworth.

This is the first number of a magazine "intended," as the advertisement announces, "to supply the long-felt want of a monthly periodical of sterling merit at the very low price which the present facilities for cheap production now render practicable." The price is one shilling.

The articles are well written,—in particular, "Richard Lalor Sheil," "M. Guizot and Shakspeare," and "The Quarterly Review and the late Lord Jeffrey." Their defect is, want of sprightliness and vigour. There is such a remarkable uniformity in thought and style throughout the prose articles, that we could almost suppose them to have been written by the same person.

The Shwe-da-gon pagoda, at Rangoon, stands upon a mound, to which the ascent is by 80 or 100 stone steps, and the summit is about 800 feet square. Besides the central edifice, or the temple itself, which is a solid building rising from an octangular base by a gradually diminishing spheroidal outline to the height of 300 feet, a number of buildings, smaller shrines or the habitations of the attendant priests, chiefly of teak, and curiously carved and gilt, surmount the elevation, and form not incommensurable dwellings.—Wilson's Narrative.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

This Day is published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5. 5s. in boards, SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

* * * To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

PHYSICIAN.—George Butrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 12th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	43 15 0	23 10 3
60	1847.	1,000	66 11 8	26 12 8

*. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

SUMMER.—The recurrence of the summer solstice invites the full display of female beauty—adorning the fashionable promenade, the ride, and drive; in all cases, fervid heat, and its concomitant, dust, materially injure the skin, producing sunburn, tan, freckles, and discolourations, of an almost indelible character. To obviate and eradicate these baneful results, recourse may with confidence be had to ROWLAND'S KALYDOR, a preparation of vital importance to the sustenance of female beauty. It imparts a refreshing coolness to the skin, allays heat and irritability, purifies it from all eruptions, and realises a clear and fair complexion. Its purifying and refreshing properties have obtained its selection by royalty, and the several courts throughout Europe, together with the élite of the aristocracy.—Price 4s. 6d. and 8s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLAND'S AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pugnency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronised by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odoriferousness, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate mouchoir of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies. In all cases of over-excitement or fatigue it will prove gratefully refreshing, if taken as a cooling beverage, diluted with water.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

ROWLAND'S MACASSAR OIL, for the growth, and for preserving, improving, and beautifying the Human Hair.—Price 3s. 6d. and 7s.; family bottles (equal to 4 small), 10s. 6d.; and double that also, 21s. per bottle.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE present Mail has removed all anxiety respecting the Ajdaha, with the Mail of the 25th June, which, it appears, when about 700 miles from Aden, and within 337 of Cape Gardafui, ran short of coal, and her commander (Captain Barker) returned to Bombay, where she arrived on the 13th July. A Court of Inquiry, appointed to investigate the matter, is said to have held Captain Barker guilty of a grave error in judgment in returning, and he has been reprimanded by the Government. The proceedings of the Court are not published, nor are we in possession of the reasons (save the deficiency of fuel) which influenced an officer, who is described as a most efficient packet commander, and as an old Red Sea surveyor, in taking a step of so much importance. In consequence of the return of the Ajdaha, the English Mail of June 24th was consigned to a sailing vessel, which had not reached Bombay when the present Mail left, and would not probably arrive for some days. There would be no steamer from Bombay direct for the five weeks after the departure of the Mail now received, and overland letters from India must make the circuit of Madras.

Some apprehensions, we regret to find, are entertained respecting the steamer Zenobia, which left Moulmein on the 14th June, for Madras, and had not since been heard of. She ought to have been across the bay in a week, or ten days at the most. As the steamer is a new one, in excellent condition, and there had been no bad weather in the bay, unless, as in the case of the Ajdaha, her supply of fuel was inadequate, it is difficult to account for her detention.

The accounts from Rangoon, which are to the 22nd June, are no otherwise important than that they represent the troops as healthy, happily refuting the prognostications of those who foretold the disasters with which the delta of the Irrawaddy, in the rainy season, would overwhelm our army. With the rains half over, the troops had scarcely suffered more from sickness or discomfort of any sort than they would have done in cantonments within their own presidency. Much of this may be attributed to the forethought of the Government, and to the zeal and ability of the engineer officers. General Godwin, who has at present under him a force of about 6,000 soldiers and 2,000 seamen or marines belonging to the fleet, is said to have applied for reinforcements, which will bring his army up to full 18,000, or, including the fighting men afloat, to close on 20,000—a force, considering its equipments and amount, its vicinage to India, and the power at command of transporting it by steam, one of the most numerous and effective we have ever had in the field in India,—that employed against the Sikhs alone excepted. Two brigades of infantry and two troops of horse-artillery were under orders from Madras. Bengal was expected to supply a wing of Europeans, and two regiments of native infantry. The Madras Athenæum states that the Governor-General urged the General to advance at once in the steamers to Prome; that he declined to act upon the suggestion, whereupon Lord Dalhousie called upon him for a plan of the campaign, and General Godwin, in reply, required a force of 15,000 troops; 10,000 for the field army, 3,000 for the garrisoning of Rangoon, and the remainder to take care of Bassein and Prome. It adds: "The General's demands will, it is understood, be complied with; but the responsibility of the refusal to move forward by the river has been placed on General Godwin."

It is announced in the Calcutta journals that the Governor-General was about to proceed to Rangoon, in the Feroze steamer, in order to have a personal interview with General Godwin, and see with his own eyes how matters actually stand. The Marquess would take with him Mr. Allen, the officiating secretary to the Government of India; Mr. Courtenay, the private secretary; Major Banks, the officiating military secretary; and two aides-de-camp, and had expressed his intention of seeing during his short stay as much as he can of the country. On his departure, Sir Frederick Currie, senior member of Council, would be sworn in as president of the Council, and deputy-governor of Bengal.

In another column we have inserted various details and speculations upon the subject of future movements in the interior, as soon as the season for operations shall arrive.

"Already," says the Bombay Times, "an outline of the campaign may be traced without much risk of error; and, with a force so overwhelming as that already indicated, the idea of anything like resistance is out of the question. The garrison of Rangoon has already afforded us a sufficient sample of the power and prowess of the Burmese invincibles. Already, in all likelihood, has the Governor-General made up his mind as to the amount of territory to be annexed; already, we doubt not, he is in full possession of the wishes of the home authorities—cash contributions are not to be looked for from such a quarter—on the subject; and all that can be matter of dubiety is, how many marches we will require to make before the Burmese monarch comes forward to sign, seal, and deliver. So soon as the reinforcements join, powerful garrisons will be thrown into Martaban, Bassein, and Rangoon, and our rear generally will be strengthened. Pegu will become our advanced head-quarters—the people are already avowedly anxious to exchange a Burmese for a British government, and the country will be placed at our disposal without the trouble of a conquest."

In our last Summary we announced the resignation by Brigadier Sir Colin Campbell of his command on the north-west frontier, on the plea of ill-health. This plea, the validity of which seems to be confirmed by the fact that he has obtained a medical certificate, and is on his way to Europe, has not prevented a good deal of writing in the journals, and of excitement in the military circles, upon the hypothesis that the General's resignation of the Peshawur command was occasioned by his impatience of the interference of the Board of Administration at Lahore. The Calcutta Englishman, of June 29, has an article upon this subject, in which it is said—

"We have received some curious particulars connected with the resignation of Sir Colin Campbell, a resignation which, we should imagine, must in some measure embarrass the head-quarter authorities, nay Government itself. We believe a statement of the circumstances, which have more immediately induced Sir Colin Campbell to take the decided step of resigning a command which must be considered one of the most important in British India, is now, or has lately been, before Council, and that the Governor-General himself has been called upon to decide how far the Board of Commissioners at Lahore are to be permitted to interfere in a commanding officer's military arrangements, and to draw the line beyond which neither civilian or politico-military shall advance when acting officially with the forces in the field. We believe that Sir Colin Campbell complains, that his measures have been thwarted, his intentions frustrated, and his anticipations checked, by an interference which asserted and exercised the power of putting a veto on even the most important military operations, and extended so far as to check dispositions, which might have had a salutary and a vital effect on the ultimate result of the expedition. We know not the parties who are more immediately alluded to by Sir Colin, or whether any individuals are pointed out; it may be that he finds fault with the system, a system which, owing to the experiences of a disastrous past, ought to have been swept away for ever."

We are assured by other journals, however, that this is "a very gross misrepresentation of the facts." The Lahore paper asserts, that the amount of interference by the board amounted to this, that they placed the greater part of three regiments of the Punjab irregular force at the disposal of Sir Colin Campbell; in doing so, they denuded Kohat, for the defence of which they were responsible; and that "Sir Colin was as free to act on his own judgment, on all military questions, as ever was commander."

Brigadier Roberts was expected to succeed Sir Colin Campbell.

Everything continued quiet on that frontier, and it was rumoured that the chiefs are anxious to propose peace measures to the Feringhees, and that a large meeting was about to take place for that purpose. Saadut Khan is said to have found that his followers are not likely to continue faithful to him. "There can be little doubt," observes the Delhi Gazette, "that the recent severe lessons the Momunds have been taught, although not quite so complete as to bring them entirely to subjection, have nevertheless proved our superiority in the field; and it is possible that the enemy, seeing the folly of any further opposition, has determined to adopt conciliatory measures."

"The Mofussilite Peshawur correspondent's letter, dated July 8th, says:—

"Negotiations are now going forward with the Momunds, the Swattoes, and Ranazae people, which, when concluded, will, it is rumoured, insure us a peaceful border on the north and north-east of Peshawur for the next two or three years. The Michnee lands are to be given back to Saadut Khan's people, on condition of their paying an annual tribute of Rs. 600. The Swattoes have offered to give up all rights to the Ranazae valley, and to let the Ranazae people make what terms they are best able with us."

The affairs of Bahadur Khel have been settled, by the Deputy-Commissioner of Kohat, to the satisfaction of all parties. The Maliks of that village have agreed to build on a spot, under the guns of the new fort, less likely to afford them shelter and protection should they again manifest symptoms of disaffection, and, having given good security, have been restored to favour.

The Punjab, like the rest of British India, enjoyed perfect tranquillity. In preceding numbers we have recorded proofs of the rapid progress made in our Pentapotamian territories, in the construction of roads and canals, and the abolition of onerous and vexatious imposts. Other evidence is furnished by the papers before us, showing that the signs of prosperity are not merely external. A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette, on the banks of the Indus, said to enjoy excellent opportunities for observation, tells us that the only complaint the people make is that food is too cheap! When we first took possession, grain was selling for from 23 to 25 seers per rupee; it is now selling for one maund and thirty seers, and some wholesale transactions have been made at the rate of two maunds, or about eight pence per bushel. In 1849 barley sold at 29 seers per rupee; in 1852 it sells at two maunds and ten seers. Gram, which in 1849 was 32 seers per rupee, is now one maund and a half, and all other grain in proportion. Raw cotton, tobacco, and molasses are all about one hundred per cent. cheaper, and there is very nearly the same difference in the price of cloth made in the country or imported. These are very gratifying results of three years' peace and good government.

We notice, rather by way of contrast than with a view of communicating intelligence, which is but the repetition of former statements, the condition of the Deccan, where the affairs of the Nizam are said to be gradually approaching a crisis. By a letter received from Ellichpoor, we learn that the murmurs of discontent are daily becoming louder and louder, Siraj Ool-Moolk, in whom General Fraser had so much confidence some nine months ago, having disgusted and disappointed all parties.

"His indulgence and apathy have been beyond all parallel. False titles to the monarch who claimed his allegiance, and the Government that placed in his hands the reins of power, he has wasted his time in paying complimentary visits to the Resident, and journeying about from place to place, with all the ceremonious pomp and pageantry of a grand vizier of the olden time. His nights, which should have been devoted to the maturing of plans for the better development of the resources of his country, have been too often spent in the unrestrained indulgence of vitiated passions, and his days in partially restoring wasted energies to a body enfeebled both by age and licentiousness. His whole career has been most signally unsuccessful, and he stands at the present moment a miserable impersonation of degraded imbecility, openly elighted by the British representative, and looked upon with loathing and contempt by the prince of his native land."

Thus is territory, as it were, forced upon us, by the penalties necessarily exacted, through their unprovoked hostility, from one set of rulers, and by the incapacity and vices of another.

CASUALTIES BY DEATH IN THE ARMIES OF INDIA REPORTED SINCE OUR LAST PUBLICATION.

H.M.'s FORCES.—Lieut. W. Cumming, 24th foot, at Wuzerabad, June 25; Capt. Henry Skinner, Ceylon rifles, at Trincomalee, May 26, from the effects of a fall from his horse the night previous.

BENGAL.—Brev. Maj. H. Montgomery, art. at Calcutta, June 4; Ens. C. Sutton, 68th N.I. at Cawnpore, June 25; Lieut. Col. D. Williams, 5th N.I. at Mean Meer, July 10; Maj. F. A. Miles, art. at Hitchen, aged 45, Aug. 28; Lieut. R. B. Norton, 35th Bengal L.I. at St. John's Hill, Wandsworth, aged 30, Aug. 15.

MADRAS.—Ens. W. R. D'Oyley, 35th N.I. at Samulcottah, May 22.

Messrs. Gabet and Huc, in their account of Chinese Tartary, tell us that the lamas, or priests, in their character of physicians, treat all diseases as visitations of demons, who take possession of the patient, and must be expelled before a cure can be effected. The expulsion, according to them, is to be accomplished not by force, but by solicitation. With this view, they offer the demon presents, for which they charge the patient; and as the ingenious theory of the lamas is that the rank of the occupying demon is in proportion to the wealth of the patient, it follows that the richer the patient the more valuable must be the gifts to propitiate the demon, the priests having, of course, the reversion of the gifts!

The Moohummudan law is derived from the following sources: 1st, the Koordan, which is believed to be a direct revelation from heaven; 2nd, the Soonnat, or sayings and doings of Moohummud; 3rd, the concurrent opinions or decisions of the Sahabah, or companions of the Prophet; and 4thly, Kiyas, or analogical reasoning, when nothing can be found in any of the preceding authorities expressly applicable to a particular case.—Bailie.

Baron Humboldt mentions a fact illustrative of the sagacity of the titi (Simia sciurea), a species of monkey he met with in his voyage up the Orinoco. One individual in his possession distinguished the different plates of a work on natural history so well, that it would stretch its little hand to catch a grasshopper or a wasp represented in an engraving, although the figures were not coloured.

From a return to Parliament, it appears that the receipts of the home treasury of the East-India Company from the 1st of May, 1851, to the 30th of April last, were, including balance in hand, 6,099,552l. 8s. 6d., and the disbursements, 3,734,003l. 14s. 6d.; the balance in favour on the 30th of April was 2,365,548l. 14s.

BENGAL.

BURMAH.

BURMAH.—The Fire Queen from Rangoon the 21st of June, reached Calcutta on the 1st July. The most gratifying intelligence relates to the health of our troops, which, for more than a month after the commencement of the rains, continued to be highly satisfactory. The total number of deaths between the middle of May and the middle of June was 22, out of a body of 3,300. On the 21st June, the number in hospital was 330, which was not regarded as very excessive, when the exposure which the troops had suffered was taken into consideration. This satisfactory state of things is to be attributed in a great measure to the unexampled exertions of Major Fraser and his engineers. The rapidity with which he has erected the new barracks, without a single forced labourer, and the excellence of the workmanship, are said to exceed whatever the late Burmese governor was able to achieve, with the compulsory labour of 30,000 men, in four months. The contrast presented on the present occupation of Rangoon, to the position of the troops under Gen. Campbell in 1824, is most singular and most gratifying. At the commencement of October, 1824, the army yet saw no prospect of relief from the famine which threatened, or the scarcity which wasted it. In the present instance, the bazar of Rangoon is plentifully supplied with provisions, and they are moderately cheap. In 1824, we are told by Havelock, in his history of the campaigns, that "ships despatched from Rangoon in July, could not bring back any effectual succours in less than four months;" but with our present efficient steam flotilla, provisions, medicines, medical comforts, and succour of every description can be obtained in fourteen days from Calcutta, and in seven from the Tenasserim provinces. Again, in the former war, General Campbell was incessantly harassed by a bold and confident enemy for three months after he had captured Rangoon, and his troops were kept in a state of constant activity to repel their attacks. In 1852, the capture of Rangoon appears to have paralyzed the Burmese, and with the exception of a trumpety attack on Martaban, the enemy have not dared to show themselves to our troops. The Proserpine steamer has been sent to explore the Irrawaddy, and has proceeded to a point within thirty miles of Prome without meeting an enemy, though she was fired into occasionally by bands of dacoits, who range uninterrupted through the country which the Burmese appear to have abandoned. Capt. Brooking captured ninety or a hundred boats laden with rice, intended for Prome and Ava, the loss of which will be severely felt by the king's troops. Through the active exertions of Mr. Ambrose, a Moulmein ship-builder, the Phlegethon and the Mahanuddy steamers, which had become unserviceable by an accident, have been thoroughly repaired at Rangoon itself, and were expected to be seaworthy in a few days, when it was intended to despatch them with the Proserpine, on an exploring expedition to Prome, and possibly farther. These steamers give us the complete command of the Irrawaddy below Prome, and, in fact, of the whole of the lower provinces. The sight of their smoke at a distance, fills the minds of the Burmese with trepidation, and they have doubled, perhaps trebled, the efficiency of the armament. We regret, however, to learn that soon after our troops left the old town of Pegu, it was again occupied by the Burmese, who came down in a body of 3,500, and drove out the Peguers, in whose possession it had been left. The Burmese troops were detached from a military post not far from Toungoo, but they had not a single gun with them, and would probably fly before 200 of our soldiers.

Below Prome, four-fifths of the inhabitants are Peguers and Karens. Ever since the days of Alompra, all situations of honour and profit have been bestowed exclusively on the Burmans, and every effort has been made to depress these two conquered races, and to extinguish their language and nationality, but without success. The hatred which they bear towards their oppressors for the wrongs of a whole century, has seldom been exceeded in intensity. Hence, on the first appearance of our fleet off Rangoon, we were hailed as deliverers. The Peguers, as a nation, may be said to have placed themselves under our protection, and there is nothing they so deeply and keenly feel as being abandoned by us a second time to the tender mercies of the Burmese, the most cruel savages who ever disgraced the human form. We cannot venture to publish the accounts which have repeatedly reached us from various quarters, of the atrocities practised towards those who were suspected of a disposition to join us; these accounts are repeated in the letters last received. The re-occupation of Pegu was followed by almost unheard-of barbarities to the innocent children of those who sided with us. The Peguers have of their own accord annexed themselves to our rule, and identified themselves with our interests and government. Since the career of our conquest in Asia began, there has never occurred such an instance of a whole people placing themselves voluntarily under our protection, and importuning us to accept their allegiance. The question with the British Government no longer is, whether we shall annex Pegu to our empire—that has been virtually done in the most legitimate and the most effectual manner, viz. by the national will of the people; but whether we shall disavow Pegu from our dominions, and abandon many millions of human beings to the most atrocious cruelties.

The re-construction of the town of Rangoon is considered by those on the spot, one of the greatest wonders of the age. In the last war, "Rangoon had no tenants, but the army and its followers, the Armenians, the individuals recently released from captivity, a few Parsee and Mogul adventurers, and a body scarcely more numerous of sick, aged, and bed-ridden Peguers." When we landed there in April last, the town was entirely deserted, and no small proportion of the houses had been burnt down to the ground. It was a scene of universal desolation. But so strong and general is the confidence placed in us, and so anxious are the people to obtain the benefit of our protection, that a new town has sprung up within two months, which contains fifty thousand inhabitants, nearly one-third more than the population of Maulmein, which has been the growth of a quarter of a century. This population requires the immediate and most earnest attention of Lord Dalhousie. It is at present without any governing authority, civil, criminal, or fiscal; there is no control over this multitude, and no means are afforded them of obtaining justice or redress.—Friend of India.

Extract of a letter, dated Rangoon, 16th of June:—"The climate has hitherto proved very pleasant, the rains by no means over abundant, the thermometer in the house varying from 77 to 84, and no need or thought of a punkah. It has proved healthy for the Bengalees, though some of the Madras officers have suffered much (said to be owing to too long a residence on the relaxing western coast); and our men have actually mostly got stouter than they were on their arrival. The number of men sick is not great, considering the duties and exposure; nor are the cases generally of a serious nature. The country people are coming in in the most extraordinary manner. There must now be some 30,000 inhabitants, all quiet and well-behaved, fond of their children, and often to be seen in the evening dandling their babes, and no doubt rejoicing in the mild rule under which they now exist. The town—I need not say with such a population—has sprung up like magic, slight, it is true, yet quite sufficient for present shelter, which is the great want, and situated principally along the river-side in the locality of the old town, destroyed by the governor before our arrival. There is no likelihood of any attempts on the part of the Burmese to disturb us. The country is wholly against them, and I believe that were a proclamation made that we had taken Pegu (annexed is the proper word), that one regiment might march through the length and breadth of it; as it is, the people are afraid, for if they were to aid us or help us, the moment we retire they would be sacrificed by those cruel monsters who yet rule over them; even after our late expedition to Pegu (the capital), on our force leaving, almost all the inhabitants accompanied it. We hear that we are to have a horse-battery from Bengal, and two troops H. A. from Madras, sent over after the rains; if so, that betokens no move before the 1st December, and it will probably be well towards the end of February, if so early, that we can hope, if all goes well, to reach Ava. Nothing, I think, will be done before we are well advanced; palace walls are thick, and it is dangerous, especially at Ava, to whisper any unpleasant tale until the loud knocking from without is attracting attention; that will be when we are beyond Prome, and our steamers up the river have cut off retreat by that way."—Delhi Gaz.

We have received intelligence by the steamer, of General Godwin's resolution not to advance till reinforced, and that his present determination is to move by land on Prome, about November next. If this suicidal policy be not in the interval overruled by the Governor-General, or the appointment of a Commander-in-Chief, General Godwin will thus deprive himself of the powerful aid of the steam flotilla (really the winning card in our pack), besides exposing the health of the troops to unnecessary risk, by marching them in the very month when the exhalations from the swampy soil of Pegu are most abundant and injurious. We think, moreover, that the feelings of our military readers will not be shocked if we suggest, that the interval of a quarter of a century which has elapsed since the last war, when, as General Godwin himself says, he did not carry the colours, has not been suitably improved by him, as is too clearly evinced by the wretched proposal just noticed; and that it might be advisable to intrust the future management of this war to some officer whose experience has enabled him to keep pace with the great changes introduced by the agency of steam, into the tactique of all our military operations, and who has benefitted to a greater extent than General Godwin, by the lessons taught on the coast of Syria, in Scinde, and in China. If the Governor-General would only authorize Commodore Lambert to move up in the smaller steamers with 1,000 men, we are perfectly satisfied that, with the aid of his own sailors, he would not only capture Prome, but also hold it. —Madras Athenæum.

General Godwin is determined to head an army, not a mere division, and if the Governor-General countersigns his indent in its integrity, he will lead as fine a body of troops as a commander could wish for, in eastern warfare. We understand, that called upon by Lord Dalhousie to state what additional force he required to complete the conquest of the country, he replied, "1 light field battery, 2 troops of horse artillery, 500 cavalry, 4 regiments of European and 6 of native infantry." With the exception of the cavalry, the importance of which, in our opinion, the general underrates, we consider his army, thus reinforced, would be most complete, and fully able to march to Peking, if required. —Englishman.

THE NEW CAUSEWAY a cross the low lands of the river Jumna at this station is at last completed. The work consists of a broad embanked road, laid down with metal, from the water-mills of Selimpore, on the other side, to the brink of the river, a distance of more than a mile in length. Midway is a neat and substantial bridge on three elliptical arches, stretching across a small branch of the river. From the extreme end of this causeway to the corner of the old fort of Salemgurh, on this side, is a distance of about nine hundred yards, which is now covered by the broad and turbid waters of the swollen stream. The causeway on the Delhi side commences also from the brink of the river, and skirting the picturesque wall of the above-mentioned old fort, is connected with the city of Delhi by a fine well-built bridge of seven arches, which crosses another stream of the river running immediately under the walls of the city. At the head of this bridge is the new of Calcutta gate, with its two arches and double roadway. This great work then is at length completed, and we need scarcely say that it will prove a source of the greatest comfort and convenience to travellers, merchants, and traders of all sorts, and it will also expedite the mail; but after all, this is only half a work. The space between the two river-ends of the causeway will be connected by the bridge of boats, which we understand will be brought up to its new site as soon as the present flood is somewhat diminished; but surely at a city like Delhi there should be a permanent bridge across the Jumna; the grand trunk-road has been completed to Kurnal, and its further construction is, we understand, being prosecuted with vigour. The line, however, thus far, cannot be said to be complete without a permanent bridge at Delhi, and we trust that the day is not far distant, when the natives of Upper India will have cause to applaud the skill, the liberality, and the wisdom of the British Government, in having constructed such a necessary and useful public work for the benefit of so large a community. —Delhi Gazette, July 3.

CONVERSIONS.—During the whole of last week, Delhi was the scene of considerable excitement among the Hindoo population, in consequence of two very respectable men of their body having announced their intention of offering themselves as candidates for baptism on the following Sunday. The one of them, named Ram Chunder, is the mathematical teacher in the Government College, and is a man of considerable talents and acquirements. The other, named Chimmun Lal, is the sub-assistant surgeon of Delhi, and is considered to be a skilful man in his profession. Sunday evening saw their admission into the church, and we witnessed the excitement, unaccompanied with turbulence, caused by the event. St. James's Church was surrounded with natives, who were also allowed to occupy the spaces inside the building not required by the congregation. They behaved during the service with the greatest decency and order. The baptism took place after the second lesson, and, as usual, the converts had their chosen witnesses, members of the congregation. —Delhi Gaz. July 14.

RUINS OF GOUR.—Capt. Layard, executive officer of the Berhampore division, has been permitted to proceed immediately to the presidency, to appear before the council of the Asiatic Society, with his notes and drawings on the ruins of Gour. We are told further, that these notes and drawings are, under orders from the Court, to be sent home forthwith. —Hurkaru.

THE INDIGO-PLANTERS are beginning to cry out from having too much rain. The weather in and about Calcutta has been exceedingly wet; we have not had three hours of clear sunshine this month. —Hurkaru, July 12.

SMALL CAUSE COURTS.—The Government is so well satisfied with the working of the Calcutta Court of Small Causes, that it purposes establishing similar tribunals in the large towns of the Mofussil.

GOLAB SINGH has issued a coin bearing a cross, and the initials of "I. H. S." It is supposed to be intended as a compliment to the Christians!

MONSIEUR D'ORGONY, the French gentleman referred to in the accounts from Rangoon as having been an object of suspicion to the high authorities there, tells a very different story of his reception. He writes to a friend in Calcutta, that he went down with the intention of proposing to General Godwin the organization of a corps of Pegu volunteers, and that he was most honourably and most graciously received by the general. He adds, that "all the world is very greatly amused with the grande et sottie histoire fabricated and published by the journals of Calcutta about him; and that General Godwin prayed him not to pay any attention to such charges, which he would answer in his correspondence with the Governor-General."

VOLUNTEERING FOR FOREIGN SERVICE.—So many regiments of native infantry have come forward and volunteered to go on service to Burmah, that it is no longer a question with the Government which will go, but which shall we take? It is very certain that all who have volunteered unconditionally, cannot be made available, and it is but justice to the several regiments to suppose them one and all alike desirous of showing their devotion to their honourable masters. In this dilemma we think it would be an excellent opportunity for forming a volunteer battalion. By allowing the men of each regiment to cast lots to the extent of one hundred, or one company from each, we think a very efficient body of men might be selected for this, or any other service where such a force may be deemed necessary; and the risk of displaying any favouritism in the choice of regiments would be thus obviated. Considering the unfortunate check the organization of the force for Burmah met with at starting, we look upon the volunteering of the majority of native regiments in the service, as a very fair specimen of loyalty in that branch. —Delhi Gazette.

THE LATE ORDER, prohibiting Government servants from taking any active part in the management of banks, has caused a considerable stir amongst all persons interested in those institutions. Voluminous correspondence on the subject has filled the columns of almost every Indian journal, and the opinions offered have been as much at variance as might have been expected from the many hands employed in wielding pens on the occasion: but nothing has yet been decided as the proper course to adopt. Rumour has it, that one Mofussil bank is making strenuous endeavours to have the order set aside, which is, we think, about as unpromising a work as can well be imagined. The grounds set forth are, that amongst private parties there are but few individuals who hold a sufficient number of shares to qualify them for the direction, whilst on the other hand, the deed of co-partnership expressly stipulates for a fixed number of directors, which number could not be reduced, because it might become a legal question whether any transactions concluded by a smaller number than is provided for by the deed, would be binding upon the shareholders. It is intended to memorialize Government on the subject.

THE EX-AMEERS OF SCINDE have for some time been occupying bungalows in cantonments at Allahabad, whither they were removed from Dum-Dum. Negotiations are now on foot for purchasing for the accommodation of the ex-Ameers, the beautiful estate hitherto occupied by Berrill's Hotel. The travelling public will not learn with any satisfaction that this sumptuous hostelry, beyond dispute the best in India, is to be closed. —Delhi Gaz. July 14.

THE SUPREME COURT has contributed a fair proportion of interest to this dull time. A jury pronounced a native guilty of perjury, and the foreman recommended him to mercy on the ground of "insufficient evidence!" A public-spirited individual charged this jury in general, and two of its members in particular, with being bribed into their verdict. The charge failed, the Court refusing a new trial on the ground of corruption in the jury, but subsequently granted the application when based on the ground that the verdict was contrary to the evidence. A patriotic attorney has refused to obey the new law which orders him to place a lighted lamp at his gate, or to pay the fine levied on him for disobedience. He moved the Supreme Court against the award, and advanced a number of arguments, more amusing than convincing, apparently, as the Court refused to interfere. Finally, we have the prospect of a Habeas Corpus case, in which a military officer of some rank and considerable local reputation, seeks to recover a truant daughter who has left his home in search of her married sister. —Hurkaru.

DISPUTES BETWEEN CORPS.—It seems just at present to be the fashion for soldiers to get up private fights for their own amusement—regiment against regiment. The quarrel between the 3rd Bombay Light Cavalry and the 21st Bombay N.I., seems to have been a most serious affair. The same may be said of the dispute between the 6th and 64th Bengal N.I., at Agra, and the dawk of the 12th instant brought intelligence that an affray had taken place at Cawnpore, where the soldiers of H. M.'s 70th, and the Sepoys of the 68th N.I. had been pelting each other with brick-bats and earth. A court of inquiry is now sitting in the above cantonment, to investigate this business.

THE RELIEF.—The Simla correspondent of the Mofussilite says—"The relief and movement of troops will be out immediately, and will astonish some of you. Eighteen to twenty regiments of N. I., two brigades H. A., two or three European regiments, two or three Sikh corps, with some cavalry, are to assemble at Fort William by the end of September. The C. in C. also, with a portion of each dept. to be there also." The Delhi Gazette understands that the relief will be a very extensive one this year. "It has gone down to Council for approbation and signature, and will, in all probability, be published about the 24th or 25th of July."

KUMAON TEA.—The annual sale of Kumaon tea is advertised to be held on the 3rd of August. The teas are packed in chests, containing from ten to twenty pounds, and the quantity to be sold this season amounts to about 5,000 lbs. The kinds of teas now prepared at the factories, are:—of black teas, pouchong, souchong, and bohea; of green teas, hyson, young hyson, gunpowder, imperial gunpowder, and hyson skin or sangko and twankay.

A GENERAL COURT MARTIAL was sitting at Meeran Meer for the trial of Ens. Gordon, 39th regt. N. I. The proceedings commenced on the 13th July.

MILITARY ON-DUTY.—The Delhi Gazette states that the Dinapore and Benares divisions are to be formed into one major-general's command. An officer of like rank is in future to command at Peshawur. The Hurkaru understands that, in obedience to orders received from the Court of Directors, the office of chief engineer (Sir J. Cheape being promoted) is to be abolished, and in its stead, three superintending engineers, with greatly increased powers, are to be appointed, one for the Punjab, one for the central, and one for the lower circle, the department being managed on a different system. Gen. Palmer positively takes command of the Cawnpore division, and has been directed to relieve Gen. Vincent without delay. It is rumoured that Lieut.-Col. Blair, 8th light cavalry, is about to retire on the invalid pension of his rank. Capt. E. P. Del Hoste, 27th regt. N. I., is about to retire from the service.

A SERIOUS AFFRAY took place at Goordaspoor, on the evening of the 29th of June, between some men of the 13th irregular cavalry and the native civil authorities. The thanadar was most severely beaten by the troopers, and only escaped with his life by falling into a hole, where they left him for dead; while a chuprassee has since died of the wounds he received. It is probable the regiment will be removed to some other station.—Lahore Chronicle, July 3.

STAFF ALLOWANCES TO ADJUTANTS OF CAVALRY REGIMENTS.—A general order, under instructions from the Court of Directors, authorizes the adjutants of cavalry regiments of her Majesty's service, serving in India, to draw the same scale of staff allowance as that sanctioned for adjutants of native cavalry regiments.

THE REBEL SIKH LEADERS, that is, colonels of regiments, commanders, &c., who were confined to certain limits since annexation, and who have been prohibited from going more than two or three miles from their houses, have now, on account of their good behaviour, and the general tranquillity of the country, been permitted to have unrestrained liberty within the districts in which they are respectively residing. The Governor-General has sanctioned this arrangement at the recommendation of the Board.—Lahore Chronicle, July 3.

THE SHUBQUDV AFFAIR.—The result of the proceedings of the court-martial on the troopers of the 7th light cavalry, had not been published at Peshawur on the 3rd of July. Lieut. Tottenham, of the same regiment, was immediately to be arraigned before a similar tribunal, on charges, three in number, framed by the adjutant-general.

CHURCHES IN THE PUNJAB.—The communities of Peshawur, of Rawul Pindee, of Sealkote, of Umritser, and of Hoosheerpoor, have nobly exerted themselves to secure the erection of churches at their respective stations. Foundations of edifices for the worship of God have been laid at all, and some of the buildings are already in a state of forwardness. Two urgent appeals are published from the Church Building Committees at Peshawur and Umballa.—Lahore Chron.

A NATIVE OF MOOLTAN, named Jumna Das, has undertaken the establishment of a bullock train between Mooltan and Lahore. He has laid four bullocks at each stage from this to Lahore, and is quite ready to convey goods. Some of his carts are being made at Delhi, some at Mooltan. In another two or three months he will have palkee gares for travellers. We are told that the charge for the conveyance of goods from Mooltan to Lahore, by the newly-established bullock train of Jumna Das (who is a Seth and a banker at Mooltan, and therefore, inferentially, a man of substance and respectability), is to be two rupees twelve annas a maund. While beer is being sold here at ten and eleven rupees a dozen, the good folks at Mooltan are drinking the best ale at six rupees.—Ibid.

FREE TRADE IN THE PUNJAB.—Within a comparatively short time of the military occupation of the Punjab by a British force, the principles of free trade began to develop themselves in the reduction of a considerable amount of the vexatious duties levied along the frontier, and within the empire itself. No sooner had the Sikh kingdom become a British province, than even those few items of taxation that still continue to disfigure the customs tariff disappeared from the schedule, and the merchant of the Punjab was free to export or to import every article of trade, raw or manufactured, without being subject to a single demand on account of the state. Salt remained the only tax-paying article, and the result has amply answered the expectations of those who carried out in the Punjab the liberal views that are rapidly extending in Europe. Free trade is an absolute fact, in the most extended sense of the word, in the newly-acquired provinces. The river and export demands, which, notwithstanding their vexatious minuteness, yielded only an annual revenue of Rs. 46,579, have been abolished by order of the Governor-General.—Ibid.

THE LONDON.—The Bengal Hurkaru informs us that "Capt. O'Neill, a passenger by the Aegir, reports his vessel, the London, of Liverpool, foundered at sea in lat. 15° 30' N., long. 89° E. She was laden with rice, and bound to Cowes for orders. After being seven days in the long boat, all hands reached Akyab in safety."

REPORTED MOVEMENTS OF CORPS.—The Mofussilite gives the following as the expected relief of the corps in the Punjab:—The 9th N.I. from Lahore to Peshawur, the 39th N.I. from Lahore to Rawul Pindee, 5th N.I. from Lahore to Jhelum. The 18th irregular cavalry say they are going to Rawul Pindee; the 1st to Peshawur, and the 4th to Lahore. A letter from Simla (July 17) says: 6th cavalry to Peshawur; 2nd ditto to Nyagong; 3rd ditto to Kurtarpore; 7th or 8th ditto to Meerut; 8th ditto to stand fast. It has been decided that two brigades leave Bengal for Rangoon early in October. The following regiments will form the brigades:—H.M.'s 29th regt., the 2nd Europeans, the 10th, 33rd, and 37th N.I., the regiment of Loodiana, and the 2nd brigade of horse artillery. Colonels Huish and Dickenson will command brigades, and the whole of this large reinforcement will be under the immediate command of Brigadier Sir H. M. Wheeler, K.C.B. The wing of H.M.'s 80th regt., now in Fort William, proceeds to Burmah as soon as relieved by a wing of H.M.'s 29th regiment from Dinapore, which is to come down by steam. The 14th light dragoons will, in all probability, stand fast at Meerut, as the carabinieri are to be permanently stationed at Ferozepore, where H.M.'s 87th foot makes room for them, and proceeds, it is said, to Wuzerabad. It is understood that the residents at Hyderabad (Deccan) and Nagpore having been called upon to state whether they could spare a corps each for foreign service, the answer given was in the affirmative. The 38th and 46th N.I. are the corps named.

THE COST OF THE BURMESE CAMPAIGN up to the 1st of this present month, for the Bengal forces alone, has been as follows:—

Commissariat	5,80,000
Ordnance	6,00,000
Marine	6,50,000
Charges general	5,00,000

Rs. 23,30,000

To this must be added the cost of the troops in extra batta marching allowance, &c., the expenses of the Madras contingent, of the Bombay navy, and at Rangoon, Martaban, and our other positions; and we venture to say that the total expenditure up to the 1st July, 1852, will not be found to be one rupee less than fifty lacs, or 500,000.—Englishman, July 12.

LIEUT.-COL. WILLIAMS.—The Lahore Chronicle of the 10th July announces the death that morning, at Meeran Meer, of Lieut.-Col. D. Williams, commanding the 5th N.I., "to the great regret of those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, and the grief of all ranks in his regiment, by whom he was esteemed beyond the ordinary acceptance of the word. He had been suffering for many weeks, from a protracted attack of fever." He entered the army in 1820, and his various commissions bear date as follow:—Ensign, 3rd April, 1820; lieutenant, 11th July, 1823; captain, 29th October, 1830; major, 1st May, 1844; lieutenant-colonel, 28th July, 1850. He served in the Burmese war, in Assam, in 1824; at the siege and capture of Bhutpore, in 1826; and in the Punjab campaign, 1848-49, having commanded the 45th N.I. in the memorable actions of Chillianwalla and Goojrat. For these services he had received three medals.

CHURCH ON MOUNT ABOO.—A letter from Mount Aboo, dated July 2nd, mentions that Col. Low, the Governor-General's agent at Rajpootana, had laid the first stone of the Mount Aboo Church, which is to be constructed at home by the founders who built the iron ball-room for her Majesty at Balmoral, and will cost about 400*l*.

The resignation of Sir Colin Campbell, K.C.B., has caused considerable excitement in our military circles. The subject, showing the difficulty experienced at the present moment of supplying his place, has been discussed by the several journals of the day. There are various opinions given, but we are inclined to think, as is generally the case in these matters, that there are faults on both sides. We give the following communication as we have received it. It appears to us difficult, with only ex parte evidence, to say who is in the right or who is in the wrong. It was certainly our desire that Sir Colin should move on, and our opinion that it was his duty to obey the orders of the Board; but the impression obtains in Peshawar that he knew clearly what he was about, and that the arrangements provided for the expedition were not sufficient for the security and comfort of his force, and such as would expose him, in case of disaster, to most grave censure, and so far we think he acted rightly; but we do not join in the cry against political officers; we think their control has been, and may often be, of use and importance to the state; yet, on the other hand, Sir Colin must not be condemned unheard, and we hope he will soon let the public hear him. We cannot help thinking, however, that some "temper" has been shown by the general in throwing up his command at the present juncture.—Delhi Gaz. July 18.

AFGHANISTAN.—Our news from above the passes on our northern frontier, we are sorry to say, is not yet in regular course, but in a few issues, we shall be able to give our readers the latest and most authentic accounts from the neighbourhood of Kelat, Quetta, Candahar, Cabool, Guznice, and Herat. We have it from the latter place, so far down as the early part of May, that the Candaharies were still before that fortress, and that Kohin-dil Khan's head quarters were at a large town called Furrak; there had been a vakeel from the king of Persia in his camp, to know the reason why he should go against Herat, as he knew it belonged to that kingdom,—the wily chief's reply was that he was aware of that; and that he could be the king's servant in possession of Herat as well as without it. This vakeel retired and another from Herat visited, with a request that Kohindhil would withdraw, and one lac of rupees would be paid for the expense of his expedition; but this vakeel would not be treated with at all, and got an answer that nothing but the surrender of Herat would satisfy this army.—Scinde News, July 2.

REPORTED MURDER.—The murder of an English lady and her family in the cantonment of Baitool, reported some time since by the Delhi Gazette's correspondent (see p. 447), and mentioned to ourselves in a letter from Central India, seems to want confirmation, as not a word has since appeared on the subject in the columns of our Delhi contemporary, and the friend who wrote us has ever since continued silent. The reported murder, we sincerely hope, is untrue, and it certainly behoves the writers of the letters to the Delhi Gazette and ourselves to explain how they were led into giving publicity to such a fearful tale of blood—a tale calculated to grieve to the uttermost the relatives and friends of the unhappy lady and her family said to have been deprived of life in a military cantonment. We shall be delighted to be able to give a flat contradiction to the tale if untrue, as we doubt not will every paper in India which copied the original report from our Delhi contemporary.—Bombay Times, July 17.

THE CHIEF JUSTICE'S indisposition, we are sorry to hear, continues. His two colleagues took their seats on the bench without him yesterday, and his medical advisers have recommended a visit to the Neilgherries or Ceylon before he resumes his official duties.—Citizen, June 29.

CONVERSIONS.—Two young natives (Babus Koilas and Chunder Mittra) were baptized, on Wednesday evening last, at the Free Church, by the Rev. T. Smith. There were a considerable number of natives present on the occasion. Two young Hindus presented themselves to the missionaries of the London Missionary Society for baptism, and their friends had had recourse to violence to induce them to abandon their intention.—Christian Advocate, July 10.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

REGISTER OF OFFICERS' CHILDREN.

Head-Quarters, Simla, May 17, 1852.—Under instructions from Government, his Exc. the Com.-in-Chief is pleased to direct, that a register of the births and deaths of the children of officers, present and detached, be kept in every corps of the army of this presidency, and, that a copy be furnished on the 1st January annually, to the secretary to the Military Orphan Society, in order to enable that functionary to prepare a perfect register of the children of subscribers.

DIVISIONAL COMMANDS OF THE ARMY.

Head-Quarters, Simla, July 5, 1852.—Under instructions from Government, the Commander-in-Chief is pleased to announce the following revision in the divisional commands of the army:

The Benares and Dinapore divisions will henceforward be united under the latter designation, Dinapore being the head-quarters of the new division, and Benares will become a second class brigade.

The Punjab division will be divided into two distinct commands, to be denominated the Lahore and Peshawar divisions.

The Jullundur field force will cease to be a separate and independent command; and Jullundur, Phillour, Nakodah, Kurturpore, and Hosheypore, are transferred to the Sirhind division, which will in future comprise the several stations noted in the margin.*

The Lahore division will include all stations between the Sutlege, Beas, and Jhelum, as also the station of Ferozepore, which is transferred from the Sirhind division, and will comprise the several stations noted in the margin,† Lahore being the head-quarters of the division.

The Peshawar division will include all stations beyond the Jhelum, comprising those noted in the margin,‡ and the station of Peshawar will be the head-quarters.

The dep. assist. adj. gen. of the Benares division is transferred to the Peshawar division.

TRAVELLING IN CASHMERE.

Fort William, July 7, 1852.—In continuation of G. O. by the Gov.-General in Council, of the 23rd April, 1852, the most noble the Gov.-General in Council directs the publication of the following additional rules:—

6. Officers travelling in the territories of Maharajah Goolab Sing should encamp at the fixed encamping-places, otherwise supplies may not be procurable.

7. When going out on shooting excursions in the valley of Cashmere, visitors are to take supplies with them, and not to persist in demanding them of kardars at places where they are not procurable.

8. Visitors when out on shooting excursions, are not to press into their service the people of the country to act as hunters.

9. Travellers who have reason to consider that they or their followers have been ill-treated or affronted, are prohibited from taking the law into their own hands and punishing the parties offending, but they are invited to prefer their complaint to the authorities of the country.

COURT-MARTIAL.

CAPT. AND BREV. MAJOR G. P. THOMAS, 64th N.I.

At a general Court-Martial re-assembled at Agra, 4th day of June, 1852, Captain and Brevet-major George Powell Thomas, 64th regt. N.I., was arraigned on the following charges:—

1st. For highly unbecoming conduct, in having, at Agra, on or about the 6th of August, 1851, written and transmitted to the editor of the Agra Messenger newspaper, for the purpose of publication in that newspaper, a letter, in which he presumed to applaud the act of the Commander-in-Chief in remitting the sentence passed on Captain F. J. Thompson, of the 2nd European Bengal Fusiliers, by a general court-martial held at Agra on the 30th of June, 1851, and in which he commented in most disrespectful and unjustifiable terms, on the act of the majority of the said court-martial, by whose vote Capt. Thompson has been convicted of the second charge preferred against him; he, Capt. and Brevet-major Thomas having been himself a member of the said court-martial; viz.:—

* Huzel, Loodisnah, Juttogh (Simla), Dughahle, Kusowile, Subathoo, Umballah, Phillour, Nakodah, Jullundur, Kurturpore, and Hosheypore.

† Lahore, Ferozepore, Govindgurb, Goordaspore, Mooltan, Sealkote, Waseerahad, Noorpoor, and Kangra.

‡ Rawul Pindie, Jhelum, Attock, Kohat, Dera, Khan, Murree, Peshawar, and Ismael.

"To the Editor of the Agra Messenger, Agra.

"Sir,—It must, I think, be generally admitted that in remitting the sentence passed by the majority of the components of the court-martial on Captain Thompson, of the 2nd European regiment, his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief has performed a very commendable and very graceful act of justice tempered by mercy.

"And if (as his Excellency himself assures us) the evidence does clearly prove that Captain Thompson's 'frequent appearance before the Court of Requests throughout the term specified was not occasioned by his having incurred debt in any mode involving the imputation of disgrace to himself, or of discredit either to himself or his regiment,' then it must also, I think, be conceded that the Court (or the majority, whatever that was that carried the question the wrong way) ought to have acquitted Captain Thompson of the second charge, and that they have been, from whatever cause, whether from prejudice, or from stupidity, or from indolence, guilty of a gross act of injustice in finding Captain Thompson guilty of that charge.

"It little matters to the public whether one, or another, or all three of these causes tended to produce that injustice, but it is abundantly clear, that in whichever of these three causes that finding originated, the Court has shown itself incapable of discriminating between the very different shades which distinguish mere misfortune (such as might befall any man from circumstances beyond his control) from reckless extravagance (such as no man can indulge in without a taint upon his honour and his honesty), and that in fact they have failed in their duty as a British jury.

"Yours faithfully,

"SPECTATOR."

2nd. For highly unbecoming conduct, in having at Agra, on or about the 12th of August, 1851, written and caused to be published a letter which appeared in the Mofussilite newspaper, dated August 15th, 1851, of the same highly-improper tenor as the letter signed "Spectator," alleged in the first charge, viz.:—

"To the Editor of the Mofussilite.

"Sir,—It must, I think, be generally admitted that the Commander-in-Chief has performed a very commendable and very graceful act of clemency and mercy, and one that must necessarily enhance his reputation as a dispassionate and upright judge, in remitting the punishment lately awarded (by the majority of the members of the court-martial) to Capt. Thompson, of the 2nd European Fusiliers.

"And there cannot, I think, be a doubt, at least in the mind of any clear-headed and independent spirited man (and any man whose judgment is at the same time neither blinded by faction nor warped by personal prejudice), that the court-martial ought (as the Commander-in-Chief himself observes) to have acquitted Capt. Thompson of the 2nd charge, if the evidence (as his excellency himself assures us it does) goes to prove that 'his frequent appearance before the Court of Requests, throughout the term specified, was not occasioned by his having incurred debt in any mode involving the imputation of disgrace to him, or that of his having brought discredit either on himself individually or upon his regiment.' We have it stated (I repeat), not merely as a matter of opinion, but as a matter of fact, and we have it so stated by the Commander-in-Chief himself, supported, of course, by the advice of the Judge-advocate-general, that this is what the evidence on the 2nd charge proves; and in that case there is no escape from either horn of this dilemma, that that majority, whatever it was (and, from 'what everybody says,' it was the very scantiest majority possible!), was blinded by prejudice, or that they were either too indolent or too obtuse to distinguish between the very different shades of mere misfortune (such as might happen to any man), and of reckless extravagance; either one of these alternatives has an infallible tendency to prove that the individuals composing that majority were, pro tanto, disqualified for the impartial and efficient performance of their duty as members of a military jury, which is, in point of fact, what the president and members of a court-martial are, and nothing more.

"I have said that the clemency evinced by his excellency, in remitting the punishment which appears to have been deserved on the 3rd charge (the charge of having written a disrespectful letter, &c.), will be received with a respectful but hearty welcome by the army at large, and I believe that such will be the general feeling; but I believe, also, that there are not a few old (and elderly) gentlemen at the heads of regiments who will be terribly, nay unexpressably, baffled, disappointed, and tamalized, to find how vastly different a view from their own contracted one is the view which his excellency has taken of the 2nd charge, when that charge has been 'reduced to its essence.'

"These passé gentlemen, who for the most part, though they have no immediately pressing pecuniary engagement under Rs. 400, owe, at least, one enormously heavy debt to one or more of the up-country banks. These gentlemen, who forget that young men will be young men, ought to have this truth forcibly impressed upon their little minds, that the man who is perpetually suspecting the honour or honesty of others is himself ever (in more senses than one) one of the very most 'suspicious characters' in existence.

"Yours faithfully,

"A BENGAL SUBALTERN."

3rd. For conduct disgraceful to an officer and a gentleman, in having, in a letter dated Agra, August 25th, 1851, addressed to the Judge-Advocate who had conducted the trial of Capt. F. J. Thompson, falsely asserted that he, Capt. and Brevet-major Thomas, was not the author of the letter signed "A Bengal Subaltern," alleged in the second charge.

Finding.—The Court, on the evidence before them, are of opinion that the prisoner is not guilty of the charges preferred against him, and do acquit him thereof.

Revised Finding.—The Court, having attentively considered the observations of his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief, beg most respectfully to adhere to the terms of their former finding.

The finding under the 1st and 2nd charges is approved and confirmed.

The finding under the 3rd charge is confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM, General, Commander-in-Chief, East-Indies.

Head-Quarters, Simla, 3rd July, 1852.

Remarks by his Exc. the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief has not approved of the finding under the 3rd charge, because he is of opinion that, from the matter before the Court relating to that charge, Major Thomas was entitled to an honourable acquittal of the disgraceful imputation preferred against him; an opinion in which his Excellency regrets to find that the Court has not concurred.

The Commander-in-Chief has observed that the record of the proceedings of this general court-martial has been considerably swelled by the introduction of much hearsay and irrelevant matter, of which Major Thomas justly complained in his defence, and which matter should not have been received and entered on the proceedings.

His Excellency has also observed it recorded that the interpreter made "solemn affirmation." The attention of courts-martial is called to the standing orders on the subject of interpreters, by which, at European courts, they are required to be sworn, and a form of oath is given.

In promulgating to the army the result of this court-martial, the Commander-in-Chief has much pleasure in expressing the satisfaction he has derived from observing the alacrity with which most of the officers composing the general court-martial held for the trial of Capt. F. J. Thompson, 2nd European Bengal Fusiliers, on becoming cognisant of the publication in the Mofussilite newspaper of the very objectionable letter signed "A Bengal Subaltern," and referred to in the 2nd and 3rd charges, came forward to disclaim the authorship of that letter. This conduct on their part has been very gratifying to the Commander-in-Chief, as it has shown him that the unsoldier-like practice of addressing anonymous letters to newspapers, commenting on military matters, and reflecting on individuals, in terms that would prevent the writer attaching his real signature, is viewed in its proper light by the officers of this army. The practice is one to be most seriously condemned, and it is a matter of congratulation to the Commander-in-Chief, to observe from a perusal of these proceedings, that so correct and proper a feeling exists on the subject.

Brevet-major Thomas is to be released from arrest, and directed to return to his duty.

MADRAS.

POWER OF THE MADRAS GOVERNMENT.

AN assertion is constantly made, that the power of the Government of Madras is equal to that exerted by Mr. Thomason, in the north-west provinces, or by the Governor of Bengal. This assertion we emphatically deny, and are prepared to substantiate our denial by incontrovertible proofs. It is well known that the Supreme Government can at any time cause the expenditure for general India purposes to fall in any proportion on the respective presidencies; or, in other words, that for the accomplishment of any object the Supreme Government may have set their heart upon, they are at liberty to indent on the resources of the subordinate governments. Now it must be clear to the most obtuse capacity, that except the members of the Supreme Government be entirely disconnected from all the presidencies equally; or composed equally of delegates from each presidency; or unless the authority just referred to be supplementary by the provision that the surplus revenues of one presidency shall at any time be available for needed improvements in another, such an arrangement is a gross injustice to the subordinate governments, and amounts virtually to a complete abnegation of their independence, a thorough extinction of their individual views, interests, and welfare. Mr. Campbell, it is true, babbles with an enchanting simplicity about the equal authority vested in the governors of the different presidencies for the improvement and benefit of the people, forgetting that his own book, in another place, upsets that statement by the disclosure, that while the public works of the north-west provinces have for years past enjoyed 7½ per cent. of the public revenues, those of Madras have been left to get on as they best could on the munificent allowance of only a half per cent. ! Is there one of Mr. Campbell's readers verdant enough to imagine for a moment that such a difference would be allowed to exist for a day, if the governments possessed the equal powers for the improvement of their territories which he has attributed to them? Or again, if his statement were true, should we find oppressive taxes from which one presidency had been relieved, allowed for years to hang with millstone weight round the neck of another? Are these the indications of "equal authority," or not rather the outward signs of a secret yet unmistakable, and most shortsighted partiality? The Friend of India and other advocates of the Bengal Government, may asseverate the contrary to the top of their breath, they may denounce us as ungrateful, discontented, and factious, if they will, but we take our stand on their own statements, defective as we know they are, and in reply to their denials point simply to these "facts and figures;" there is no gainsaying such evidences. Like the rubicund blossoms that adorn the nose of the toper, giving the lie to his oral professions of attachment to cold water, do these damning statistics disclose too clearly the sad truth, and defy all contradiction.

We would also advert to another drain on the services of the Madras army that greatly interferes with their efficiency; we mean their employment on mere police or civil duty. For instance, in the southern division alone, if we are correctly informed, there are no fewer than from 1,500 to 2,000 of the native troops distributed over the country in small detachments of from 50 to 150 men, performing services that could be better performed by local revenue or police corps, or by companies of veterans. In the northern division again there are small bodies of troops stationed in localities highly prejudicial to both health and discipline. We are told that that fine old corps the 18th M.N.I. which in the last Burmese war marched from Ava through the Aeng pass, is so much broken in health by continued service in sickly posts among the hills and jungles, as to be quite ineffective for foreign service. The remedy for these evils is obvious, cheap, and easy. Let a number of local companies be raised, say twenty or thirty to the southward, and about the same to the northward, composed chiefly of old soldiers, pensioners, and men disqualified for the duties of the regular infantry; let them all be placed under one commanding officer, with a suitable staff; and on them let the drudgery fall which is now imposed on the regiments of the Madras army, to the great detriment of their efficacy. With the pensioners themselves there can be no doubt this service would be sufficiently popular to supply all the needs of the State in that department. We are inclined, too, to urge this arrangement the more strongly, as ever since the days of Colonel Casement, the Bengal Government has ignored the old veteran corps, than which a more useful body of men did not exist in any of the presidencies.

With these arrangements, accompanied by the immediate abolition of the two taxes which at present press so ruinously on the prosperity of the people of this presidency—the tobacco and mohurfa taxes—or a declaration from Government that the proceeds of these taxes shall forthwith be applied steadily to the improvement of our communications, whereby the produce of our over-assessed fields may be nearly doubled in value, would ensure peace and contentment amongst the twenty-two millions who now eke out a bare subsistence in the presidency of Madras.—Athenæum, July 1.

THE MADRAS UNIVERSITY.—It appears from a report of the governors of the Madras University, that the commotion excited by the admission of a few Pariah students has subsided, and the native community have yielded, though with a bad grace, to the determination of Government. Out of the forty students who quitted the institution rather than suffer the contamination of a Pariah's presence, more than twenty have applied for re-admission, and as they made the most ample apologies for their misconduct, they were restored. The Board append to their narrative of this occurrence some remarks which are as judicious as they are ungrammatical. "The conviction is spreading among the native community, that every prejudice against a common association among all castes and classes in the pursuit of knowledge at public institutions, is as unworthy of them as it is impossible to be conceded to."

A letter and an editorial article in the Crescent alludes to the ebullition that has been recently taking place in the University Board. We are able to add to our contemporary's information that the president of the Board, Mr. George Norton, has tendered his resignation, which Government, with an acknowledgment of his past services, has graciously accepted. The president's native tail is just now in the agonies of dislocation, and it is expected will drop off joint by joint within the course of a few days. We shall abstain for the present from all comment on the circumstances that have led to the withdrawal of Mr. Norton; they have been for some days past under the consideration of Government.—Athenæum, July 13.

TEMPLE REVENUES.—The Circulator asserts that a yearly increasing revenue, belonging to Hindoo temples, is in the hands of Government, and that the funds have been applied, without a legislative sanction, to the construction of bridges and roads.

REINFORCEMENTS TO RANGOON.—We intimated that orders would, in all probability, arrive for the despatch to Rangoon of reinforcements from Madras; the anticipated instructions have now arrived. The Madras army, it is understood, will supply for this service two regiments of European, and four of native infantry; two troops of horse artillery, and we believe also as many sappers and miners as can be spared. The 5th regt. M.N.I., now at Arracan, will form part of the force intended for service in Burmah. Although we might have expected, considering the exclusion of the Madras army from the Scinde, Afghanistan, Gwalior, and Punjaub campaigns, that they might have been allowed to have the Burmese war entirely to themselves, we are disposed to hail this recognition of their right at least to the larger share in it. We presume that the Bengal presidency will also be called on to supply two if not three brigades, in addition to that already serving; which will complete the force under General Godwin to the following strength: 4½ regiments of European infantry, 10 regiments N.I., 2 companies of sappers and miners, 2 troops of horse artillery; 6 companies of foot artillery; which, with one additional infantry brigade from Bengal, will raise the infantry to 17½ regiments, the whole composing a force of about 18,000 men. We trust that the Governor-General will now consider the expediency of organizing this force on the most efficient principle; that the troops from each presidency be formed into separate divisions, with general officers at their head. The Madras division will then comprise four, and the Bengal division two brigades, and the question then arises whether this force so increased ought not to be entrusted to the charge of a commander-in-chief, and whether it would not be as well for the Arrogant, which is bringing out Lord Frederick Fitz Clarence to Bombay, to convey him at once to Rangoon.—Athenæum.

THE CHARTERED BANK OF MADRAS has declared a dividend for the past six months at the rate of ten per cent. per annum. The net profits of the Bank for the half year amounted to Rs. 1,47,612; the Reserve Fund, on 30th June, to Rs. 41,884.

THE "ZENOBIA," which left Moulmein on the 14th June, for Madras, has not been since heard of. "We are told by persons well informed on the subject," says the Bombay Telegraph, "that, humanely speaking, there is not the slightest reason to fear that the Zenobia is in any danger from fire, as hinted at by a local cotemporary. This steamer is, as our readers know very well, a new boat; her machinery, boilers, &c., are in excellent order; and, from all we can learn from naval officers in the town, it is expected that a want of coals or stress of weather has induced the captain to put back to Moulmein. The next advices from Madras, will, we trust, bring news of the missing vessel." The following is the list of officers and others on board the Zenobia:—Commander Ball; Lieutenants Sedley and Dylesbury; Purser Hord; Mate and Store Accountant J. C. Wood; Mate Douglas; Midshipmen Moorehead and Liardet; Assistant Surgeon Betts. Passengers expected.—Mr. C. Cole, I.N., vice consul at Judah, and nearly two hundred individuals, including the warrant officers and artillery marines.

THE CONTINUED DELAY in the arrival of the Zenobia has created much uneasiness in the public mind of Madras, which has only been partially relieved by the suggestion of Captain Biden that, owing to stress of weather, she may have made for Penang. The serious apprehensions relating to her before noticed by us referred to the surmise of the possibility of her having been burned at sea, as, on more than one occasion, we believe, she has been on fire, from some imperfection in the arrangement of her furnaces.—Bombay, July 21.

THE NIZAM.—The Hyderabad (Deccan) correspondent of the Madras Spectator, writing on the 30th June, says:—"It appears that the Resident was explicit in representing to the Nizam the vices of his present administration, and the impracticability of his doing business with the minister, on whose word no reliance could be placed. It is said, that among other charges of deception and broken faith, the Resident produced the agreement on which it would not be incorrect to state Suraj-ool-Moolk's ministry had been based, viz., the arrangement for paying the debt and the contingent, and either returned the document to the Nizam as waste paper, or tore it in his presence. The first would be the proper course; I should prefer the latter, as indicating a deserved indignity upon the Nizam, who, throughout the conference, favoured the minister, though I do not hear that he vindicated and upheld his acts. If this were not done, it was because the capacity even to employ sophistry was wanting, and not from want of inclination. The Nizam has undertaken to produce order in his country in two years, and has declared that he cannot pay the contingent regularly. This brings the whole question to the point, which must force a divergement of some sort. The position in which the Nizam places it can in no way be tolerated."

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, JUNE 26.

In the matter of the Petition of Vinayekrao Hurrichunder.—Mr. Dickenson moved, on the part of the petitioner, that the rule made by the judges of the Supreme Court on the 15th of March, 1843, respecting the admission of attorneys, be altered, and a new one framed, as liberal in its operation as the Act XIII. of 1845, which shall open the profession to all who, without regard to caste or place of birth, and of respectability and good character, shall qualify themselves for practice by professional attainments according to such a standard of qualifications as their lordships may be pleased to lay down. The learned counsel grounded his application on a petition and an affidavit by the petitioner. The first was to the effect that the petitioner, who is twenty-two years of age, passed an examination in the Central Marathe School, and was admitted into the Elphinstone Institution, after having, in the first place, received a good English education at the establishments of the Messrs. Mainwaring and Jay. In 1847 he obtained the Clare Scholarship, and in 1849 was appointed clerk to the Council of Professors and librarians, which appointments he resigned in April, 1850. He afterwards became head clerk to Mr. Verral, solicitor, which situation he at present holds. Being desirous of qualifying himself for the legal profession as an attorney, the petitioner applied to all the solicitors in Bombay to be taken as an articled clerk, and offered to pay Rs. 4,000 as a premium, but they, one and all, refused to receive him, solely because he was a native of India, the attorneys of Bombay having some time ago agreed to take no such person as an articled clerk. Under these circumstances, the rule passed by their lordships on the 15th March, 1843, under Act XIII. of 1845, places a monopoly of the practice of the court in the hands of European practitioners, and virtually excludes natives. That this is objectionable, the petitioner argued from the fact that none of the attorneys understood any of the vernacular dialects current in Bombay, except the Hindustani, and very few of them are sufficiently versed even in that language to communicate with their native clients without the intervention of their native clerks or persons who pretend to be lawyers and act as agents. When Sir Herbert Compton extended the rule for the admission of persons as attorneys who should have been articulated in Bombay, he did so for reasons which he expressed as follows:—"Considering the different branches of jurisdiction that the Court is required to exercise, that most of the suitors at Bombay are either natives or persons who cannot speak or understand the English language, and that Hindoos and Mahomedans in matters of contract and inheritance are respectively entitled to have their own laws administered, it may, I conceive, be expected, that persons who during three years may learn the practice of the court in its different jurisdiction, who may acquire a knowledge of the languages of the natives of Bombay, and who may thereby and therewith become acquainted with their character, laws, and usages, will, if in other respects duly qualified in conformity with the rule, and if admitted as attorneys, be enabled to communicate directly with native suitors, to comprehend and to explain to them their rights and liabilities, to prevent unnecessary or vexatious proceedings in court, and to conduct such as may be necessary or unavoidable in the quickest and least expensive manner: such persons, by sympathizing with the interests, acquire the confidence of the native community, and therefore tend to arrest the progress of that dilatory and ruinous litigation that has long been complained of at Bombay."

The petition then proceeded to say that natives sit as jurors, and that, by Act 3 & 4 of William IV. capp. 85 & 87, no native of India is on that account to be disqualified from holding any place, office, or employment under the East-India Company. The rule at present in force, however, virtually excludes natives from being admitted as attorneys, unless by becoming articulated in England, for in Bombay there are so few practitioners, and their interests are so identical, that they entirely monopolize the business.

The affidavit was to the same general effect as the petition.

The Chief Judge, after consulting for some time with his colleague, said: "This is an important application, that comes before us in the unusual form of a petition, to make use of the discretionary power vested in us of framing rules regulating the practice in this court. Still, I am not prepared to say that the form is an improper one. The case in point is a grievance asserted to have been inflicted under the authority of an Act of the Legislature, and the present is no doubt the best mode of bringing the subject before the judges, that they may hear all the arguments in open court before deciding. The statement is that a class, or the individual who represents it, does not, under the operation of the existing rule, reap the benefit which the Legislature intended in passing the Act XIII. of 1845, which says, that not only persons who have been articulated to attorneys of the courts practising in the courts at Westminster are eligible, but also that other capable persons can be admitted. Taking the facts of the petition to be true, a young man, capable of practising at some future time, by some rule or tacit regulation of the profession, cannot get admitted among them. Under this view, there is here no doubt a grievance, for the Act clearly determines that all capable persons should be admitted. In framing the rule, in March, 1848, it was not intended, either by myself or my learned colleague, that any such person should be excluded. Natives, however, have the same opportunity at present as they had before; they can still visit England and there at once get admitted into the profession, when no difficulty can stand in the way of their practising in this court, as attorneys or even barristers; although if the facts stated are true, it seems a grievance that they should be inflicted with the tax of a long journey to England. It is certainly true that we have the power of framing a different rule, but the doing so would involve many serious difficulties. The admission of natives in this way would create a complete bouleversement in the profession. For instance, the table of fees would require to be remodelled on a very extensive plan. In establishing the present one, we went pretty much by the home custom, only substituting rupees for shillings, but it is clear that this would not apply to natives.—This would be the first consideration. In the second place, every one must see the necessity that exists in a fixed legal profession, of excluding unworthy persons, and those who, by becoming pettifoggers, would prove so injurious to society. To accomplish this, some very comprehensive scheme must be drawn out. Thirdly, if a rule is framed to the effect that no apprenticeship is required, it is very difficult to see how the necessary practical knowledge of the law can be obtained. The establishment of law colleges, the institution of lectures and other means of education, may be suggested by the judges, but they have it not in their power to provide them."

After a pause, and consultation with his colleague, the Chief Justice continued:—"I was not quite certain that I had dwelt sufficiently on this last point, and my learned brother thinks that it ought to be more enlarged upon. Even if the theory of the law—the scientific knowledge—be acquired, still, to practice as an attorney requires a practical conversance with duties only obtained from actual practice in an attorney's office, and on this account any rule to do away with the necessity of the apprenticeship would be inoperative. Clients would also be subjected to great inconvenience and expense from the want of skill of their professional advisers. There is now, however, a great tendency to simplify the knowledge of the law. One of the most admirable and practically useful documents that I have had the pleasure of reading, — the able report of the Chancery Commissioners, — has pointed out means of making the procedure more simple, by bringing the parties as soon before the Court as possible. Should their excellent suggestions be carried out, much of the excessive technicality, that it takes an age to acquire, will be done away with. But all these difficulties I have alluded to require a comprehensive scheme to include and to meet them, and which might often miscarry; besides there is the hostility of the profession to contend against as well as the other objections. Under these circumstances, I think the proper course would be to address a body with more power than ourselves, namely the Legislative Council. If the arguments are sufficiently forcible to induce them to frame a general law on this subject, we, as judges, will carry it fully into effect. And still, even if the arguments are not considered sufficiently weighty, we are not prepared to say that if an intelligent native presents himself before us, and successfully stands the tests to which we will submit him, both as to his education and character, that we will deny him admission as an attorney to practise in this court. The natives of this country are freely admitted into the two other professions that are called liberal, and I do think that the law ought to be equally liberal in this respect with the medical and clerical professions."

THREE Acts have been passed by the Legislative Council of India affecting the Bombay presidency. One increases the power in judicial matters of the native headmen of the villages; the second and third relieve the judges of the sudden adawlat from the superintendence of the police and jails in the districts, and authorize government to appoint a special superintendent. Under this, Capt. R. Wallace, of the 18th N. I., at present resident in the Myhee country, has been appointed deputy secretary to government in the police branch of the judicial department,—the emoluments of the office amounting to about 2,000*l.* a year.—Times, July 23.

THE RISE OF THE INDUS at Gorabaree has caused great harm. One of the branches of the river, the Ochoe, had borne down the old bund which Mr. Elander had repaired, it will be remembered contrary to his own recommendation, upwards of twelve months ago, and we are glad to hear the inbreak has not been through any defects in the principles of the works constructed by that gentleman; the bund that Mr. Elander erected himself, has withstood the present flood, nor is it likely to give way.—Scinde News, July 13.

THE MILITARY BOARD is about to wind up its affairs and close the establishment. The board was from the outset intended, as most boards are, to secure by means of mechanical checks and contrivances that which can only be secured by integrity and intellect—to relieve certain departments of responsibilities which in fact they ought to have borne. Its extinction will be hailed as a deliverance by all who ever had anything to do with it even in its best state.—Times, July 10.

KELAT.—The absence of Nusser Khan of Kelat, who has been on a visit to his mother at Gundava and other parts of Kutch, has caused a degree of alarm amongst his people in the neighbourhood of Quetta and Moostong, as they are apprehensive of the uncertainty of their neighbours of Candahar making incursions on them. The weather continued intensely hot, and the inhabitants suffering dreadfully.—Scinde News, July 2.

THE OPIUM PASS DUTY, in Malwa, since October 1st, 1851, has reached to nearly a crore of rupees! So much has never before been collected.

THE H.C.'s STEAMER "AJDAH," which took the English mail of the 25th ult., returned to Bombay on the evening of the 13th inst., without having reached Aden. The cause of her having put back is stated to have been want of coal. She ran to within 707 miles of Aden and in lat. 80° 3' N. and long. 53° 30' E., being then 337 miles from Cape Guardafui, was forced to return owing to her fuel being nearly expended. We have purposely abstained from all allusion to the inquiry in reference to the unfortunate return of the Ajdaha until the results were officially made known,—as it seems eminently unfair to an officer already suffering sufficiently from feeling himself in a position to require his conduct to be inquired into, that the usual gossip on the matter should be prematurely taken up by the press. The report of the committee has been sent in to Government, and the remarks of the authorities on the subject received. Commander Barker is considered to have been guilty of a grave error in judgment in not having persevered in his voyage; his previous services, character, and long experience, stand in the way of a more severe rebuke. The return of the ship on her way with the mails, with 100 tons of coal on board, does seem incomprehensible enough, considering the light in which the matter has hitherto appeared; but then we have no right, and in this case no inclination, to give judgment without evidence, and all that we know are the two results, that the steamer did return, and that the committee and Government considered that a deficiency of judgment was exhibited.—Times, July 23.

MR. ALEXANDER SUTHERLAND, merchant, who died here on the 3rd July, was for some time a member of the firm of George Pollexfen and Co., and had of late carried on business on his own account. He at one time acted as secretary to the Chamber of Commerce. A more unassuming man never lived, and his death will be regretted by many.—Times.

MR. JOHN HOLLAND, barrister, who died at the residence of Major Swanson, on the 12th inst., came to Bombay in 1842, and very speedily secured a fair share of practice. He held the office of sheriff in 1845 and again in 1847, both being lucky years, and was at one time believed to have had the offer of the chief judgeship of the Small Cause Court. He was a man of good talents and very considerable attainments. He leaves behind him a young widow and family, now in England. This is the fourth member of the Bombay bar we have lost within these six years.—Times, July 23.

THE BAR.—By the elevation of Mr. Crawford to the bench of the Small Cause Court, and the death of Mr. Holland, the number of barristers now practising before the Supreme Court is reduced to four—the Advocate-General (Mr. Le Messurier), and Messrs. Howard, Dickenson, and Jenkins; and one of these is said to be on the wing for Europe with a fortune. We have not been anything like so short of a supply of pleaders for more than a dozen years, and hope the commonwealth may take no harm from the want.—Ibid.

THE COMMERCIAL BANK has declared a dividend for the past six months at the rate of seven per cent. per annum. The total net profits of the half year amount to Rs. 1,48,648, of which Rs. 28,178, or nearly a fifth, have been carried to the reserve fund account.

THE ORIENTAL BANK has declared a dividend at the rate of 8 per cent. per annum.

THE ABSURD RUMOUR, which gained credence at Kurrachee, and was believed in by many natives not at all generally informed, relative to us Christians requiring a number of human sacrifices to offer up to the Deity for the success of our new church, is now dying away: while it was current, hardly a native was to be seen out after nightfall, and any that were forced to be out during darkness, carried large clubs to protect themselves with. To such a length did the popular delusion run, that the commissioner issued a proclamation setting forth its absurdity, and promising punishment to any person circulating the report.—Times, July 23.

GOLD IN THE MAHARATTA COUNTRY.—Lieut. Aytoun, recently appointed to make a geological survey of the southern Marhatta country, has reported that at certain spots in the vicinity of Belgaum, gold can be found, and that it is not unlikely in abundance too, the soil being of that description peculiar to golden regions.—Telegraph, July 24.

CEYLON.

SINGULAR DISEASE IN NEWERA ELLIA.—We hear of a most extraordinary attack which had seized on many at this station. The disease, it is said, partakes of the nature of a severe cholera, prostrating the strength in a very short time. The patients attacked became black and livid about the gums soon after seizure. Several deaths have occurred, and some of those attacked have had a recurrence of the symptoms, in one or two cases ending in paralysis. The troops here, we hear, been moved out of the plains, to avoid the effects of this extraordinary ailment. The symptoms are so extraordinary, that the general impression was that poison had been extensively used. Several samples of food were examined, but nothing inimical to health was found in them.—Ceylon Times, June 4.

SIAM.

From Siam we have news that the king had been gathered to his fathers and buried, or rather burnt, with due honours. His successor commenced his reign in a most promising manner, by ordering several improvements in the regulation of the foreign trade, and has recognised the advantages of the acquirements of civilised life by recommending his nobles to send their children to Singapore for their education.

SINGAPORE.

From the published annual accounts of Singapore, that colony appears to be in a highly prosperous state: the balance in hand in the treasury was not so great as in the former year, owing to increased expenditure; but the arrivals and departures of shipping had increased to a great extent during the past official year. A number of petty piracies on native craft were reported. The ship Blanche had been lost on her voyage from Singapore to China. The captain and the greater part of the crew succeeded in reaching land in safety, after undergoing great hardship, the party having been cooped up in a leaky boat for six days, without any water to drink.

SANDWICH ISLANDS.

Advices from these islands reach to the 1st of May. The parliament had been opened on the 13th of April, and the king's speech stated that the relations of the islands with all foreign powers, excepting France, continued to be of the most friendly character. The conclusion of the new treaty with Great Britain was referred to, and it was intimated that authority had been given to Mr. Barclay, the representative of the islands in this country, to negotiate a similar one with Belgium. With regard to the threatened invasion of private adventurers from California, an acknowledgment was made of the prompt measures of the American commissioner at Honolulu, who caused protection to be given by the United States' ship Vandalia. The creation of a military force, however, was recommended. His Majesty announced that it was the desire of the Government to carry on affairs so that no one could expect to benefit himself by any political change, and that the new constitution recommended by a committee last year, in place of the original one granted in 1840, would receive his sanction if it were deemed expedient by the representatives. This constitution had subsequently been the chief subject of discussion, and was likely to be adopted, with some amendments. The Government wished to assimilate it as much as possible to that of England, particularly as regarded the king's prerogatives. The annual reports of the various ministers gave satisfactory evidence of the progress of the islands. The report of the Minister of the Interior stated that the number of foreigners who had taken the oath of allegiance to the king during the past year was 130, of whom 66 were natives of the United States, 31 of Great Britain, 15 of China, and 18 of other countries. The post-office returns showed the total of foreign letters received and despatched to have been 24,787, of which 15,287 were to and from the United States. The total of domestic letters passing between the several islands had been 31,050. On the subject of steam-navigation, it appears that a contract was made last year with parties at San Francisco for a line of inter-island steamers, but that the vessel first sent was found unsuitable, and an extension of time had since been granted. Privileges were also conceded in February and March last for one line of steamers between San Francisco and the islands, and another between the islands and China. In relation to the protection of the kingdom, the report of the Secretary-at-War shows that, at the time of the apprehended attack from California, the raising of a militia of 5,100 men was proposed, but that a smaller, although more expensive, force was ultimately adopted. It was now recommended that the force should be continued. Situated in the midst of the Pacific, in the highway of all its most important traffic, and yet remote from the squadrons of friendly nations, the islands, it is contended, are singularly exposed to the attacks of pirates, and to predatory expeditions, consisting of the scum of all nations, such as that which had been organized at San Francisco. As regards the dispute with France, the Minister of Foreign Relations points out that, in conformity with the notice given by the Hawaiian Government, the commercial treaty with that country expired on the 15th of March last. Until some communication should be received, however, it was not proposed to act upon that circumstance. The report of the Minister of Instruction showed the number of free-schools to be 535, of which 431 were Protestants and 104 Roman Catholic, the number of scholars being, respectively, 12,976 and 2,506. The number of marriages during the year had been 1,771, of which 1,284 were Protestants, 381 Roman Catholics, and 6 Mormons. The returns of births and deaths were imperfect; but, so far as they are presented, they show a continuance of that gradual decay of the native race which no care seems able to arrest, the births ascertained being only 2,424, while the deaths were 5,792.

“Native convicts, that go from Bombay to Singapore with a trifle of money in their pockets,” says the Bombay Gazette, “appear to get on uncommonly well. A gentleman who recently went from this quarter to that—not at the public expense—was making some inquiries about another gentleman who did, to wit Mr. Dorabjee Hormusjee, the robber of the Oriental Bank. He learned that Dorabjee was riding about in a palkee gharee. For a punishment, this must be admitted to be rather light.”

An enormous sword-fish, weighing upwards of 800 lbs., was lately captured by an inhabitant of St. Thomé (Madras), between the bar of Edyra and that of the former. The monster, when brought out on the strand, measured 23 feet in length, 10 feet in circumference, and when laid on the beach, nearly 4 feet high.

IRON PAPER.—At the Prussian Industrial Exhibition, Count Renard, a large proprietor of ironworks, exhibited sheet iron of such a degree of tenuity that the leaves can be used for paper. A bookbinder of Breslau has made an album of nothing else, the pages of which turn as flexibly as the finest fabric of linen rags.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Dr. Buist, in a paper communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal, on certain ancient sculptures found in Scotland, has endeavoured, with some success, to found upon them evidence of a relationship between Oriental and Hyberborean antiquities. For the sake of distinction, he terms the northern remains "Runic stones," though he is satisfied that they have no connection whatever with the Danes, or any other modern European nation.

"Runic stones," he observes, "are unknown in the continent of Europe, and are not to be found in any part of England or of Wales, or in the southern counties of Scotland; the Ruthell stone belongs to a very recent period in comparison, and I am not aware of any of them being found to the south of the Forth and Clyde. There are five or six in different parts of Fifeshire, the St. Andrew's stone coffin being one of the most interesting in existence; they abound in Forfarshire, and in the south-eastern portion of Perthshire; they abound in Aberdeen and Ross-shires, or generally over the region chiefly known as Pictland. There are abundance of Danish crosses in Man, with Celtic crosses in the Hebrides and western highlands, bearing a close general resemblance to those about to be described, but sufficiently distinguishable from them to any one who has studied the characteristic feature of Runic stones." These monuments, he is of opinion, "came into existence more than two thousand years ago, and were meant, in many cases, to represent Oriental animals or objects, being sculptured at a time when there was some traditional or actual connection betwixt this portion of Great Britain and the East, which had ceased to exist long before the Norman invasion."

"The monuments under consideration are generally single oblong blocks of stone, of from three to eighteen feet in length, and from one to fifteen in breadth, mostly in the form of the grave-stones in country churchyards. They for the most part have a cross, of the form commonly called the Cross of Calvary, sculptured on them; in many cases, they are fashioned in the form of a cross. There is no single instance in which a crucifixion is represented, or in which the cross is provided with the tablet at top, always found in the crosses seen in Catholic churches for the superscription of 'King of the Jews.' The arms of the cross are almost always united by a richly-sculptured circle or ring, and the shaft and limbs are covered with most elaborate sculptures." The cross, he adds, is not an eminently Christian symbol, it being often found in Oriental sculptures; and he gives the outline of "a cross very much resembling those of the Scottish monuments, copied from the vestment of a Coptic priest, now in the British Museum, and believed to belong to a date 600 B. C. at least, together with a cruciform ornament, of which there are abundance of examples on the catacombs recently opened near Alexandria, and at least 2,000 years old."

"Sometimes Runic stones are found as sculptured slabs; in one case, a set of them have obviously formed a stone coffin: there are probably about 200 of them still in existence betwixt Edinburgh and Caithness. By far the largest and most magnificent is Suenos pillar, in Murrayshire, of which, so far as I know, there is no correct or trustworthy representation in existence! The merely ornamental portions of the sculptures consist of the most elaborate tracery, in which the interlacement of serpents and lizards, or monstrous creatures betwixt the two, are prevalent. Several favourite Egyptian ornaments make their appearance, and though the workmanship be rude in the last degree, the sculptor having obviously begun without a drawing, or without so much as outlining the design meant to be engraven, as may be seen from the way in which the figures are distorted and crammed together at the place last finished, it is clear the conception of the original designer was an able and an elegant one. The pictorial part of the sculpture consists of the representation of deer-hunts, where we have the great bloodhounds pulling down the deer, with all varieties of lesser dogs; trumpeters, and bowmen, and spearmen, on foot, and richly-attired riders on horseback; of religious or other processions of men, with arms or branches in their hands, and so forth, of the same general character as that of the far-famed Nimroud obelisk, though of infinitely inferior execution; of warlike encounters, where we have, on the Aberlemno stone, in Mr. Chalmers's collection for example, horsemen charging a phalanx of foot soldiers, where the front and second rank men stand with presented spears, the third rank having theirs erect, ready to be used should the enemy burst through the foremost ranks. On several stones we have the representation of a bard playing on a harp, and on several others an encounter betwixt men and animals. In three cases a man is represented tearing open the jaws of a creature like a wolf or lion.

"By far the most interesting sculpture I have had the fortune to examine (Suenos pillar I have never seen) is that on the St. Andrew's stone coffin, the character of which I was the first to point out. I had the pieces, which were in the act of being carried away piecemeal, collected and arranged together, and got a cast in plaster made of the whole in 1839, for the County Museum in Cupar, then under my charge: a drawing of the principal tablet, furnished by me from an excellent sketch by the Rev. Mr. Lyon, is published in the Pictorial History of England. You will find a drawing of it in the MS. volume, with a bad lithograph in the Bombay Transactions. At the one end is represented a man in rich flowing garments, and with a full-bottomed wig, showing a rich belt and ornamented sword-sheath, tearing open the jaws of a lion: the character of the animal is clearly brought out by his short snout, his mane, and tuft at the end of his tail. The wig, the belt, and the sword-sheath, closely resemble those of the figures on the Assyrian marbles. Further on is a dog-like quadruped, with wings, pouncing on a deer, and then a huntsman with a spear in his right hand, and a small ornamented shield in his left arm: three greyhounds, what seems a wolf or fox, with a couple of deer, are before him. In the corner above these are some other dogs and deer, with bad representations of two monkeys. On the upper and middle portion of the stone is a man on horseback: he is richly attired, wears a full-bottomed wig, and his sword-sheath, seen from under his mantle, is richly and elaborately sculptured. On his left wrist he holds a hawk; a lion, in this case represented with considerable fidelity and spirit, has sprung on the neck of his horse, the attack being much more coolly received than such things are in modern times.

"When the circumstances in which this monument was found are considered, there can remain no doubt of its very great antiquity. From the time the cathedral of St. Andrew's was destroyed at the Reformation, the roof was, unless in so far as it supplied building-stones, suffered to remain where it fell until 1826, when it was cleared away down to the floor. In 1833, a grave was dug deeper than the foundations of the cathedral itself, six or eight feet lower than the floor, and here the stone coffin was found, in separate pieces, and not as if remaining where it had been originally placed, the richness of the sculpture clearly indicating that it was meant to be a sarcophagus for exhibition above ground. We are thus at once carried back to the twelfth century, at latest,—an age to which it could not have belonged, Scotland, from this time back, so far as history extends, being in a state of the utmost barbarism. Yet here we have a series of representations most obviously Oriental—the elaborately curled wig and massy sword-sheath of Old Assyria—the lion and the monkey of tropical climates! How came they to be represented on a Scottish monument at all?

"On many of the Runic stones, again, there is the figure of a strange, flapping-eared, long-snouted animal, which I have no doubt represents an elephant: it is not at all like the animal itself, it is true, though it is like no other in creation, but it very closely resembles the figures of it I find in the Bombay bazar. You will find on the Aberlemno stone two winged figures, and two others on the Essie stone; one of these being defaced, so as not to show the bird's face in the lithographs. If you will turn to my sketch-book, you will find a drawing, made about twenty-five years ago, when the stone was more entire than when Mr. Chalmers saw it, in which one of these is represented as with a human figure, with an eagle's wings, head, and beak; in fact, it might pass for a rude copy of one of Mr. Layard's Assyrian drawings, as might the other winged figures just referred to for some of his other drawings. Surely, coincidences such as these can neither be fanciful nor accidental."

Dr. Buist notices certain remarkable symbols, of an Eastern character, which occur on nearly all these stones, and he concludes that "the frequency of the occurrence of Oriental figures is reason enough for assuming a connection betwixt these singular monuments and the East, of what nature or amount cannot be determined; the cross gives them the only claim to an origin within the Christian era; and then this is destroyed by the absence of all the usual crucifixion peculiarities of the symbol, as used by Christians, while the embellishment of the cross was frequently to be met with before the introduction of Christianity."

Raja Rádhákánta Deb, of Calcutta, has completed the seventh and last volume of the Saddakalpadruma,—the product of the unintermitted labour of more than a quarter of a century.

By a Parliamentary Paper it is shown that, on the several establishments of the East-India Company in England, there are 514 persons, whose salaries and allowances amount to 121,817l. a-year.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

WEDNESDAY, September 1, 1852.

WE recur so often to topics connected with our colonies, because the subject, regarded in all its bearings, is, we believe, of great and even paramount importance. In foreign politics, at the present moment, the American fishery dispute, and the Caffre war; in matters of domestic concern, free trade, and the fate of the Ministry, may seem to invite more immediate attention; but the colonial question, embracing imperial as well as colonial objects, is so knit up with the political, commercial, and social interests of the whole empire, and must exert so direct an influence upon its future condition, that it cannot be too frequently or too anxiously considered.

The unexpected development of the metallic wealth of Australia has, in its immediate and collateral results, attracted thither shoals of emigrants from England, Scotland, and Ireland. The mighty influx of free settlers in the British colonies planted there will quickly, as in California, diffuse a civilized population over the now vacant territory, giving rapid birth to cities and towns, with all their civil incidents and institutions. Such a society would revolt at the idea of receiving our convicts, the want of free labourers having alone reconciled the colonists heretofore to the moral evils attending the transportation thither of criminals from the mother country. In these circumstances, pregnant as they are with elements of good, may not dimly be discerned the germs of evil, its invariable accompaniments.

The commercial consequences to which the sudden and apparently inexhaustible supply of gold, so easily obtained, must eventually lead, cannot yet be calculated with any degree of certainty, the subject being of a very complicated nature. That the accumulation of this metal, if continued for a few years only, even at its present rate, must work a revolution in our monetary systems, no one can reasonably doubt. The gold-market is not subject to the same conditions as that of corn, or cotton: these articles are speedily consumed, and their production is regulated by the demand. Gold, however, is primarily a commodity, and has been used as a circulating medium chiefly on account of its rarity, the steadiness of its supply, and the consequent comparative uniformity of its price; and if these attributes, or rather accidents, cease to belong to it, gold is no longer suitable for a metallic standard. But this is a matter quite within the scope of ordinary legislation, and in considering the balance of the good and evil springing from the metallic treasures discovered in the Australian colonies, we leave this part of the question out of view.

The impulse given thereby to emigration thither from the United Kingdom is a far more important and interesting portion. Hitherto, in spite of the want of labourers in Australia and their redundancy at home, the stream of emigration from hence has been scanty; it now flows in a continuous tide, comprehending all classes and denominations,—capitalists, barristers, artists, farmers, needlewomen, ploughmen, domestic servants, and a pretty large infusion of non-descripts. Were the inducements to emigration the ordinary ones,—want of labourers and high wages in one country and the reverse in the other,—the balance would be pretty well preserved by that reciprocal action which keeps all markets in an equal and healthy state; but where the real motive for the change of country is an extraordinary one,—the auri fames,—as this incentive is governed by no regulating principle, there is a danger, that whilst the wilds of Australia are peopled, and the seeds of a new British empire are sown at the antipodes, Britain itself may be denuded of its industrious classes.

Various causes have tended of late years to make the supply of labour in this country exceed the demand. The diminution of the rate of mortality, especially amongst the poor, has co-operated with the substitution of machinery for manual toil, in curtailing the means of employment. This fact, which a narrow view of the subject would regard as an evil, should be looked at as one of the means devised by Providence for distributing the human family over the surface of the planet they are destined to cultivate. But if a peculiar attraction, like that of the gold-diggings, should withdraw from the mother country more than the excess of its population, draining it of the industrious portion, there would be ground for very serious alarm. Let machinery attain the highest possible degree of perfection, there must still remain, not only in our fields and our houses, but even in our factories and dockyards,—to say nothing of the army and navy,—operations which can be performed only by human sinews.

Symptoms of this condition of things are already manifest in the dearth of labour at the harvest operations of this year, even in Dorsetshire, where 3s. 6d. a day has been given. "There is one peculiar feature in the present harvest worthy of note," observes a recent agricultural report; "namely, a general want of labourers: for the last half-century, there has not been so great a scarcity of labour as at the present time." This scarcity is attributed in the report partly to the increase of emigration, and partly to the abundance of employment,—that is, the demand for labour,—in the manufacturing districts, arising probably from the same cause.

This is not a mere imperial part of the question;—it equally concerns our colonies, none of which can be said to be yet in a condition to dispense with the aid of the mother country, to whose prosperity they cannot, therefore, be indifferent. Nor is it for the direct interest of the Australian settlements, that the rate of immigration thither should outstrip the formation of those institutions which are indispensable to the orderly management of large societies, and which are of slow growth. In California, it is true, cities are said to rise like fairy structures; but, with all the advantages which the Americans possess in the stereotyped patterns of their home institutions, there are social evils in the Californian state, resulting from its hasty formation, which it will require many years to eradicate.

Then the accelerated expansion of the Australian colonies, by the impulse given to emigration thither from all parts of the world, of all classes, must hasten the period when they shall desire to be emancipated from dependence upon England. That this period must come, it would be unreasonable to doubt. How far, and in what manner, the interests of the mother country will be affected by the divorce, is a question which experience alone can determine. The cost of protection will be saved by a dissolution of the bond, and we shall escape incentives to dispute with other nations in relation to colonial rights and pretensions.

There is another topic,—and it is the last to which we shall at present advert,—connected with the gold discoveries in Australia, which concerns the colonies immediately and the mother country but remotely, so far as it must sympathize with the condition of its dependencies. The present effect of those discoveries is to detach the colonial population, as well as the emigrants, from all pursuits but that of gold-finding; to withdraw shepherds and farm-labourers, clerks and domestic servants, shopkeepers and policemen, artificers and mariners, from their proper occupations, and to concentrate them at the diggings. A recent letter from Adelaide states that “trade is at an end, and the town deserted, not more than 100 men being left in the colony.” The complaints of the scarcity of labour at all the Australian colonies are said to be daily increasing, and the desertion of ships both at Sydney and Port Phillip was severely felt. Ladies are obliged to scrub their own floors, and cook their own dinners; Chinese men are employed as nursery-maids; even the dignitaries at the several colonial capitals, we find, are obliged to perform menial offices for themselves. This state of things must retard the prosperity of the colonies, and, if prolonged, will inflict serious mischief upon their trade and agriculture. Nor is it easy to provide a remedy. So long as men are allured by the prospect of being able to pick up gold, the highest wages will fail to reconcile the great bulk of them to ordinary labour. The very uncertainty attending the operation has its attractions. The chance of either finding a “nugget,” or of groping in sand and water for nothing, invests the mining speculation with the attractions of a lottery. Meanwhile, the flocks which supply the shipments of wool will roam in the wilderness, and the crops rot on the ground, leaving the gold-seekers dependent upon other countries for their sustenance. These are no groundless conjectures or prognostications. Every arrival from Australia informs us of the injury which its material interests are suffering from the new direction given to employment. It tells us, too, of the demoralization which is tainting the huge population assembled at the mines, where rapacity is exhibited in every form. A letter from Sydney says, “The Victoria diggings have attracted an immense population from Sydney, Van Diemen’s Land, and South Australia, of which a very considerable proportion are convicts.” The ease and rapidity with which wealth is sometimes accumulated there, are more than counterbalanced by the danger to which it exposes the possessor, who can snatch only a hasty and feverish sleep, with pistols under his pillow, his life and his property being in hourly peril from the miscreants who prowl about the camp.

In the Times of August 23 appears a letter, purporting to have been written by a native of India, signed “Guneish Sewaree,” and dated from Cawnpore. The avowed object of the writer is to secure for his countrymen (assuming the letter to be genuine) some share, in the approaching “arrangements for the future government of India,” of the “appointments in the covenanted civil and military services maintained for the government of the country.” He alleges that “the principal cause of the dislike entertained by the higher classes of natives against the British rule is their exclusion from the covenanted services,” and he proposes that the services, civil and military, “be open to all her Majesty’s subjects, both in Great Britain and India, including the natives of the latter country, without reference to religion, descent, or colour.” Amongst the reasons urged by him for making this concession is one which, if the writer be really a native of India, furnishes the strongest argument he could employ against it, namely, that the granting this privilege to the people of India “will do more for their conversion to Christianity than has hitherto been done by the united efforts of the Government of India, and of all the missionaries who have come out to this country.”

The proposal to admit natives of India, in their present condition, indiscriminately, to such a direct participation in the government of the country as must be the necessary consequence of this concession, and is, indeed, the manifest aim of the proposer, involves very serious questions, religious and moral as well as political. Natives of India are not, we believe, at present disqualified, eo nomine, to hold such offices by distinct enactment of law; it is a question of expediency, within the discretion of the governing bodies, whether such appointments shall be confined exclusively to Europeans; and in the course of time, when certain changes shall have prepared the native community for the trust, this practical disability will no doubt be gradually removed.

Natives of India are, however, subjected to disqualifications which, as they do not rest upon the same ground as that of the cases just referred to, seem to be altogether unjustifiable. It appears from a case which recently occurred in the Supreme Court at Bombay, reported in our present issue, that a native of India, however well qualified in all essential respects, cannot be admitted to practise as an attorney in the Queen’s Courts in that country, simply because he is a native. He may be a vakeel, or advocate, in the Mofussil Courts; he may hold her Majesty’s commission as a justice of the peace; he may be nominated a police magistrate; nay, he may be a judge in the Company’s Courts, to which Europeans as well as natives are amenable, and where, according to Sir James Hogg, ninety-nine per cent. of the judicial decisions are by natives,—but he must not be an attorney in a Queen’s Court; in which character he would be merely an intermediate agent between his own countrymen and the European advocates, and apparently the fittest that could be chosen. Here is no question of Government policy. If an attorney could exert any dangerous political influence, he might do it more effectually in a Mofussil Court than in tribunals where his actions would be watched with vigilance and jealousy.

The Chief Justice, in refusing the application, seems to have been somewhat perplexed to find an adequate reason for his decision. He suggests that the applicant might proceed to England, be admitted an attorney here, and on his return to India his application could not be refused. But wherefore all this delay and expense? The real ground of disqualification is to be discovered probably in the fact that the admission of native attorneys would interfere with the interests of the European part of the profession. That it would reduce the scale of fees, divert a large portion of the practice in the Supreme Courts into another channel, and perhaps, for a time, lower the character of the practitioners, may be apprehended. But none of these objections can be listened to as reasons for an exclusion which is unjust not only to the parties seeking admission as attorneys, but to the people of India, who might prefer a Hindu to a European agent for the management of their litigation, to which they attach a prodigious importance.

It is these species of exclusion, rather than their non-participation in the office of government, that are calculated to inspire the natives of India with dislike to our rule. A well-conducted and sensible Hindu,—and this is the class from whence alone the covenanted servants could be taken,—cannot but discern, however he might undervalue, the reasons that would disincline a Christian Government to intrust the administration of its functions to its native subjects, divided as they are by strong religious and national antipathies, not only from their rulers, but amongst themselves; but he will attribute such practical disabilities as that we have been considering not to policy, but to selfishness; not to an excess of that caution which concerns the general weal, but to a desire to establish a hateful barrier, by which race and colour are confounded with crime and degradation. Not long ago* we noticed an outcry at Madras against the native traders at that presidency, because they were treading upon the heels of their European competitors!

These and all other distinctions, that keep alive in native minds any sense of inferiority, should be got rid of; their natural tendency is to maintain a separation which is subversive of justice on one hand, and confidence on the other.

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

THE BURMESE WAR.

(From the London Gazette, Aug. 20.)

India Board, Aug. 20, 1852.

The following despatches have been received at the East-India House:—

Lieut. General H. Godwin, C.B., commanding the Forces in Ava, Arracan, and Tenasserim Provinces, to C. H. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

Head-quarters, Rangoon, June 9, 1852.

(Extract.) I have the honour to report, for the information of Government, that, on the morning of the 26th of May, Martaban was attacked by a Burmese force of 1,000 or 1,200 men, which was gallantly beaten back by the 49th Madras N.I., in garrison there, under the command of Major Hall. The operations are reported to me as follows:—

At about half-past six A.M. of the 26th of May, the pickets at Martaban were fired on in a desultory manner by the enemy for upwards of an hour, when a strong skirmishing party, led by Capt. Stewart, sufficed to dislodge them. Our loss has been very trifling; 1 private killed, and 1 subadar, 1 naick, and 11 privates wounded.

During the day, a party was sent out by the officer commanding to scour the country around; but they met with no opposition, and the place had been unmolested up to the time of the last report. On the opening of the fire of our guns, the steam-frigate Feroze, which had 200 men of the 51st Light Infantry on board, landed part of them at Martaban, to aid in the defence of the place, and the remainder proceeded in boats up the river, and took the enemy in reverse, and caused them considerable loss.

The troops appear to have behaved very well, and the exertions of Major Hall, who commanded the post; of Captains Richards and Stewart, of the 49th Madras N.I., who commanded the party that went to scour the country; and of Lieut. Purvis, who commanded the artillery, were very meritorious. Capt. Lynch, and the troops on board the Feroze, under Capt.

Anderson, were as usual prompt, and the good judgment displayed by the former officer tended to the complete confusion of the enemy.

I have had excellent accounts from Bassein, of the 31st of May, from Capt. Darroch, whom I left in command of the place, till the arrival of Major Roberts, of the 9th Madras N.I. These are highly creditable to that officer, and to Lieut. Craster, of the Bengal Engineers, and show what a few days' well-directed exertions may do in placing a post in a state of excellent defence. Capt. Darroch further reports that everything is quiet around Bassein; the enemy had left the neighbourhood, and the inhabitants were coming in, in numbers, to seek protection under our rule. The head-men of twenty-six villages had come to tender services, and to bring provisions of all sorts for the troops.

I have also the honour to report, for the information of the Governor-General in Council, the operations of a small expedition which I detached against Pegu on the 3rd inst., under the command of Major Cotton, of the 67th regt. N.I., to co-operate with Capt. Tarleton, of H.M.'s frigate Fox, in driving out a strong force, either from Sitang or Baling, who had taken possession of that city, so lately filled with a friendly population, and where there was a large granary. I enclose Major Cotton's own report of his operations, which show great promptitude, good judgment, and brave conduct, in himself and the troops he commanded. The particulars, as to the conduct of the officers and men, and also the cheerful assistance given by Capt. Tarleton and his naval contingent, I feel assured the Governor-General in Council will appreciate most favourably.

In concluding my despatch, I have only to congratulate the Government on the continued good conduct of its troops, on their excellent health, and perfect state of discipline for any duty they may be called on to perform.

I have, &c.

H. GODWIN, Lieutenant-General.

Major H. Cotton to Capt. Mayhew, Assistant Adjutant-General of the Burmah Field Force.

Rangoon, June 9, 1852.

Sir,—Agreeably to instructions furnished me by Lieut. col. Sturt, commanding 67th regt. N.I., I embarked on board the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon, Capt. Neblett, on the morning of the 3rd inst., in command of a detachment of the strength mentioned in the margin,* to co-operate with Capt. Tarleton, H.M.'s frigate Fox, in command of the naval portion of the expedition, in carrying out the instructions detailed in Lieut. col. Sturt's letter, and I have the honour to make the following report for the information of Lieut. gen. Godwin, C.B., commanding the Burmah field force.

We reached the village Peinkeong the same evening, and anchored; the next morning, the troops were embarked in boats, and we proceeded up the Pegu river. When within a few miles, heavy firing was heard ahead, and from information obtained from the Peguans, I learnt that the enemy were in force on the right bank of the river, opposite the town. I immediately landed my detachment, at half-past nine, A.M., to attack them, and Capt. Tarleton agreed to take the naval force, and co-operate on the right. I shall leave Capt. Tarleton to detail to Commodore Lambert his part of the engagement. I proceeded in skirmishing order with the detachment along the right bank of the river, for nearly two miles, through heavy swamp and jungle, and drove the enemy completely across the river, in the direction of the Great Pagoda; when, hearing heavy firing from the direction of the boats, I returned to render my aid to Capt. Tarleton. I found, on crossing the river, he had had a smart engagement with the enemy, and repelled an attack made by them on the boats, and I was much gratified to hear from Capt. Tarleton of the admirable conduct of a section of the rifle company, 67th regt. N.I., present at it, under the command of Capt. E. W. Hicks. The men were by this time (one o'clock) much fatigued, and I resolved to remain for a couple of hours, and then proceed to attack the Great Pagoda, whither the enemy had been seen to retreat, having arranged with Capt. Tarleton that he should guard the boats with a party of Peguans.

We had not, however, rested very long, when a report was brought from the picket that the Burmese were coming down upon us in great numbers from the pagoda. I went down and ascertained that such was the case; that they were coming down in skirmishing order, I should say at least 1,000 men, and amongst them 30 or 40 were mounted upon ponies. I could plainly discern their leader from his dress and gold chattach. I immediately got my party under arms in extended order, Captains Tarleton and Neblett, the former with 30 and the latter with 20 seamen, joining. When the enemy had got well across the plain, in extent about three quarters of a mile, consisting of rice-fields partially covered with water, I advanced with the whole detachment, and after a smart fire, drove them into the jungle which surrounds the pagoda. I then formed my detachment into column of sections, and, steadily advancing, stormed the south gate with the 80th and sappers, while the rifles, under Capt. Hicks, extended to the left, and rushed in at the west gate. So sudden was the assault, that the enemy had not time to fire their guns, which were found loaded, and covering the entrances to the gates. At the west gate were four guns, two brass and two iron, and at the south gate two guns and two jingals. We drove the enemy through the pagoda, and succeeded in killing and wounding a number of them as they retreated down the gateway. It was impossible to pursue them, as the men were much knocked up, having been under arms since one o'clock in the morning, and all overcome by the excessive heat and fatigue encountered during the day.

I am happy to say that no soldier was killed, and only two sepoys and one dooley-bearer wounded: this small loss is to be attributed to the fact that the enemy, for the most part, fired too high.

My detachment occupied the pagoda during our stay, and I employed the time in carrying out the wishes of the Lieutenant-General in destroying some parts of the fortifications surrounding the pagoda; this was done by Lieut. Mayne, field engineer, whose report I beg leave to attach.

In the town, on the river side, there was a great quantity of rice, which I permitted the Peguers to carry away in boats. Surrounding the pagoda there is also another town, in which much rice was found; this I caused to be burnt, after allowing the inhabitants to carry away as much as they could.

The co-operation of the naval force under Capt. Tarleton, H.M.S. Fox, and under Capt. Neblett, E.I. Co.'s ship Phlegethon, was most active and efficient, and I would beg my most sincere thanks and congratulations for success should be conveyed to them, officers and men, through the proper channel. Before concluding this report, I hope I may be permitted to mention my admiration at the gallantry displayed by all comprising my detachment, including the naval parties, officers and men. The union, cordiality, and good feeling which existed, are beyond all praise, and not a single complaint was made against any one during the whole time. I beg to notice, for the information of the Lieutenant-General, Capt. Ormsby, commanding a company of H.M.'s 80th, and Lieut. Amiel and Fraser, of the same regiment, and Dr. McKellar, East-India Company's service, in medical charge, who, in addition to his other duties, displayed great humanity in attending to the wounded Burmese; Lieut. Mackintosh, 52nd regt. M.N.I.; Second-Lieut. Mayne, assistant field engineer, who entered the pagoda with the Sappers and 80th, and Capt. Hicks, commanding rifle company, 67th regt. N.I.; Lieut. Clarke and Ens. Thompson, of the 67th regt.; all of whom rendered me the greatest assistance, and with whose conduct I was much pleased. I left Pegu, at twelve o'clock A.M. on Saturday last, with my detachment in progress to Rangoon, and

I have, &c.

Commodore G. R. Lambert, R.N., H.M.'s ship Fox, to the Secretary to the Government of India.

Rangoon, June 8, 1852.

Sir,—The Lieutenant-General commanding having expressed his wish that a military and naval force should make an attack upon the city of Pegu, I therefore sent Commander Tarleton, with the boats of H.M.'s ship Fox and the East-India Company's steam-vessel Phlegethon, to perform this service, in conjunction with 230 troops, under the command of Major Cotton, and I have the honour to request you may be pleased to lay Commander Tarleton's report of proceedings before the Governor-General.

I enclose a list of killed and wounded in the naval force.

I have, &c.

G. R. LAMBERT, Commodore.

Commander Tarleton, R.N., to Commodore G. R. Lambert, R.N., commanding the Naval Forces at Rangoon.

H.M.'s ship Fox, Rangoon, June 8, 1852.

Sir,—I have the honour to inform you that, in pursuance of your orders, I proceeded on the morning, 3rd inst., with the boats expressed in the margin,* to the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon, which vessel having embarked 98 men, Bengal N.I. rifle company, Major Cotton commanding detachment; 100 men, H.M.'s 80th regt., Capt. Ormsby; 30 men, sappers and miners of the Madras division, Lieut. Macintosh; Lieut. Mayne, assistant engineer; Capt. Latter, interpreter to the Lieutenant-General commanding the forces, also accompanied us.

We proceeded up the Pegu river, as far as the village of Peinkeong, which we reached a little before 8 P.M. it being then high water. The stream becoming extremely narrow and shallow at this point, I did not deem it prudent to ascend it further, and therefore arranged with Major Cotton for proceeding with his detachment in the boats, on the next flood tide, which I looked for about two A.M., but the ebb ran for 9½ hours, so that we could not leave the steamer before 5.30 A.M. on the 4th. At Peinkeong, Capt. Latter obtained information that a large number of Peguers had put themselves under the direction of one of their countrymen named Mougta; that they had assembled on the right bank of the river, where the day previous they had been engaged with a body of men under Moungyawik, the Birman governor of Pegu. By the villagers' account, the latter had been worsted, and had retired in the direction of Zangauain, situated on the river bank, immediately opposite Pegu. When within about five miles of this place, the chief, Mougta, came off to the boats, and confirmed the reports which had been previously received: his force, consisting of about 1,500 men (imperfectly armed), lined the right bank of the river, and advanced with the boats. From his communication with Mougta, Capt. Latter was satisfied that the enemy's chief strength lay on the right bank. Major Cotton therefore decided on landing his detachment on that side, while I proceeded with the boats (as soon as the men were disembarked), to co-operate on his right flank. The river at this point is not more than sixty yards wide: the present village of Pegu stands on the left bank, which is steep and muddy below high water-mark. About a quarter of a mile, in the rear of the houses, there is a broad ditch, the bottom of which, at this season, is a swamp; it runs along the west face of the old wall of Pegu, for the distance of two or three miles; the wall has been originally built of brick, and the top (which may be twenty feet above the bottom of the ditch) is now covered with jungle. The village of Zangauain, as I before mentioned, stands immediately opposite; it possesses a small pagoda, and is surrounded by a low growth of jungle.

I had proceeded a short distance in the boats, when a sharp fire of musketry was opened upon us from the Pegu side. Feeling the disadvantage we laboured under by being underneath the enemy's fire, with no effectual means of returning it, I at once landed with the boats' crews of H.M.'s ship Fox, and was shortly after joined by Capt. Neblett and boats' crews of the Phlegethon (see margin),† in all about 50 men. The Burmese fired upon us as we advanced, but were driven from point to point until completely broken; one party retreating by the river's side to the northward, and the other within the old wall before mentioned. Our object being attained, I was retiring in close order to the boats, when a fire of gingals and musketry was opened upon us from the walls. Deeming it unwise to permit the Burmese to suppose we had retreated from them, I instantly engaged a native guide to show us the causeway through the ditch, and then advanced to the attack. We halted a few seconds to gain breath, under shelter of an old house; then rushed in over the causeway, and through a breach to the right of the gateway. On getting over the wall we found ourselves among some fine trees, free from underwood; behind these the enemy stood with great resolution, until they were (in many instances), driven out by the bayonet; the defect in their firing was here very observable, as their shot in most cases struck the branches above our heads. We pushed them through to the plain beyond, when they broke and fled, leaving many dead; their number engaged might probably have been 100 men, and they also had a reserve of about 200 more (commanded by officers on horse-back), beyond the reach of musketry. The whole party retired within the Great Pagoda, about a mile and a-half to the eastward. I am glad to say that this service was performed with only one casualty on our side, one man having received a severe sword-cut in a personal encounter.

Information was now brought me that our boats had been attacked by another party of the enemy from the southward; I accordingly hastened down to their relief, and happily found them safe. Mr. McMurdo, mate of H.M.'s ship Fox, who had been left with a few men in charge, reported that a very heavy fire had been opened upon them, to which he had endeavoured to reply with the pinnace's gun and small arm party, but the water was too low to do this with effect, and, having one man killed and two wounded, he judiciously removed the remainder to the right bank, sending an application to Major Cotton for support. A party of rifles returning fortunately met the messenger, and, coming on with all speed, took up a position on the river side, from which they kept up so true and incessant a fire across the water that the enemy were compelled to abandon their attempt, and, on our approach, to retreat. Major Cotton, having overcome all opposition on the opposite side, now crossed over with his detachment.

On a consultation with him, it was determined to wait until 3 p.m. before we should advance to attack the Great Pagoda, the men being absolutely in need of repose after so much fatigue under a burning sun. The rifle company of the 67th was therefore bivouacked in the wood within the wall, H.M.'s 80th regt. on the river face; and the seamen returned to their boats. At 2 p.m. the alarm bugle was sounded, and, on my landing, I discovered that the Burmese had issued from the pagoda in considerable strength, with the evident intention of attacking us. The troops lost not a moment in getting under arms, and the seamen (see detail annexed),* came on shore.

The enemy fell back on our advance, a movement he appeared to have so little expected that many of his men were unable to regain their position in time to defend it, and those who did were so taken by surprise that their fire was ineffectual, and their four guns, which pointed down the steps leading up to the gateway, were found loaded by H.M.'s 80th, who gallantly led the assault; and this naturally strong place was happily carried without a casualty on our side.

I returned with the seamen to the boats, as soon as the pagoda was in our possession; embarked the detachment at noon 30th; on the 6th reached the steamer, at Peinkeong, at 5 p.m.; she weighed on her return at 8 a.m.; on the 7th, at noon, she took the ground, and, as the tide was ebbing, and there was no possibility of her moving for several hours, I ordered the Fox's boats to take the canoe with the camp-followers in tow; I passed them in the gig, and arrived on board H.M.'s ship Fox at 3 a.m. on the 8th.

I have the honour to enclose the following list of casualties:—H.M.'s ship Fox.—3 seamen wounded. E.I.C.'s steamer Phlegethon.—1 seaman killed.

I beg leave to add that the conduct of both officers and men under my orders has been most exemplary, and to represent to you the valuable assistance and co-operation I received on all occasions from Capt. Neblett, commander of the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon.

I have, &c.,

From the London Gazette, Aug. 24.

India Board, Aug. 21, 1852.—The despatch, of which the following is an extract, has been this day received at the East-India House:—

"The Governor-General of India in Council to the Secret Committee.

"June 15, 1852.

"We beg to refer the Committee to the notification of the 5th inst., in which we have publicly expressed our sense of the promptitude, skill, and gallantry displayed by Lieut. gen. Godwin, Commodore Lambert, and all the officers and men engaged in the combined operations against Bassein.

"NOTIFICATION.

"Fort William, June 5, 1852.

"The Governor-General in Council has the gratification of announcing the capture of Bassein, and of publishing for general information the despatches which report the combined operations of the naval and military force by which this service has been executed.

"In ascending for sixty miles a river still very imperfectly known,—in effecting the landing of the troops and capturing the city, the fort, and the stockaded defences on both sides of the river, fully garrisoned and armed,—and in accomplishing all this with very unequal numbers, and within the limits of a single day,—the combined forces at Bassein performed a gallant and spirited service, which well deserves the approbation and applause of the Government of India.

"To Major-gen. Godwin, C.B., and to Commodore Lambert, the Governor-General in Council has again the satisfaction of offering his cordial acknowledgments of the ability and good-will with which they have united their exertions for insuring success to the operations in which they were engaged.

"The Governor-General in Council begs to repeat his thanks to Major Boulderson, deputy judge-advocate-general; to Capt. Latter; to Capt. Chads, aide-de-camp; and to Lieut. Ford, of the Madras Sappers, for their conduct in the field on this occasion. His Lordship in Council desires especially to mark his sense of the services rendered by Major Errington, of H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry, commanding the detachment of troops at Bassein; and to Commander Campbell, of the Indian Navy, by whom the stockade upon the right bank of the river was stormed and taken. To Capt. Rice, Capt. Darroch, and Lieut. Carter, of H.M.'s 51st Light Infantry; to Lieut. Ansley, 9th Madras N.I.; to Lieut. Craster, Bengal Engineers; and to Dr. McCoish, of the medical department, the Governor-General in Council begs leave to convey his best thanks. Equal acknowledgments are due to Lieut. Rice, Royal Navy; to Lieut. Elliott and Lieut. Nightingale, Royal Marines; to Commander Hewett, to Lieut. Robin, and Lieut. Lewis, Indian Navy; and to Capt. Dicey, Capt. Burbank, and Mr. F. Duncan, of the Bengal Marine, whose services have been commended.

"The Governor-General in Council has particular satisfaction in adding the expression of his entire approbation of the gallantry and good conduct of the officers, non-commissioned officers, and men of H.M.'s 51st regt., of the 9th regt. Madras N.I., of the Madras Sappers and Miners, and of the seamen and marines employed in the capture of the city of Bassein.

"By order of the Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council.

"C. ALLEN, officiating secretary to the Government of India."

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 24th August; Mr. J. Baxendale in the chair.

The secretary read the report, which states that the works between Howrah and the Ranunge Collieries continue to progress satisfactorily. To complete and stock this division of the line, some additional capital will be required. The existing contract with the East-India Company provides for raising such capital, and, when the proper time arrives, the option of subscribing it will be given to the then proprietors of the old shares. The surveys between Pundooah and Rajmahal, alluded to in the last report, have been carried to such an extent as to enable Mr. Turnbull, the resident engineer, to report upon the general features of the line, which are highly favourable to the construction of a railway. Mr. Turnbull's report is now before the authorities for consideration, and any arrangements that may be made, founded upon that report, will be announced to the proprietors at the earliest opportunity.

The Chairman moved the adoption of the report, which was carried unanimously.

A Proprietor wished to know in what way it was intended to raise the new capital, and whether it was included in their guarantee. He also wished to know when it would be raised.

The Chairman said, he believed the agreement with the East-India Company would bring the further sum required to complete the railway under the same guarantee. It was not then possible to say when a further sum would be required, as the East-India Company had at present 577,000*l.* in hand. He thought they would have one or two ordinary meetings of the company before the question would come before them. The East-India Company, having so large a sum in hand, were not desirous of increasing the amount. The last call, at their request, was delayed as long as possible.

The Proprietor wished to know whether a meeting would be called to consider Mr. Turnbull's report on the further extension of the line, when it was decided on by the East-India Company to carry out the extension?

The Chairman said, of course, if anything should arise requiring the sanction of the shareholders a meeting would be called. The company could not complete 120 miles of railway without further capital. It was probable that a further sum might be required to complete the railway, amounting to about 250,000*l.*, which was alluded to in the report, and would be in addition to the present capital of 1,000,000*l.* He did not expect that any portion of the line would be opened before the year 1854; and when it was considered that the estimated cost of the line was under 10,000*l.* per mile, it would not be surprising if that sum were exceeded, and in that case they would require above 1,200,000*l.*, being at least 200,000*l.* more than the present capital.

Mr. J. Catley said, whatever the amount of additional capital might be, it would be allotted rateably among the shareholders, and the directors would endeavour to obtain the best terms they could from the East-India Company for the proprietors when the time came for raising the additional capital.

BRIGADIER BEATSON.—The President of the French Republic gave a grand soirée, at the Palace of St. Cloud, on the 16th of August, at which over 3,000 persons were present. The uniforms were very numerous, and among them was one which attracted general and marked attention. It was the full dress of a brigadier of the Nizam's cavalry. The turban of cloth of gold, the dark blue tunic covered over with the richest gold embroidery, the scarlet embroidered vest, and the scarlet and gold embroidered scarf worn round the waist, all looked most gorgeous. The dark basané complexion, the bare throat, and jet black moustache, of the wearer, led every one at first to believe that he was actually a native of some Eastern land. The decoration of the Spanish order of St. Ferdinand reposing modestly on the embroidered breast, showed, however, that he had seen service in other countries than in the East. The officer in question was Brigadier Beatson, an Englishman, who had long served in India. He had distinguished himself in the East on several occasions, particularly in 1844, when he led the Bundelcund Legion, which, though only a local corps, and raised for particular service within certain limits, volunteered to proceed to Seinde and serve there under Sir Charles Napier. Brigadier Beatson served for two years in Spain in the British Legion under Sir de Lacy Evans, his ardour for the active duties of his profession having induced him to apply for leave of absence to that extent. After his two years' service in Spain, where he had been severely wounded, he returned to India, where he continued to serve with the same distinction until very recently. Nothing could surpass the attentions which he, and, indeed, the other foreigners who were present at the ball, received from the French officers of every rank.—Times' Correspondent.

COOLIES IN JAMAICA.—On the 9th of July, the Commissioners of Public Accounts met in Kingston, Jamaica. A communication from the Governor was laid before them, concerning a despatch from Sir John Pakington, in which he complained that the colony had neglected to comply with the terms of the contract made to provide for the return passage to India of such Coolie emigrants as had served in the country for five years. The commissioners expressed their regret at being unable to take action in the matter, and expressed the belief that the question would form one of the first subjects of legislation when the Assembly met.

THE SHIPMENTS OF SPECIE by the Peninsular and Oriental Company's steamer Sultan amount to 173,825*l.*, of which 86,200*l.* is gold for Alexandria, the remainder being silver for Calcutta, Bombay, Madras, and Canton.

CEYLON RAILWAY.—The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 20th of August; Capt. Nairne in the chair. The report stated that the strong feeling in Ceylon in favour of the railway, and other circumstances, had induced the directors to recommend the shareholders to keep up the company for another year. The small balance in hand, after the payment of all liabilities, would enable the directors to maintain the company in its present position for a considerable time. The accounts showed that 2,705*l.* had been received, and 2,691*l.* expended, leaving a balance of 64*l.*, of which 14*l.* was in cash and about 50*l.* in surveying instruments. The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, said the company had been kept in existence in the expectation that something would occur in their favour. The directors, on the present occasion, recommended the shareholders to continue the company for another year, and, as the expenses were only about 4*l.* a year, the funds in hand would enable them to keep up the company in its present state for three years longer. The report was adopted and the retiring directors were re-elected. A conversation ensued, in the course of which it was stated that there was a probability that the island of Ceylon would come into the hands of the East-India Company, and in that case it was believed the line would be made.

COTTON FROM INDIA.—The Court of Directors of the East-India Company have instructed Messrs. Tetley and Son to forward to Mr. Hugh Fleming, secretary of the Manchester Commercial Association, 50 bales of cotton, marked "Tinnevely," and five bales marked "N. O.," received, per Waterloo, from Colombo.

MUCH ADO ABOUT NOTHING.—The New York Herald says there is reason to believe that the Japan expedition has been abandoned.

PASSAGE AND MAIL STEAMER TO AUSTRALIA.—Among the vessels now loading for Port Phillip and Sydney from London and Plymouth is the Cleopatra, a screw steamer, of 1,500 tons and 300 horse-power. She is despatched by private enterprise, and will take passengers at 90, 55, 40, and 25 guineas. The owners of the Cleopatra have concluded a contract with the Post-office for the conveyance of a mail to the Cape of Good Hope, Port Phillip, and Sydney. She will sail from London on the 4th, and from Plymouth on the 7th, September; letters are to be posted on the evening of the 6th.

THE SHIPS OF THE GENERAL SCREW STEAM SHIPPING COMPANY, carrying the mails to and from the Cape of Good Hope, and the mails thence to Madras and Calcutta and back, are to be located at Southampton. The ships intended for the company's services are all new, and are built or building in London; consequently, on each first outward passage they will sail from the Thames, calling at Plymouth as heretofore. In their return, however, each ship will come to Southampton, at which port thereafter all their arrivals and departures will take place.

ENGAGEMENT OF SHIPS.—The Devonshire, for freight of stores to Madras, and the Mary for the like purpose to Bombay.

Per Minden, for Madras, from Gravesend, Aug. 28.—272 Queen's troops, Capt. Wolley, of H.M.'s 51st; Lieut.'s Macartney and Miller, of H.M.'s 15th Hussars; Lieuts. Priestley and Wallace, of H.M.'s 26th; Lieut. Ayton, of H.M.'s 84th; Ensign Acton, of H.M.'s 51st; Ensigns Clarke and Kerr, of H.M.'s 84th; Cornet Macartney, of H.M.'s 15th Hussars; Asst.-Surg. Jas. Ratton.

Much mischief arises from the habit, too generally adopted by all classes of Europeans in India, of throwing off the coat, neck-cloth, or stock, and thus lounging on a couch or sofa, exposed to currents of air, upon returning home overheated and perspiring from riding or walking. The use of the punkah, for the purpose of cooling the body when perspiring from exercise and deprived of the outer habiliments, is equally hurtful. When exposed, under such circumstances, to currents of cool air, the evaporation from the body is accelerated, coldness of its surface rapidly produced, and the circulation suddenly thrown back upon a weakened, pre-disposed, and sometimes an already diseased organ.—Annesley, on the Diseases of India.

SOLICITORS.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30	On or before	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
40		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
50	12th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
60	1847.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

* * * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The divisions of profits will be declared in June, 1855, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1854, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000*l*.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50*l*.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING.

Many inquiries having been made as to the DURABILITY of GUTTA PERCHA TUBING, the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY beg to call attention to the following Extracts of Letters from parties who have used it for a considerable length of time.

From SIR RAYMOND JARVIS, Bart.

"VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT,
March 10th, 1855.

"In reply to your letter respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Service, I can state with much satisfaction, it answers perfectly. Many Builders and other persons have lately examined it, and there is not the least apparent difference since the first laying down, now several years; and I am informed that it is to be adopted generally in the houses that are being erected here."

From C. HACKER, Esq., Surveyor to
HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.

(Second Testimonial, after Two Years' Trial.)

"OFFICE OF WORKS, WOBURN PARK,
January 10th, 1855.

"In answer to your inquiries respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Suctions, I find that the water has not affected it in the least, although it will eat lead through in two years; we have adopted it largely, being cheaper than lead, much easier fixed, and a more perfect job."

Tubing of any required length, of every size up to six inches in diameter,

MANUFACTURED BY THE

GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY, Patentees,

AND SOLD BY THEIR WHOLESALE DEALERS IN TOWN

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A CERTAIN REMEDY
FOR DEBILITATED CONSTITUTIONS, LOSS OF APETITE, and LOWNESS OF SPIRITS.—Mr. Richard White, of No. 8, Albion Square, Manchester Road, Bradford, was afflicted for several months with a bodily weakness, loss of appetite, and lowness of spirits, and for a long time a patient at the Dispensary, but derived no benefit whatever, and was told by the medical attendant that he was in a deep decline, medicine being of no further use to him. About this time he was recommended to try Holloway's Pills, and this invaluable medicine speedily effected a perfect cure, and he has ever since enjoyed the best of health, now nearly ten years.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

ESTABLISHED 60 YEARS.

PEAKOME'S SADDLERY, &c. for all parts of the world.—Noblemen, gentlemen, and emigrants, are solicited to purchase at fair remunerating prices, and compare them with extortionate prices charged by others.—Best hogskin saddles complete, four guineas; ditto second quality, 70s.; best double bridles, 18s.; best patent carriage collars, 15s.; best pair-horse carriage harness, 18 guineas; round double reins, 40s.; best single harness, £7.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC
STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a molecule of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOOLLEN and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. GRINDLAY and Co.; and 5, Vere Street, London.

House of Commons, on the Case of the AMEERS of UPPER SCINDE, June 23, 1852.

With an Appendix.

London: SMITH, ELDER, and Co., 65, Cornhill.

LADIES Travelling, or during the Drive, the Aquatic Excursion, or while otherwise exposed to the scorching rays of the Sun and heated particles of Dust, will find ROWLANDS' KALYDOE a most refreshing preparation for the complexion, dispelling the cloud of languor and relaxation, allaying all heat and irritability, and immediately affording the pleasing sensation attending restored elasticity and healthful state of the Skin. Freckles, Tan, Spots, Pimples, Flashes, and Discolorations, fly before its application, and give place to delicate smoothness, and the glow of beauty and of bloom. In cases of Sunburn, or Stings of Insects, its virtues have long been acknowledged. Price 4s. 6d. and 3s. 6d. per bottle.

The new and beautiful Perfume, ROWLANDS' AQUA D'ORO, is an essence of the subtlest and most durable pungency, the aroma and bouquet of which are the most refreshing known, and have caused it to be patronized by the élite of the aristocracy, whose judgment and good taste are never at fault. Its odorlessness, its revivifying effect, its refreshing properties, and its choice perfume applied to the delicate moustache of the belle of fashion render it an essential accompaniment to places of public amusement and crowded assemblies.—Price 3s. 6d. per bottle.

. It is highly necessary, on purchasing, to see that the word "Rowlands" precedes the name of the article on the wrapper or label of each, as spurious imitations are abroad.

Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE intelligence from Burmah by this mail is by no means unimportant. Unassisted by the troops, the steam flotilla roughly handled the Burmese army assembled to defend the capital, and took Prome.

It appears that Captain Tarleton, of the Royal Navy, with five of the war steamers, H.M.S. Medusa, and Company's steamers Proserpine, Phlegethon, Pluto, and Mahanuddy, was directed by Commodore Lambert to ascend the Irrawaddy, and reconnoitre the position and defences of the enemy. In the execution of these orders, on the 6th July, the vessels proceeded up the river, and at a place called Konongee, or Kanaong, about 25 miles below Prome, their progress was opposed by a heavy battery on the shore, which they silenced. At a short distance from that city, the river divides into two streams, the left, or western, being the deepest, and the only navigable branch at any season but the rainy one. At Akouk-tong, or Akaok-taong, on the left bank of this stream, upon a high projection, which completely commanded the river, a Burmese army of about 10,000 men had been assembled, in a strongly fortified position, under General Bundoola (son of the great Menghyee Bundoola), to guard the passage to Prome and the capital. Captain Tarleton, having been warned by the villagers of the resistance that awaited him, and hearing from his native pilots that, at that season, the eastern stream was navigable, determined to try it. As soon as the steamers came in sight of the Burmese position, the enemy opened a fire upon them, which was returned, but, to the surprise of the Burmese commander, the vessels turned off into the eastern or right channel (formed by a long island, laid down in Wilson's map, opposite the enemy's position), and reached Prome on the 9th July without opposition. The place was found to be ungarrisoned, and a party of seamen and marines landed, who, with the hearty co-operation of the Burmese themselves, carried off twenty-eight guns and mortars, and spiked the remainder, destroying all the stores.

After remaining there for twenty-four hours, the place was evacuated, and the flotilla returned. On reaching the main stream, the army of Bundoola was observed in motion, crossing the river, evidently with the intention of following the steamers, which opened upon the confused masses on shore, and upon the boats, with shot and shells, spreading havoc and dismay amongst them. Between forty and fifty boats were captured and destroyed. The general's state barge, several large war-canoes, a standard, two gold umbrellas, and other spoil, fell into our hands. This success was obtained without other damage than three officers wounded, the enemy having lost about 400. It is said that, had his instructions warranted him in so doing, Captain Tarleton could have got to Ava in four or five days. One of the Rangoon letters says,—

"Captain Tarleton's feelings may be understood when he found himself at Prome, within four days' steaming of Ava, and with good intelligence that there was nothing to oppose him, and with a broad deep river, easy of navigation, before him. Had he then had with him one regiment, and half a battery of guns, there is every reason to believe he might have taken the capital, so totally unprepared as they for any advance in the rains."

The whole trip occupied only nine days. In its progress the expedition received the most convincing proofs that the population of Burmah are adverse to the war, and anxious to come under our rule. It is said that more than twenty large towns had sent deputations to Rangoon, urging our authorities to give them a promise of protection, and allow them at once to throw off their allegiance to the tyrant of Ava, who is wreaking his vengeance upon the unhappy Reguers, laying waste their villages, and almost depopulating the country.

The Friend of India states, upon credible authority, that the late governor of Dalla was at Akouk-tong, empowered, in case that position was taken, to offer terms of accommodation.

The Governor-General paid a short visit to Rangoon, where he conferred with the military and naval commanders. He left Calcutta on the 21st July, reached Rangoon on the 27th, quitted it on the 31st, and returned to the Presidency on the 6th August. Nothing has transpired as to the ulterior operations of the army, which, it was supposed, as soon as the season permitted, would move rapidly towards Prome and the capital: meanwhile, orders had been issued for the assemblage of the reinforcements General Godwin had called for, which were to rendezvous at Rangoon about the close of October. They were to consist of two additional brigades from Bengal, and two from Madras, which will raise the army of Burmah to six brigades, or about 20,000 men. Besides artillery, sappers and miners, there will be six regiments of European infantry, and twelve regiments of native infantry, forming two divisions; that from Bengal consisting of the 1st Bengal Brigade, now at Rangoon, commanded by Lieut. col. Reignolds, 18th Royal Irish, 40th Native Infantry, 67th Native Infantry; the 2nd Bengal Brigade, to consist of H.M.'s 80th Foot, 10th Native Infantry, 4th Sikh Local Regiment, to be commanded by Lieut. col. Dickenson, and the 3rd Bengal Brigade, to consist of 1st European Bengal Fusiliers, 37th Native Infantry, Regiment of Loodiana, to be commanded by Lieut. col. Huish, C.B., and the Light Field Battery now at Dum-

Dum. Of the three brigades to constitute the Madras division, one is already at Rangoon, consisting of H.M.'s 51st Regiment, the 9th and 35th Regiments M.N.I. under the command of Brigadier Elliott. The elements of the other two are H.M.'s 84th Regiment, the 1st Fusiliers, and the 45th, 19th, 5th, and 30th Regiments of Native Infantry. According to the Madras Athenæum, the two additional Madras Brigades are to be commanded by Brigadier Malcolm McNeill and Lieut. col. Franklyn, of H.M.'s 84th, and General Steel, C.B., will command the division.

In the correspondence from Rangoon it is said that Lord Dufferin had distinctly declared that he was not empowered to order the annexation of any part of the Burmese territory. The following notice had been issued by General Godwin during the visit of the Governor-General:—

"The Lieutenant-General is afraid, from the anxiety shown by the Burmese to obtain passes of safety from British officers, that they believe the annexation of this country is probable, but of which at present there is not the least prospect. It is, therefore, requested that no passes of any kind be given to any native of Burmah, since it may be construed into an authority which may hereafter cost the holder his life."

Another attempt, it appears, was made by the enemy to surprise Martaban; but the garrison were on the alert, and the design proved abortive.

On the north-west quarter of India all was quiet, and by this time a treaty has probably been ratified between the Swattoes and Momunds and Col. Mackeson, which, it is supposed by the latter, will prove binding; if it does, the war may be considered to have terminated happily. "We may be too suspicious," says the Delhi Gazette, "but we would rather have seen the Momunds and Swattoes taught a severe and lasting lesson; the remedy was at hand only a few months ago, and we think it should have been made available at any risk. Possibly, the late skirmishing in their own territory may have imbued their minds with some respect for our superiority over them in the field; but as they know, or at least have good reason for believing, themselves safe in their mountain fastnesses, it is not unlikely that the ensuing cold weather may find us in a precisely similar relationship with regard to them as we were at the commencement of the present year, in which case a campaign in the hills and a march to Lalpoora will be inevitable."

The letters from Hyderabad represent that the Nizam's contingent remains unpaid, and that the country is in a deplorable condition; the Arabs and Robillas committing all sorts of atrocities; the naiks enriching themselves at the expense of the Nizam, and entertaining hired ruffians, armed to the teeth, who are employed on all kinds of lawless services. A correspondent of the Englishman says, that the Supreme Government have recommended a great reduction in the Nizam's contingent, but a difficulty has arisen with regard to the pensions payable to local officers. Another correspondent relates that the Resident, in a conference with the Nizam, reproached the minister with practising deception upon him.

The accounts given in the China papers of the progress of the insurrection in Kwang-se province, show that it is of a very serious character, and that the Government do not possess power enough to put it down. The real object of the insurgents is still doubtful; it is stated in the Chinese Repository that there is a very general impression in Canton and its vicinity that they are somehow connected with foreigners and with Christianity. The people report that the leader, Fung Yun-shan (who has assumed the imperial title of T'ien-teh), and his party, worship none of the deities of the country; that they destroy idols, appropriate the temples to secular uses, and keep a seventh day of rest. An official report of Chau Teien-tsieh, a mandarin, appointed to superintend the military operations in Kwang-se, with the powers of governor-general, made to the emperor, and published in the Peking Gazette, affords some countenance to the notion that the rebel has a leaning to the Christian faith. This report states that Fung Yun-shan is from Kwang-tung province, whence he came into Kwang-se in 1844; that he taught youth there for the next three years, in conjunction with one Tsang Yuh-chin; that he was arrested "for propagating magical arts to seduce the people, and forming bands and cabals to destroy altars and images in the temples;" that he was subsequently liberated by the local authorities, precipitately according to Chau, who censures the prefect of the district for not having personally examined "whether the vagabonds possessed heretical books, in which Jesus, a false god of the Europeans, was spoken of; whether they seditiously worshipped and honoured him, and whether Fung had himself written or taught these books." Moreover, the term Shang-te hway, or "Lord of Heaven handitti," is often applied to the Kwang-se insurgents.

Advices from Tahiti state that the English Protestant ministers had been forbidden to preach until they had formally acknowledged the French Protectorate Government as their head, and promised to submit themselves to its control. No native was allowed to preach without first obtaining the sanction of the Government.

From the Sandwich Islands we have advices to the 2nd of July. On the 15th of the preceding month, a royal salute of twenty-one guns was fired in honour of the king's signature to the new constitution granted by his majesty.

BENGAL. BURMAH.

Rangoon, July 29th.—At noon on the 27th inst., a salute of 19 guns from H.M.'s frigate Fox, and a similar salute from the artillery on the upper terrace of the Great Pagoda, announced the arrival of the H. Co.'s steamer Feroze, having on board the Governor-General and suite. After a short interval, salutes due to their respective ranks informed us that General Godwin and Commodore Lambert had proceeded on board to pay their respects. In the course of the afternoon a general order was issued, intimating that the Governor-General would land the following morning, and prescribing the formalities to be adopted on the occasion. In accordance therewith, the Governor-General landed at about half-past six a.m., and was received by the guard of honour at the wharf, and rode up, accompanied by a large retinue, to the south gate of the stockade, where the street formed by the troops commenced on arriving at the foot of the steps leading to the platform of the Pagoda. His lordship dismounted, and, on reaching the platform, was received with presented arms by a company of Madras artillery, drawn up as a guard of honour. He was much struck with the proportions and appearance of the Great Pagoda, as also of the two large bells, and said it was worth coming to Rangoon to see them alone. He expressed himself much pleased with the healthy appearance of the Europeans and with their accommodations.

The 18th royal Irish and 80th foot have moved into their barracks, and are more comfortable than in their late quarters on the steps; the ground has been drained, and our indefatigable chief engineer and his staff of subalterns deserve the greatest credit for their exertions. Accommodation is prepared for the wing of the 80th, which is expected to arrive from Fort William early next month, and a range of barracks is rising on the ground to the east of the Pagoda for any other European regiment that may require them.

We have had an interval of dry fine weather, but to-day there has been incessant rain, and the whole country is a swamp; there is no walking or riding in comfort, except on the brick road, but the temperature is pleasant, and sickness has much abated.

30th.—Intimation has just been given that the mail for Calcutta by the Feroze will be closed at 3 o'clock p.m. to-morrow, so his Lordship does not intend paying so long a visit as we anticipated.

31st.—Two brigades of infantry, consisting of two European and four native regiments, have been ordered from Madras; also two troops of horse artillery. Bengal will also be required to furnish its proportion of troops preparatory to an advance, regarding which, however, nothing is yet known. The Governor-General says, he has no power to annex, and that no instructions on the subject can be received from England before September.

The schooner Bride was upset in the Rangoon river yesterday, having run foul of the king of Ava's ship; she had just discharged her cargo, and was dropping down into another berth—all hands saved.

P.S.—Nothing positive has oozed out of the Council Chamber; it is believed that, as expected, an immediate advance on, and an occupation of, Prome, by the troops, will take place, and that reinforcements will be at once sent down from Madras and Bengal. The Governor-General meets to-day the heads of departments at one o'clock—the Missionaries at three. At four he goes on board the Fox to have a confab with the Commodore.

Information has this morning (July 31st) been received of another attack on Martaban, which, like the last, was easily repelled; the Burmese took advantage of a dark night, but were nevertheless discovered. The Artillery opened fire upon them, and nothing more was seen of them but a number of glazed hats and pouches lying about next morning.—Englishmen, Aug. 7.

The Fire Queen has arrived from Rangoon, bringing news that Prome was captured on the 9th inst. Twenty-two guns, many of large calibre, were taken from the enemy by the steam flotilla in the Irrawaddy, under the command of J. W. Tarlton, R.N. The flotilla was attacked on the 7th by a strong force of the enemy at Konongee. Silenced enemy's fire in an hour, and the steamers proceeded. On the 10th fell in with the rear of General Bundoole's army, and after an exchange of shots the enemy fled in great confusion, leaving the general's state barge, standard, two gold umbrellas, several large war-canoes, and twenty prisoners in our possession. Casualties—Lieut. I. Elliott, R.M.; Mr. I. Morgan, Asst. Surg. H.M.S. Fox; Mr. Brayer, M.A.S. severely; Mr. Brayer, Mate, I.N., slightly. July 29.

We have since received fuller particulars of the expedition sent simply to survey the river up to the mouth of the Irrawaddy.

the position and the proceedings of the enemy. At the commencement of these hostilities with the Burmese, we, in common with our contemporaries, urged most strenuously that if the military force should be unable to move from Rangoon during the rains, our efficient steam flotilla should be uninterruptedly employed in exploring the Irrawaddy and other streams which were navigable, and in disturbing the attempts of the Burmese to establish stockades, as well as in keeping the river path to Prome open and clear. There could be no reason why the steamers should remain idle, because the troops were rendered inactive by the season; for the season least favourable for the troops was most favourable for the operations of the steam squadron. Unfortunately, that kind of misunderstanding between the military and naval commanders which seems inseparable from all our expeditions in which they are conjointly employed, appears to have broken out on the present occasion at Rangoon. The Commodore was, therefore, obliged to undertake this enterprise, not only without any co-operation, but, if we are to judge from the letters sent round by various correspondents to various journals, amidst much disapprobation. It consisted of five steamers. About twenty-five miles below Prome, they were opposed by a heavy battery on shore; but this was soon silenced and the vessels proceeded up the river. At some little distance from Prome, on the west bank of the river, on a bluff projection about 400 feet high, which completely commanded the river, Bundoola, the general of the Burmese forces,—and the son of the great Bundoola, of the former war,—in conjunction with the Governor of Prome, had erected a formidable fortification, and collected an army said to amount to 8,000 or 10,000 men. As soon as the steamers came within range, the guns opened upon them, and the fire was returned, but the pilots immediately after pointed out an eastern channel, made by a long island, opposite the Burmese position, and the steamers proceeded through it unmolested to Prome, where they found a number of guns, but no soldiers. Men, women, and children crowded down to the river, and Capt. Tarlton, who commanded the expedition, perceiving such confidence in the people, sent his boat ashore, and informed them that he intended to remove the guns and military stores. No objection was raised, and some 150 Burmese aided in spiking eighteen large iron guns, and throwing them into the river, and putting nine brass guns, some of 44-pounders, on board the steamers. All the powder and military stores were destroyed; but the inhabitants were left unmolested. After having thus accomplished the object of the expedition which was to reconnoitre Prome and its defences, the steamers returned down the river and found Bundoola, with a large number of war-boats and state barges, transporting his army to the left bank of the river, evidently with the intention of marching up to the protection of Prome. His troops were found in confused masses, in boats, and along each side of the river; and the shot and shell from the steamers told fearfully on them, and spread dismay among the Burmese ranks; those in the boats jumped overboard, and every man hastened to flee. Between forty and fifty boats containing warlike stores were captured, set on fire and totally destroyed. Thus have all Bundoola's preparations to prevent our access to Prome been defeated by a small body of Englishmen in five steamers; the guns of the place have been spiked or carried off, and the military stores thrown into the river, and his own army of 10,000 men completely baffled. The loss on the side of the Burmese was estimated at three or four hundred; on our part, not one was killed and only one officer and three others were wounded. There is every probability that the steam flotilla could have pushed on to the capital itself in five or six days without any interruption, and given the king, by means of a salute of shot and shells, that intimation of his utter inability to cope with us which he could not obtain from any other source. Our correspondent remarks in reference to the question: "Will the disgrace thus inflicted on the Burmese at Prome open the eyes of the king, that there is not a man at Ava, who has courage enough to utter a word in favour of peace?" No man, however, high in rank, would be safe for an hour if he were to speak even despondingly of the king's ability to drive the invaders out of the country. Truth cannot reach the royal ears till it is too late. However incredible this may sound to a European, no one who knows anything of the Asiatic character can for a moment question its truth.

The principal Queen's brother has come down to Shway geen, in the Setang valley, with a large army, said to be 30,000 strong, and is fortifying the place. He has sent an officer of some rank, with three or four thousand men to Pegu; these and other bodies now dispersed over the lower provinces are doing mischief, and laying waste great numbers of villages, so that the inhabitants over a large district will be prevented from cultivating their rice-fields. Several thousands have left Pegu with their families and come nearer to Rangoon, to be under British protection. Nothing, in fact, can be more evident than the anxious desire of the people throughout the lower provinces, to come under English rule. Burmans, Taliens, and Karens, from hundreds of towns resort to Rangoon to enquire why the English do not at once proclaim their sovereignty, and take the country under their protection, and release the people from the intolerable suspense under which they labour. One of our correspondents states that he could mention the names of more than twenty large towns from whence deputations have been sent to urge the English to give them the promise of protection, and allow them at once to throw off their allegiance to Ava. The unexampled rush of population to Rangoon after we had occupied it, and the plentiful manner in which the bazaars are supplied with provisions of all sorts, furnishes a clear demonstration of the national feeling which exists on the subject. The confidence which this oppressed nation has manifested in us, deserves something better than a second edition of our abandonment of their interests in the last war. We owe it to our own character to afford them permanent protection. Be that as it may, the present expedition has sealed the doom of Alompra's dynasty. It has shaken the power of the empire beyond all possibility of restoration. It has proclaimed to the world the intrinsic weakness of its military organisation, and its utter inability to stand the shock of any European power. It has also shown that the dominion of the Burmese court is detested, even beyond the ordinary extent of national hatred, by the inhabitants of the maritime provinces, who are prepared to join any standard under which they can but obtain immunity from the oppression of their masters. The sovereignty of the whole country below Prome has virtually passed from the Burmese crown; it only remains to be legally vested in some nation from the West, and it is for the British Government to determine, whether it shall pass to the mother, or to the elder daughter, of the Anglo-Saxon race.

We are credibly informed that the late Governor of Dalla was at Akouk-tong—the fortified position of Bundoola—with authority, in case that fortification was bond fide captured by us, immediately to offer terms of accommodation, as the king was said to have collected two or three crores of rupees,—two or three millions sterling—to pay the English, and save his country. We do not receive the report with implicit confidence, first, because the king is not likely to have two or three hundred lakhs of rupees of spare cash; and, secondly, because he is not likely to offer so large a sum, before he is certain that the English will not take less.—Ibid., Aug. 5.

We have the following narrative of the taking of Prome and subsequent events, which will be found interesting:—

"16th July. — Something at last worth telling has been brought about by the gallant little fleet that was sent up some short time ago at the earnest recommendation of the Commodore to reconnoitre Prome. It was pretty well guessed that Capt. Tarlton, the commander of the expedition, would speedily follow his reconnoitre by something more decisive and satisfactory, and those who, from the high-spirited qualities of the gallant sailor, had thus supposed of him, have had their opinion of his character justified, for he has made a regular case of "veni, vidi, vici" of it. The river below Prome divides itself into two streams; the left of these is the deeper of the two, indeed the only navigable channel at any other season of the year than the present; on the left bank of this, that is the left bank of the river, the Burmese were located in great numbers, and on this bank in very commanding positions were stone bastions mounted with cannon, which could entirely enfilade that branch of the river; through this our friends of course thought the fleet must pass to reach Prome, and well had they provided to contest severely the passage. But to their disappointment and great grief the steamers took the other channel, namely, the right branch, and thus got into the main river, comparatively unharmed by the guns on the formidable bastions. On reaching the stockade at Prome, the garrison appearing a very feeble one, the marines and seamen were landed, and the place with no resistance taken—28 guns, including some mortars, were captured, and have been brought down,—one seaman only was killed, two officers wounded, and those severely—Lieut. Elliot, of the royal marines, received a ball in his foot, where it still is, and some of the bones having been fractured, it is feared he will be lame for life. Mr. Fraser, of the Philo, severely wounded in the arm. The river is said to have risen eighteen feet, since the commencement of the rains, and all the naval authorities declare there is water enough to float any steamer here, not only to Prome, but to Ava, if need be.

The seamen and marines on landing at Prome found the place vacated for them; they remained twenty-four hours there, and some went a mile and a half into the country without seeing any appearance of the enemy. So different is the climate up there, that actually dust was blowing about, which shows how little rain had fallen lately. Captain Tarlton deeply regretted he had not a regiment with him, and that his instructions did not admit of going higher up, for from what was there learnt it seems that between Prome and Ava there would have been nothing found to prevent the latter place being attained. It does indeed seem a thousand pities that his wishes could not have been carried into effect. Such a move now would bring this unsatisfactory expedition to a close in three months and less. When the steamers, after passing up the right branch had got into the main stream, numbers of Burnese were seen crossing the left branch in boats, upon which some of our steamers turned back, and ran in among them, firing into the enemy's boats, and securing several, among them the one which belonged to the commander of the army there, a son of Bundoola, on which was a fine flag. It was reported, that a steamer belonging to the king of Ava had left for Ava only the day previous to the arrival of our steamers. The Commodore is exceedingly anxious to secure this, as she is a light craft, and would be of great use. No one knew before that the King of Ava possessed a steamer besides the one taken and burnt by the Tenasserim in April.

All are anxiously expecting some decisive move will be ordered by the Governor-General when he hears what has taken place at Prome, and is informed of the present favourable state of the river, and the mildness of the weather up the river, compared to what it is even here, and even in Rangoon all say this is a very mild rainy season.

The assistant surgeon of the For was slightly wounded in the shoulder, making three officers wounded, and not two only as mentioned.

The General has returned from his tour of inspection of Moulmein, Martaban, and Bassein. It is supposed the defences at the latter place are going to be increased, from the circumstance of money having been sent there from the engineer's department. Amherst is not found to be so healthy a place as was supposed, from what cause it is not known, but certain it is that neither officers nor men rally there as they ought, especially dysentery cases. The wing of the 80th have moved into their new barracks beside the 18th R.I. The officers of all grades are much pleased with their quarters, and so they ought to be—each subaltern has a room and a bath-room to himself—there are six of these quarters in one barrack. Two captains occupy one building, in the centre of which is a room, common to both, on either side is a good-sized room and bath-room. A field officer has one of these buildings to himself. The uprights of new barracks have been fixed on the eastern side of the Pagoda. That is the least desirable site, as the wind comes more from the south than east, in which case only the end barrack will get the benefit of it. The health of the troops continues pretty much the same. The Hindoostanees are getting well reconciled to the place, and find much less fault with both the water and the climate.

It was a villager on the banks of the river who warned our steamers not to take the left channel, as there were guns in strong position there,—by his friendly warning many valuable lives have been saved. What can better prove the friendly feeling of the people towards us, and how easy is it to perceive the anxiety of the people to throw off the heavy yoke of their Burmese masters, and to submit to the light one, as imposed by a British administration, which they see exemplified in the easy rule exercised over their neighbours in the Arracan and Tenasserim provinces. If annexation is not the result of this war, it certainly looks as if it ought to be; the present appearances of matters decidedly tend to what would be so agreeable an arrangement to all parties except the arrogant and misguided court of Ava.

July 20.—The Fire Queen came in yesterday from Moulmein, bringing Colonel Bogle, who has come here to meet the Governor-General; he will add the weight of his opinion to that of the many others in favour of an immediate occupation of Prome by the military, followed by an advance on the capital while the river has plenty of water in it, and such a move on our part is unexpected. In the council of war that will probably be held on the arrival of Lord Dalhousie, our General's views will be in a glorious minority, as he seems to be the only man in Rangoon adopting them. Commodore Lynch, before leaving Moulmein, expressed his belief that Ava would be taken before the 30th proximo, and if matters are only properly managed, his supposition will be realised. If the Governor-General will do no more good in coming down here, than causing the roads to be repaired, his advent will have produced that result at any rate, for vast improvements are being effected where they were much wanted. "Not a drop of rain has fallen for three days and nights; it is getting warm again, that is to say, the thermometer rises to 85° and 86° now, which is warm for Rangoon.—Englishman, Aug. 7.

G. T. MARSHALL,

Secretary to the College of Fort William.

College of Fort William, the 20th July, 1852.

Published by order of the honourable the deputy-governor of Bengal,

CHARL. BEAVER,

Secretary to the Government of Bengal.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 24th arrived at Calcutta on July 20th per Hindustan.

NATIVE VOTES FOR THE DIRECTION.—The Examiner suggests the propriety of giving a vote to those who hold an interest in the Indian territorial debt, which amounts to about forty-five millions sterling. To this project it could not be objected that it was not in strict analogy with the present constitution of the Court of Proprietors. They derive their right to elect the rulers of India simply from the fact of their receiving from the revenues of India the sum of 650,000*l.* a year, which is annually remitted to pay the dividends of their stock. The other body of fund-holders stand precisely in the same category; they receive out of the revenues of India the sum of 2,147,233*l.* a year, as the interest on their stock; and if the possession of India Stock gives a legitimate claim in the one case to a share in the election of the rulers of the country, there can be no valid reason why it should not carry with it the same privilege in the other. As a very considerable portion of the securities of Government of India are, moreover, held by natives of the country, this enlargement of the constituency would give them a voice in the election of their rulers,—to be used by proxy,—to which no one could, we think, urge any objection whatever. This would apparently be the most obvious and legitimate channel by which, under existing circumstances, the influence of wealthy men among the natives might be brought to bear on the governing body at home. It is just possible that this extension of the suffrage to them might, at some future time, result in the deputation of one of their own body to represent them in the Court of Directors, and we cannot but think that this would be a great improvement in the constitution of the Indian Government. Dwarkanath Tagore would have been invaluable as a Director. The chief objection to this plan might be the great fluctuation which is constantly occurring among the holders of Government Securities; but we believe it is a well-known fact, that there is scarcely ever more than one million sterling, out of the forty-five millions of notes, in the market for sale; the rest is held for investment and not speculation. The choice of the local constituency would, in that case, generally fall on those who had obtained eminence in this country by their talents and industry, and the introduction of such men into the governing body at home would certainly be an advantage.—Friend of India.

COMAR MAHARAJ AT LAHORE.—We regret to learn that a scurvy-martial is now sitting at Lahore for the trial of two officers, one in the artillery and one in the 89th N. I.—Delhi Gaz., July 24.

MOVEMENTS OF GOONS.—The head quarters of the three brigades of horse-artillery proceed to Peshawar, Sealkote, and Lahore. The head quarters of the native battalions at Meerut, will probably go to Cawnpore, where the head quarters are established of the artillery, and thus leave Meerut a mere artillery division command. Orders have arrived for all corps in these provinces, who have volunteered for service to Burmah, to proceed down country below Allahabad.—Delhi Gaz., July 20.

THE FLU in these provinces has been intense for the last fortnight, and until a few days ago the rain we are led to expect at this season, suddenly ceased; we have not heard of any increase in the amount of sickness as the consequence, but the crops have suffered. In the Deyrah Doon, and at Almora and Nainee Tal, cholera is reported to be committing frightful ravages amongst the native population, and the weather at the hill sanatoria is described as most unpleasant. In the plains, on the contrary, sickness is not unusually prevalent, and between the showers the temperature is very bearable.—Id.

Dr. ROBERTSON is to succeed Dr. Grant as apothecary-general.—Burkara.

CONFESSIONS OF A ROBBERS.—He was sitting alone in his trade hut. We had expected the commanding features of one of these well-known characters so numerous in the Minerva school of novels. But, instead—a stooping body, haggard countenance, and shrunken limbs, met our eyes. Heaven has visited him with blindness; but he talks with indifference of his former deeds, which would filibuster any man of ordinary sensibility with horror. Hear with what levity he related to us the following passages from his former life: "You asked me whether I committed any murder? why, I seldom did it with my own hands; but it was pretty common among our men. Once, repeating under the shade of a tree, I espied my comrades leading a Brahmin towards me. They had waylaid him. He had made earnest appeals to their compassion, but nothing could move my unfeeling followers. He then had recourse to an ingenious trick. He said he knew me, and that they would use it if their chief came to know that a single hair of his friend's head had been injured. At the mention of my name they recoiled, and consented to bring him to my presence. It is said that drawing near by hold of twigs. No sooner had he approached within a few yards of me than he ran, and in a suppliant posture began, 'I am a poor Goolin-Brahmin, and live about eight miles from this place. I have a daughter who has attained a marriageable age. You know what money is required in marrying our girls, and the dire disgrace that attends us in leaving them unmarried. Having met, therefore, the necessary sum, I went to Calcutta, where I bagged this bag of money, which contains Rs. 500.' Five hundred rupees! My head became dizzy, and my brain was seething. If I had not patience to listen once, but instantly seized him by the neck, and then took possession of heavy chains from their slaves, and a lead chest-busting cob, and then all was over!"—Id.

NEW FIBRE.—The report of the monthly meeting of the Agricultural and Horticultural Society, June 12, states that "there was on the table a beautiful specimen of the fibre of the Sida Rhomboides, presented by Major Hanney, from Upper Assam, where the plant grows wild. The fibre is white, as lustrous as silk, fine in texture, and of great strength when twisted. It cannot fail to get into extensive demand in England, and realise a very remunerative price."

ALIENS.—The Legislative Council has passed an Act for the naturalization of aliens.

THE SIKH SIRDARS.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle states that Shere Singh and Utter Singh, the Sikh Sirdars, in confinement in the fort, have volunteered for service in Burmah.

THE RAILWAY.—The Gleaner mentions that the Railway Company and the government have found it necessary to run the line of embankment outside the French settlement of Chander-nagore. The authorities of that place are determined not to part with an inch of the territory of the republic one and indivisible, and have demanded some respectable sum for the concession. It was not, however, the pecuniary difficulty which broke off the negotiation, as the Gleaner appears to imagine, for the expense of retracing their steps will even now fall heavily upon the Company, and the difference between the cost now incurred and submission to the demand would not have been ruinous. The truth is, the French commissioners demanded a return for a few acres of land that they should receive jurisdiction over half the river in front of their town, a request to which the Governor-General courteously but peremptorily refused to accede. The whole question will one day form a curious episode in the "History of Indian Railways."—Friend of India.

THE ARACAN PASS.—A correspondent of the Englishman informs us that, a few days since, a steamer went up the Aracn creek by a new passage, and discovered that the creek was navigable for thirty miles farther than had previously been supposed. Lieut. Fyfe, the assistant commissioner in Aracan, has opened a communication overland between that place and Bassein, and onwards to Rangoon. This enables the residents of Sandoway to receive letters from the officers with the army at that place ten days after they are written. The writer seems to think it probable that troops will be sent to Burmah by the Aracn pass, but this, we believe, is a mistake. We thought so once; but it has been found, we believe, that the pass presents no facilities for the transport of artillery; that it affords accommodation only for a limited number of troops at one time, and that if it were used, we should be able to plant only 2,000 troops at a time in the valley of the Irrawaddy. It would be easier to send the troops by sea to Bassein and by the river steamer from thence up the Irrawaddy to Patungo, than to send them by sea to Sandoway, and from thence across the country by the Pass to that town.—Friend of India, Aug. 5.

THE PETITION OF THE NATIVE INHABITANTS OF LOWER BEN-GAL to the House of Commons, which has been so long preparing, is at last about to be sent to London. It is exceedingly forcible in facts, but very temperate in manner, and must surely make a great impression, conveying as it does, the genuine sentiments of the people. We are told that there are above a thousand signatures, all of men of property, and a great many more would be given if it were thought worth while to send the petition round the country.—Englishman, Aug. 7.

REPORTED MURDERS.—In a late issue we recorded the perpetration of a frightful murder, at Baitool (see pp. 447 and 479), which, however, required confirmation. We have since been informed, on the best authority, that the reported murder is unfortunately but too true. Three women and two children were the victims. The supposed murderer has been secured, and the whole case is under investigation.—Delhi Gazette, July 30.

CAPTAIN MAYFLOWER CRISP has published a letter, addressed to Lord Ellenborough, on that noble earl having repeated in the House of Peers a charge, commonly preferred against Captain Crisp, of having sold muskets to the Burmese, and then applied to the British Commodore for his assistance in obtaining payment for them. The letter is strong in its matter, and less discursive in style than the productions of the same pen usually are. Captain Crisp makes out a good case for himself, and gives his illustrious accuser some rather hard hits.—Hurkaru, July 19.

TRADE OF CALCUTTA.—Wilkinson's Commercial Annual gives a satisfactory report on the trade of Calcutta during the last mercantile year. The recorded value of imports was Rs. 8,75,14,750 in merchandise, and Rs. 2,49,63,184 in treasure,—together Rs. 9,24,77,934 against Rs. 7,05,32,910 in 1850-51. Of exports Rs. 10,84,63,897 in merchandise, and Rs. 19,45,809 in treasure,—together Rs. 11,04,09,706, against Rs. 10,72,80,895 in the preceding year. The amount of importing tonnage was 425,553, against 366,711 in 1850-51. The foreign tonnage had increased from 74,616 to 112,957. The increasing size of British vessels is shown by the fact that, while their aggregate tonnage rose from 292,095 to 312,596, the number of ships fell from 854 to 640.

A LITERARY SKIRMISH between the editor of the Citizen (Mr. Newmarch) and Capt. Onslow (the harbour-master) led to a personal collision. The captain struck the editor with a horse-whip, and a scuffle ensued. A challenge followed, but the police interfered, and bound over both parties to keep the peace. Mr. Judge prosecuted Capt. Onslow for disturbing his family in the affray with Mr. Newmarch, and he was fined 50 rupees.

THE REVENUE BOARD AND MR. HOUSTON.—Lord Dalhousie pronounces the remonstrance of the Revenue Board on the appointment of Mr. Houston to the salt agency of Chittagong "an unparalleled presumption."—Hurkaru.

NEWSPAPER IN MYSORE.—The Citizen hears that it is the intention of an enterprising individual to establish a bi-weekly newspaper in the Mysore territories to be published in the English and Carnatic languages.

THE FORT OF MOOLTAN, the Agra Messenger states, is to be dismantled, and its site incorporated with the town.

THE AGRA BANK.—The Delhi Gazette publishes the proceedings of an Extraordinary General Meeting of the shareholders of the Agra Bank, held on the 13th July. It appears that the shareholders have determined, by a large majority, that no dividend beyond nine per cent. per annum shall be declared until the reserve fund amounts to ten lakhs of rupees. The secretary also explained that the operation of clause 43 of the bank deed, which directs the re-election of the directors every six months, was necessarily suspended, not because the bank wished to oppose the Government, but because the English shareholders must be consulted before any radical change could be made in the management of the bank.

THE NATIVE ARMY.—The Hurkaru informs us in his Military column, that the Commander-in-Chief has just issued a circular directing that for the future all recruits in the Native Army shall be enlisted for general service.

JOURNAL AT RANGOON.—The Calcutta Morning Chronicle says, that a gentleman of considerable literary attainments, previously connected with that journal, was about to proceed to Rangoon, and start a weekly newspaper.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF (according to the Citizen) expressed his intention of coming down to Calcutta, in order to superintend the arrangements for the expedition to Burmah. The Governor-General, however, considers that such a movement is unnecessary. 1st. Because it would be expensive. 2ndly. Because the Commander-in-Chief ought to be near the N.W. frontier. 3rdly. Because there is nothing to be done in Calcutta if he does come. And 4thly. Because the steamers are required for other purposes.

EXTRAORDINARY INCIDENT.—The following almost incredible narrative may be relied on. We should not think of offering so strange a story to our readers, were we not in possession of warrantable evidence as to its truth:—About three years ago, a trooper in the Oudh service, while out on duty not far from Sultanpore, saw a large she-wolf leave her den, followed by three whelps and a little boy. The boy was on all-fours, and seemed to be on the best possible terms with the old dam and the three whelps, and the mother seemed to guard all four with equal care. The trooper watched them unperceived, until they had slaked their thirst, and were returning to their den. The trooper then urged on his horse, hoping to cut off the boy's retreat, but the little fellow ran on all-fours as fast as his companions, and, as the ground was broken, the trooper's horse could not overtake them before they reached the den. A number of people were immediately assembled with pickaxes to unearth this strange family. While they were digging, the old wolf, the whelps, and the little boy, bolted forth. The trooper pursued them on horseback, and, as the ground in the direction of their flight was more even, the trooper was able to head them, and turn them back upon the crowd of men, who secured the boy, and let the wolves escape. We now continue the narrative in the words of our informant:—"They took the boy to the village, but had to tie him, for he was very restive, and struggled hard to rush into every hole or den they came near. They tried to make him speak, but could get nothing from him but an angry growl or snarl. When a grown-up person came near him he became alarmed, and tried to steal away; but when a child came near him, he rushed at it with a fierce snarl, like that of a dog, and tried to bite it. When any cooked meat was put before him, he rejected it in disgust; but when any raw meat was offered, he seized it with avidity; put it on the ground under his paws, like a dog, and ate it with evident pleasure. He would not let any one come near while he was eating, but he made no objection to a dog coming and sharing his food with him. The trooper remained with him four or five days, and then returned to the Governor, leaving the boy in charge of the rajah of Hasunpore. He related all that he had seen, and the boy was soon after sent to Captain Nicholletts, commanding the first regiment of Oudh local infantry at Sultanpore, by order of the rajah of Hasunpore, who was at Chandour, and saw the boy when the trooper first brought him to the village. This is from the rajah's own account of what had taken place." The boy lived under charge of Captain Nicholletts's servants until August, 1850, or nearly two years. During this time he had been never known to speak. But one day he put his hands to his head, said "it ached," and asked for water. He drank it, and died. While in Captain Nicholletts's household, he was very inoffensive, except when teased; he would then growl surlily. He learned to eat anything that was thrown to him, but always preferred raw flesh. He refused to wear clothing of any description in the coldest weather. A quilt stuffed with cotton was once given him when it was very cold, but he tore it in pieces, and ate a portion of it, cotton and all, with his food every day, as a kind of condiment. He was particularly fond of uncooked bones, which he masticated with apparently as much ease as meat. He would eat half a lamb at a time, without any apparent effort, and held earth and small stones in high estimation as an article of diet. His features were coarse; his countenance repulsive, and his habits very filthy. He delighted in the company of dogs, jackals, and other small fourfooted animals, which he would make his trencher companions. He was never known to laugh or smile. He understood little of what was said to him; and paid no attention to what went on around him. He would never play with children, and formed no attachment with man or beast. He once became on intimate terms with a pariah dog, but when the dog was shot, he did not seem to regret his death in the least. He used signs when he wanted anything, pointing to his mouth for instance when hungry. He generally went on all fours, but not always. He would never willingly remain near a human being. This poor creature was recognized by his parents; but they soon became disgusted, and deserted him. His age, at the time of his death, was apparently twelve years.—Delhi Gaz., July 21.

BAROO PROSUNNO KOOMAR TAGORE, it is said, will proceed to England in December next, with the view of laying before the Committee of the House of Commons, the ideas and wishes of the natives of Bengal.

THE CHILDREN OF HALF-CASTE WOMEN by Europeans are allowed to enlist in the Company's European regiments.

ENSIGN GORDON.—We regret to say that letters from Simla inform us that Ensign J. C. Gordon, of the 39th regiment N.I. has been cashiered. This young officer was tried by a court-martial, which assembled at Mean Meer during the past month; the following was the charge exhibited against him, on which he has been found guilty:—"For conduct disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, on the 15th May, 1852, exposed himself in a shameful state of intoxication in the shop of Nubbee Buksh, a native merchant, in the Bazaar of Anarkulle, from whence, in consequence of his drunken condition, he had eventually to be removed in a palanquin to his quarters at Mean Meer." The sentence, "cashiering," has been approved and confirmed by the Commander-in-Chief.—Englishman, August 6.

ARTILLERY RELIEF.—The following is the artillery relief for this year, just received from Simla. It is, as will be perceived, and as was expected, a very limited one, only three troops of horse, and eight companies of foot artillery and one battalion head quarters, moving to new stations:—

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

RETIREMENT AND FURLOUGH REGULATIONS.

Financial Department, Agra, July 26, 1852.—Inconvenience having been experienced from the neglect to observe the course of procedure prescribed in cases of application for retirement from the service of the E. I. Company, and for furlough to Europe, the several rules bearing on the subject are published below for general information:—

Any civil servant, employed in the Agra division of the Bengal presidency, who may wish to retire from the service, or desire furlough to Europe, should forward his application to the secretary to Government, North-west Provinces, in the general department, and send a duplicate thereof to the secretary to Government of Bengal, in the general department, at the presidency, where his claims will be noted; and if the application be for furlough, it will be taken into consideration on 1st November, together with all similar applications, from both divisions of presidency, received up to that date.

In all cases, applicant should indicate the port from which he may intend to embark; and, where retirement is contemplated, the date from which it is proposed to take effect.

The applicant is required to communicate his intention to the accountant and to the civil auditor, North-western Provinces, at least three months before the date on which he may propose to retire from the service, or to proceed on furlough, in order that those officers may have time to adjust, as far as possible, any items of account standing at his debit in the public books and accounts, and prepare the requisite certificate of demand or no demands. These certificates will be furnished to the party on his relinquishing charge of the office which he may hold at the time, and are indispensable for procuring permission to embark for Europe, or to retire from the service.

Parties against whom demands exist are required to furnish security-bonds, executed by covenanted officers, previous to their leaving the country. They have, however, the option of depositing Government securities or shares in the Bank of Bengal, and the chartered banks of Madras and Bombay, for the adjustment of their liabilities.

Civil servants, retiring from the service, should furnish themselves with certificates from treasury officers, indicating the last payments made by them, on account of subscription, to the Civil Service Annuity Fund, both in the North-western Provinces and at the general treasury, Fort William, such certificates being required by the secretary for the final adjustment of the retiring subscriber's accounts with the Fund.

The final orders, authorizing either retirement or furlough, are attainable only from the Government of Bengal.

MADRAS.

THE LONDON MAIL of June 24th arrived at Madras on July 25th, per Hindustan.

THE MOPLAHS.—The Malabar correspondent of the Madras Spectator informs us that one of the Moplah leaders, and twenty-nine of his associates, had been brought to trial before the judge of Tellicherry, on the charge of having committed robbery, murder, and arson, and of being accessories to those crimes before the fact. The native assessors, one of whom was a Moplah, brought in a verdict of guilty on both counts, but the judge dissented, believing that the evidence was not sufficient to establish the actual complicity. The case has therefore been referred to the Sudder Court for final decision.

THE UNCOVENANTED OF MADRAS have memorialised the local Government for a larger share of the good things of office, and they have received a reply, in which his Honour in Council does not acknowledge the existence of an uncovenanted service, in the sense held by the petitioners. He regards it as "just the aggregate of uncovenanted persons in the employ of Government," not as "a body of employés, in some sort privileged." The minute concludes in the following terms:—"The Governor in Council cannot close these remarks without observing that the memorialists not only err in speaking of themselves as a distinct recognized service, but they appear to assume as a principle that it is the duty of Government to augment the public establishments (and with them the charges on the revenue) to meet the growing importance and increasing numbers of the classes to which they belong. He would, however, remind them that the State can only employ the number of persons it actually requires, and that the bulk of the people must not depend upon it for support, but upon their own personal exertions."

CAPTAIN ELLIOT.—It is with much regret that we announce the death of Captain C. M. Elliot, of the engineers, which melancholy event took place at Masulipatam, on the 4th instant, in consequence of inflammation of the larynx. Captain Elliot was an officer of much general ability and science, and his observations in certain branches of meteorology, extending over a series of years, had won for him considerable reputation, both in this country and at home. His death is a great loss to the public, and to his corps. He had lately returned from England, to fill a high office in connection with the department of natural science above mentioned. Apart from his professional qualities, he has left a large circle of friends, who will mourn him for his private worth.—Spectator, Aug. 9.

THE RAILWAY.—The Madras committee of the Madras Railway are preparing, says the Spectator, to commence operations immediately.

THE MOTURPHA TAX.—In our last issue, while celebrating the obsequies of the tobacco monopoly, prospectively, we allow, we alluded to another vexatious and depressing imposition, the Moturpha, which, though long since abolished in every other part of India, is still allowed to continue a blot on the fiscal system of this presidency, and for aught we know, will so continue, if no efforts be made to expose its character and working, and to bring to bear against its existence the denunciations of the public voice. Let the contemptible amount of the source of revenue, about one forty-fifth part of the gross returns to the Madras exchequer, coupled with the extreme poverty of the class from whom it is chiefly raised, its inquisitorial character, and the facilities it offers for the exercise of the worst oppression, be all duly considered, and an undeniable claim to our mind is made out for Madras to share in the freedom which the other presidencies have for years enjoyed from this injurious impost. We are aware that it has been recommended, by those, too, whose familiarity with the subject entitles their opinions to the highest respect, that, instead of abolishing the moturpha, it should be converted into a fund for local improvements. We prefer going, and we fancy we side with the majority, for its entire withdrawal; and for this, among other reasons, that the class who would pay for these local improvements would derive the least, and be the last to derive any benefit from them. Besides, the deliverance of a poverty-stricken class from the prying, vexing, grinding importunities of the moturpha collection would be an improvement equal in value to any other that we can conceive of. May the dawn of its appearance be speedily manifest!—Athenaeum, July 22.

REINFORCEMENTS TO BURMAH.—Sir Richard Armstrong has, we hear, made his arrangements for the despatch of the reinforcements to Burmah and sent down the necessary orders to the presidency. H.M.'s 84th will embark from Negapatam; the 30th and 45th M.N.I. from Masulipatam; the 46th from Secunderabad; the 1st fusiliers, the 19th, the B and C troops of horse artillery, with one company of sappers from Madras.—Ibid.

THE "ZENOBIA."—The fears for the safety of H.C.'s steamer Zenobia are at an end; intelligence from Rangoon mentions that she broke her intermediate shaft when south of the Andamans, and was obliged to return to Rangoon.

MAJORS OAKES AND MONTGOMERY.—The officers of the Madras artillery have resolved to place a mural tablet in the Mount church, in honour of Major Oakes of that arm, who fell in the attack on Rangoon. The name of Major Montgomery will also, it is said, be associated with that of his brother officer.

DESTRUCTIVE FIRE.—One of the most destructive fires which has occurred in Madras for years broke out in the ware-rooms of Messrs. Oakes, Partridge and Co., in the great building, commonly called "Waddell's Folly," which was completely destroyed. Messrs. Oakes and Co. have lost property to the extent of nearly three lacs of rupees, one-third of which was insured, and Dr. Cleghorn, Professor of Botany in the Medical College, suffered severely. The fire is believed to be owing to certain boxes of lucifers which had been brought into the premises, and which must have ignited spontaneously.

BRITISH INDIAN ASSOCIATION.—The Madras Hindoo Chronicle reports the proceedings of a meeting of the Madras branch of the British Indian Association, held on the 13th July. The natives of Madras, it appears, have resolved to separate their cause from that of the zemindars of Bengal, with whom they have very little in common. They consider that, to frame a scheme of government for British India, is quite beyond their scope, and they propose to confine themselves to "the representation of tangible grievances, and asking remedies thereto," and, consequently, decline to have any further connection with the Bengal Association.

THE TOBACCO MONOPOLY.—The Athenaeum mentions that the Government of this presidency have abolished the tobacco monopoly, which existed only in Madras.

THE ZEMINDAR OF VASAREDDY.—The Great Kumpani Jehan has been defeated in the now famous case of Lutchmepetty Naidoo, Zemindar of Vasareddy! Mr. Mead, to whose successful agency Lutchmepetty Naidoo will be indebted for restoration to the paternal halls and paternal acres, may be expected, we learn, by the Oriental steamer with the order of the privy council in his overland trunk, commanding the immediate execution of the decree of the 2nd March, 1848. We have congratulations both for Mr. Mead and Lutchmepetty; but our heartiest are reserved for the people of India generally, to whom the issue of this case discloses a cheap, expeditious, and effectual remedy for injuries hitherto considered beyond cure. The effect of the decision will be soon felt in the grievance market.—Athenaeum, Aug. 14.

EAST-INDIAN EMIGRATION to Australia is earnestly urged by the local journals as a promising remedy for the social ills that body labours under.

THE RAJAH of Cochin had set off on his pilgrimage to Benares with a retinue of 500 Brahmias and Sudras.

THE BISHOP of MADRAS left Ootacamund some three weeks back on a tour of visitation, accompanied by his domestic chaplain. His lordship visited Palghat, Coimbatore, Coonoor, and Kotagberry, and returned to Ootacamund early last week.—Athenaeum, Aug. 7.

WEARING MUSTACHES.

Head-Quarters, Ootacamund, July 24, 1852.—Circular No. 70, dated 26th May, 1852, having been issued for the purpose of checking an irregularity on the part of certain indiscreet officers, and the Commander-in-Chief's authority having thereby been vindicated, his Excellency is now pleased to cancel that portion of the G. O. C. C. dated 25th June, 1830, as noted in the margin,* and to permit from this date the European officers of all branches belonging to the Hon. the E. I. Company's army of this presidency to wear mustaches.

Sir Richard Armstrong, when he directed the issue of the Circular above adverted to, entertained no objection to the introduction of the practice now sanctioned, but his Excellency

* "The Commander-in-Chief considers it necessary to explain that the provisions of the Circular Memo., dated Horse Guards, 24th June, 1830, are to be equally applicable to all European officers and troops of this army, whether belonging to the staff, the cavalry, artillery, or infantry; and that neither mustaches nor the beard on the chin are to be allowed to be worn, unless by the native troops."

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 8th arrived at Bombay Aug. 6th, per British Merchant.

THE PARSEE BENEVOLENT INSTITUTION, originally established by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, is now the richest association of the kind in India. The capital in the hands of the president amounts to seven and a half lakhs of rupees, and the punchayet appear utterly unable to expend even the half of their resources. Out of Rs. 36,966, the amount available for distribution in 1851, only 12,743 has been expended, partly in the maintenance of female schools.

PORTUGUESE INDIA.—The Bombay Gazette quotes from a Portuguese paper, the Abelha de Bombaim, a curious illustration of the mode in which the Portuguese govern their settlements in the East. On the 21st June, it is said, the Governor-General of Goa, Baron d'Ourem, summoned before him twenty-two of the principal bankers of that city, and demanded a lakh and a half of rupees for the use of Government, promising to pay three per cent. per annum for the loan. The shroffs pleaded poverty, upon which his Excellency hinted that he should be compelled to increase his demand, and finally dismissed them with the information that the treasury officers would only wait for the contributions till twelve o'clock on the day specified.

ALLEGED OPPRESSION.—The Telegraph publishes a part of a petition addressed by a native of Candeish, Luxmon Row Ayah, to the Sudder Court, complaining of oppression on the part of the magistrate or his subordinates. The petitioner resided in the house of one Govind Row Ayah, who was then in confinement under a sentence subsequently upset by the Sudder Court. It appears that before the decision of the latter court had been received, the magistrate ordered the property of Govind Row to be taken possession of, and, accordingly, early in the morning, the native officials entered the house. They proceeded at once into the women's apartments, and removed all the furniture, and then locking all the women in one room, compelled them to surrender all their jewels, even to the marriage-thread, which, however, was subsequently returned. They then ordered them to give up their good clothes, and put on garments of less value. Even the family idols and cooking utensils were taken away, and the children, who were just looking out for their meal, were obliged to fast for twelve hours, and finally the petitioner and all his family, who had nothing whatever to do with the case of Govind Row Ayah, were turned into the public street after sunset.

THE PERSIAN CONSUL in Bombay, Meerza Mahomed Hussein Khan, has claimed the right of adjudicating all cases in which the litigants are all Persians. The claim was made before the police magistrate with reference to a complaint for assault then pending before him, and he postponed the case for one week, in order to take the opinion of the Government. The concession would make the consul the sole ruler of all the Persians in Bombay, and very awkward questions might even be raised as to the legal status of some of the Parsee families.

ADEN.—We learn from a letter from Aden, that the old chief Shermarklin, whose boats had been seized by us for having plundered some vessels off his shores, was not so much to blame as had been supposed. The man on whose evidence we mainly proceeded has sent a written declaration from Zeyla, that he had not been plundered at all, and that all his missing property had been recovered. So difficult is it to know how to proceed in the redress of grievances! We continued to insist on recompense for the plunder of Hassan Ali's boat, wrecked off Berbera port, as about this there was no dispute: there was no objection to a settlement,—so matters in this quarter will all probably go on amicably and auspiciously. The chief of Berbera, indeed, had got into hot water with the Pasha, and, like a wise man, wished to have as few quarrels on his hands at a time as might be until this was settled. Capt. Cruttenden had been on a visit to Berbera, and witnessed the Great Fair. The dispersion that followed was wonderful for its completeness and celerity. Full 20,000 people had been collected together, and a single kafilah numbered not fewer than 5,000 camels: in forty-eight hours the whole had vanished like a dream! The Emir had in many things gone beyond his most Christian Majesty of Shoa, and amongst others had established a mint of his own, and exercised the royal privilege of coining money for the realm.—Bombay Times.

AGA MAHOMED JAFFER.—We regret to announce the demise of Aga Mahomed Jaffer, which took place on the 20th ult. from fever. He was of the Mogul caste, and a near relative of Aga Mahomed Rahim Shirazee, the agent to the Imaum of Muscat. He was a justice of the peace, and latterly held the office of English and Persian interpreter and confidential adviser to the Persian envoy at Bombay. He was greatly esteemed by the members of his caste, as being the only one amongst them who had ever acquired a thorough knowledge of the English language. By the European community the deceased gentleman will be remembered for the benevolence which induced him to place his premises in Oomercary at the disposal of Dr. Mosgrove as an hospital for the purpose of testing the efficacy of the "cold water cure in cholera," and for his intelligence and gentlemanly demeanour whenever he was met by them in society, as he was very frequently. He was a ripe Persian and English scholar.—Times, Aug. 2.

RECRUITS FROM EUROPE.—We hear that all vessels bringing out recruits from England for her Majesty's regiments serving in Scinde, the Punjab, and the north-west, have been instructed to proceed straight to Kurrachee, where the troops will be disembarked and carried up the Indus in river steamers. This arrangement will save Government a great expense, and the young soldiers many a fatiguing march; besides, the country through which they pass, has a climate at that season of the year peculiarly cool and delightful, and not half so trying to the constitution as the sudden transitions from heat to cold which prevail over all the southern portions of India, during the months of December and January.—Telegraph, Aug. 3.

NO BOMBAY TROOPS are to go to Burmah after all, we understand, but 5,000 men belonging to this presidency are to replace the Madras troops in the stations nearest to our own frontier. A wing (two squadrons) of the 10th hussars, the whole of H.M.'s 86th regt., and four or five native corps, will very shortly be in orders to move forthwith to the Madras presidency. What stations these troops will occupy, is not yet known; but, we imagine the wing of hussars will not go further than Sholapore or Jaulnah, there to replace a Madras native cavalry regiment; whilst the 86th have — so it is rumoured — a long trip before them, and may expect to be sent to Secunderabad or Bellary, to which stations some of the native regiments are also likely to proceed, in order to replace such Madras corps as have been ordered to move to the southward, or towards the coast. Nearly all the stations in the Deccan are to be garrisoned by Bombay troops, until the Madras regiments can be spared from Burmah.—Telegraph, July 30.

LIEUT. ARCHIBALD CRAWFORD, late of the Bombay artillery, was unfortunately drowned on the evening of the 28th July, at the new Bunder, near Panwell. He had only been on board the steamer Lady Falkland a few minutes, when he fell overboard, and although every exertion was made to save him, life was extinct before the body could be recovered.

THE 1st BATAALON BATTALION, commanded by Major Holmes, has volunteered for service in Burma.

THE CIVIL RUM.—On the 15th inst., at the close of a meeting of the members of the civil fund, a committee was proposed and formed for the purpose of adopting in the Bombay civil service a system of aiding in the purchase of the annuities for such gentlemen as are anxious to retire from that service. The above system has been introduced into the Bengal civil service, and has been productive of great good in facilitating promotion. The following gentlemen were voted members of the committee for carrying out the objects of the above proposition:—Metcalf Karim; Gilbert Blane; H. J. Richardson; A. D. Robertson; and A. F. Bellasis, Esqrs.—Telegraph, July 26.

DR. KIRK, of the 2nd Bombay L. C., who died at Rajcote on the 1st instant, entered the army in 1829, and obtained his commission of surgeon in 1846. He was assistant-surgeon with the gendarmes when they were repulsed from Nafesah in Aug. 1849, and he made on the advance a large collection of beautiful sketches of the Murree Hills. It was one of the most extraordinary of all the inexplicable charges brought against Major Gibbome by the Scinde commission, that he had failed in being guided by these in the arrangements for his advance, during which in reality the sketches themselves were made. He was attached to the expedition under Major Harris to Shoa, in 1841-1843, and acted in the threefold capacity of medical officer, draftsman, and naturalist. His account of the journey was published in the Transactions of the Royal Geographical Society of London; and in those of the Bombay Geographical Society. To him, conjointly with Lieut. Barker, L.N., we are indebted for all the astronomical and meteorological observations determining the positions, and all the weather of the climate of the country, and on the withdrawal of Lieut. Barker from the expedition, the whole of this department of duty devolved on Dr. Kirk alone. On the demise of Dr. Heddle, in 1843, he was considered worthy of the appointment of the deputy-assy-master of the mint. In 1847, he returned to England, on sick leave, and came out again in 1849, when he was appointed to the medical charge of the 2nd cavalry. He was a man of excellent talents and large and varied attainments; of much wit and humour, tempered by benevolence and good sense; he was modest and retiring, and eminently upright and high-minded in principle, and in his death the medical profession have lost one of the most worthy of its members.—Bombay Times, June 9.

THE INDIAN NAVY.—Much dissatisfaction is experienced here with the conduct of the belligerent authorities at Rangoon, for having committed the charge of the flotilla for service on the Irrawaddy to Captain Taitton, of the For, with so many officers belonging to the Indian navy at command, his seniors in the service, and of a thousand times his experience in river steam navigation—if indeed the frigate commander have any experience whatever in such matters—a circumstance we are disposed to doubt. At the head of the list stands the commander of our squadron, Captain Lynch, for seven years unceasingly employed on the most difficult river navigation in existence—that of the Euphrates. Next comes Commander G. D. Campbell, an officer of Mesopotamian as of Scinde river experience. Commander Hewett commanded the Phlegathon during the Chinese war, and distinguished himself there for the very description of service now in requisition. All honour to the Royal navy, and where there is anything like a parity of character, experience, and position, betwixt its officers and those of the only other war navy England possesses, let them be conceded to the royal arm; but on no account let the interests of the country be imperilled by giving inexperience what experience alone ought to have enjoyed, or a preference to any branch of the service of the Crown, from which both navies hold commissions, to be purchased at the risk of failure. We trust that to this matter the attention of the Governor-General will be directed, and that the errors complained of may be speedily put an end to.—Times, July 24.

NATIVE MILLIONAIRE.—The Bombay Times publishes the following extract from a native letter:—"I regret to acquaint you of the death, on the 18th instant, of her Highness the Roekmabaye, the wife of the late Tatia Pory, Dewan of Indore. This lady, though advanced in age, was the most wealthy person in India, her firm being prosperous in all parts of this country, under the style of Ganeshdass Krishnabjee. Her death was regretted by the mercantile community of all parts of India."

CEYLON.

The Legislative Council has been opened, and the governor has announced the finances of the colony to be in a condition so favourable, that no embarrassment is likely to result from the final abandonment, in July next year, of the remaining duty of 4d. per lb. on cinnamon, at present yielding at the rate of 10,000. per annum. A very general impression prevails, however, that the new wharfrage dues will go far to supply the deficiency. The quarterly returns for the port of Colombo have been published, enabling us to predict with certainty that the crop of coffee, plantation and native, for the year ending 10th October next, will be the largest ever shipped from Ceylon, fully reaching, if it does not exceed, a total of 400,000 cwt.

The Buddhist question continues to be discussed in the columns of a contemporary journal, the writers in which seem desires to arrogate to themselves the possession of all the Christian faithfulness in Ceylon. But a subject, very difficult in itself, has been so clouded with harsh words and party feeling, that many persons have come to regard the question very much as involving merely a quarrel between the newly-zealous Archdeacon of Colombo and his diocesan.—Colombo Obs., Aug. 14.

SINGAPORE.

SINGAPORE papers to the 1st July continue to chronicle numerous cases of petty piracy which are constantly occurring in the neighbouring waters, the Macao pirates having committed a series of depredations on the junks leaving Singapore. With reference to these marauders, the Free Press says, that "it is well-known that these Macao pirates come to Singapore, refit, make their observations on the trading junks, and then proceed to the east coast of the peninsula, and there wait the arrival of their prey. A striking instance of the serious injury which the unchecked system of piracy that is allowed to exist is inflicting on the trade of Singapore, we may mention as a well-ascertained fact, that the junks which annually bring camphor to this from Formosa, have this year gone to Hong-Kong, being alarmed at the frequent piracies committed in the neighbourhood of Singapore on junks returning to China, &c. from this port." The statement of the revenue and expenditure of Singapore for 1851-2 has been published, and is less favourable than that of the previous year. Accounts of the shipping trade are satisfactory, the number of square-rigged vessels which arrived during 1851-2, exceeding the arrivals of the year preceeding by ninety-five vessels and 54,866 tons. The places with which the trade is said to have made the greatest increase are Borneo, Calcutta, China, Java, Madras, and Siam. "On the whole," says the journal quoted above, "the result of these statements may be considered as satisfactory, for while the apparent increase in the case of China and Calcutta may have in some degree arisen from seeking vessels, which touched here on their way between the two places, a large balance of it must be imputed to an improvement in the trade; and as regards Borneo, Java, Madras, and Siam, the whole amount may be taken as exhibiting a good ade increase in our commercial intercourse with these places."

In Lebanon fever was prevailing to a considerable extent amongst the inhabitants of the plain, and several deaths had occurred. The mining operations of the Eastern Archipelago Company are stated to be progressing favourably.

THE INSURRECTION.—Defeated in every encounter,—without money to carry on the contest, its prestige broken, and altogether wanting in that affection and sympathy which alone form a substantial support to a throne,—the days of the Tartar dynasty appear fast drawing to a close. Choo, or Tsou, the prince of the old Ming family, who has several times made known to his countrymen that he is anxiously watching the progress of events, still remains in the background, cautiously, perhaps, anticipating the time when, the country from end to end being in a state of anarchy, the throne will revert to his possession, an easy prize. In our last it was stated that the insurgents, having attacked Kwei-lin-foo, the capital of Kwangsi, proceeded towards the borders of the adjoining province of Hunan. Dividing, it would appear, into two parties, one body attacked and captured the town of Tai-men at the north, the other crossed the border and took the township Tan and another smaller place, which we do not find in the map of Hunan, called Keemwha. Keem-wha, at last advices, was held to a ransom of 30,000 taels. In Hunan, large gangs immediately joined the insurgents—as a distinguishing mark, wearing blue caps or turbans; the Kwangsi men red.

The information given in our last, that Commissioner Seu had formed a coalition with Saishangah at Kwei-lin-foo, has not proved correct. Saishangah is said to be still at that place; but Seu has had to fight a hard battle, and has been terribly defeated. This engagement has been described as follows:—"The rebels of Lo-king-shan, belonging to Kaou-chow, had encamped on the top of a high mountain, by a dangerous pass. On the 19th of June, Seu resolved on dislodging them; and, leading a body of 4,000 men, proceeded directly to the rear of the mountain where the rebels were; but, anticipating this movement, the insurgents had undermined the ground, dug pits, and thrown up various obstacles. The mines being sprung, fire-arrows and stones were hurled down on the unfortunate army, and fully half of the whole body were killed or seriously wounded. Among the latter, mortally, were the military Keujin Wei-tso-pang and Kwang-yu-kee, spoken of as talented officers." Yeh, governor of Canton, has not got any farther than Lo-ting, in this (the Kwang-tung) province; Seu has fallen back on Wuchau, but a short way from the borders.

We have gleaned a variety of other details, but, as some want confirmation, refrain from publishing them. Of Tientah but little mention is made; and we adhere to the opinion, expressed a long time ago, that Heavenly Virtue is the name of a cabal, whose object is the upsetting of the Tartar dynasty. Unlike Louis Napoleon, who nobly seized the reins before anarchy commenced, the action of the Ming abides his time; waiting to say, without apparent braggadocio, that he is "commissioned by heaven" (great words with Chinese), and, when the contemptible weakness of the Tartar is evident to all, will assert his right; commencing, we hope, a reign as remarkable for liberality as the present one is for the contrary of it.

The body of the deceased Wulantai, having lain in state within the city of Canton for some time, was the other day taken away to Peking. It is a singular fact, that of ten Tartar officers who formed the staff of the old general when he left Canton in June last year, only two are now alive,—four having died from wounds received in the battle, and four from sickness, consequent on the unusual exposure, harass, and anxiety to which they were subjected.—Friend of China, July 23.

SIAM.

The Straits Times informs us that the king of Siam has raised an army of 10,000 men for the invasion of Cambodia, which he is determined to annex to his own dominions. The province belongs at present to the Cochinchinese, who are equally determined not to surrender it, and have sent an army of observation to the frontier. The invasion of Burmah by the British has, as might have been expected, raised the Europeans in the eyes of the Siamese, and there are rumours abroad that it is not impossible the Siamese monarch may become a Christian. A noble of the first rank, formerly a Mahomedan, is said to have been converted by the zealous American missionaries, who are favoured even more than heretofore by the sovereign. The government have commenced the construction of a great war steamer, and her engines have already been ordered from England.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The accounts from the seat of hostilities are comparatively unimportant, affairs remaining in pretty much the same condition as at the date of the last.

On the 1st of July, Governor Cathcart had issued a proclamation, calling for the assistance of every man capable of bearing arms. On the 20th, an explanatory circular appeared, in which it is stated that all he required was a deputation of all the fighting men who could come, to represent the district, and for those who cannot come to assist those who can. The object of General Cathcart's intended expedition was two-fold; first, to test the willingness of the colonists; and secondly, if they came forward, to demonstrate to the Caffres that, independently of the imperial force, there was sufficient strength in the colony to chastise the enemy should he again attack the frontier. If the General found the colonists unwilling, he had ample force to cross the Kei and vindicate the national honour; but this would convince the world that the colonists were deficient in their former energy, and their chief opponent Krel would ever after hold them in contempt. After returning from the expedition beyond the Kei, the Governor says it will be his duty to report to the home Government if the colonists had not rendered him proper support; in that case he will probably be ordered to withdraw his army, when his parting recommendation to them would be to keep less sheep and oxen and more shepherds and herdsmen, for wild men and wild beasts would soon recover their ancient sovereignty in the Fish River and Zuurberg, and the colonists will not be able to drive them out as their fathers did in the olden time.

On the 2nd of August, Lieut. Governor Darling addressed a circular to the civil commissioners of the western districts, in which, after referring to General Cathcart's letter of the 20th of July to the eastern provinces, he says that, by the last newspaper accounts from Graham's Town and Port Elizabeth, the Governor's views had been promptly responded to, and that considerable contributions had been cheerfully rendered towards equipping the contingent from the eastern districts.

Information having been received, that about 600 Caffres and rebel Hottentots were assembled in the neighbourhood of the ruined village of Auckland, threatening an attack upon Alice, Lieut. Col. Napier was ordered to move over the hills from Blinkwater, with three companies of the 91st regiment, a squadron of Cape Mounted Rifles, a company of the Loyal Kat River Hottentots, a detachment of enrolled Fingoes, and two guns. A reinforcement of two companies of the 2nd (Queen's) regiment was also ordered to join him from Fort Hare, and General Cathcart proceeded in person to the camp. The force reached Auckland at daybreak, when the lager and kraals were at once vigorously assailed. The enemy offered no resistance, but fled with their cattle into the Amatola mountains, where pursuit was found to be impracticable. His Excellency having satisfied himself as to the safety of Alice, returned to headquarters—Col. Napier falling back upon his former position at Blinkwater.

On the 6th, 7th, and 8th of July, General Cathcart, having with him the 60th Rifles, a detachment of royal sappers and miners, a company of enrolled Fingoes, and two guns, penetrated and scoured a large portion of the mountain ridges bounding the Waterkloof. He entered through the noted Bush Neck, and ascended the steep pass near Niland's farm, without meeting with resistance. He then assailed with shells and rockets the lurking places of the Caffres and rebel Hottentots within range. On this the southern side of the kloof, however, neither kraals nor cattle tracks were to be seen. A similar force also appeared at the same time at the northern side. Lieut. Col. Napier had been directed to move from Blinkwater with a squadron of the Cape Corps, three companies of the 91st, the Kat River Hottentot Levy, Capt. Lakeman's new company of Europeans, a strong detachment of Fingoes, and two guns. Having gained the table land which commands that part of the kloof, this force proceeded to attack and burn all the kraals within reach. Here a decided resistance was experienced, and one man of Capt. Lakeman's company was killed. "In this day's work," writes General Cathcart, "the loss of the enemy must have been severe, from the well-directed fire of the artillery, and the energy with which the attacks were carried on." On the 8th, the two columns united on the north side, when the Rifle Brigade, with the levies and Fingoes, proceeded vigorously with the work of scouring—rockets being thrown and shells fired into the kloof below, where the numerous kraals were found easily accessible. In these operations one man of the Rifle Brigade was killed and one Fingo wounded. The head-quarters column returned to its former position, repassing the Neck without loss, although followed up by great numbers of the enemy, who undauntedly exchanged shots with the rear-guard of the 60th Rifles. Next day the troops returned to quarters.

On the 14th, Gen. Cathcart again proceeded with the troops to the Waterkloof, accompanied by Capt. Moodie and Capt. Jessie, to select a spot for a permanent post, to contain a large force, and capable of being easily guarded by a few men. A locality was chosen within a few hundred yards of the place where Col. Fordyce was killed. Here it is intended to erect two stone redoubts, securing the approach from the west, and communicating with Blinkwater post by a mule path to be cut through the cliff. This work is to be at once proceeded with, the 60th Rifles, four guns, and a large body of levies being left to hold possession.

This force had a smart affair with the enemy, whom they drew out of the kloof by a feigned retreat. The four guns, which had been previously placed in position, opened unexpectedly upon the pursuing mass; the rifles at the same time pouring in a deadly fire. One hundred of the enemy are said to have fallen; while the troops had only two men of the rifle brigade and one Cape Rifle wounded.

An attack by a body of rebels upon Eland's post was gallantly repulsed by a small detachment of the 91st, stationed there under Capt. Wright, the survivor of the Birkenhead. The enemy appeared in considerable force, and manoeuvred with all the skill of disciplined troops, extending, advancing, and retreating by sound of bugle. After endeavouring, almost successfully, to draw the little garrison into an ambushade, they sounded the "close," and the "advance," and moved on to the post. Capt. Wright, with only twenty-three men of the 91st, then marched out to meet them, and, being joined by a party of the Kat River levy, drove them off with loss.

A fierce attack was made by the enemy upon Fort White, on the 25th July. The assailants were beaten off.

The news from the Sovereignty is very satisfactory; a constitution had been agreed upon by delegates authorised for that purpose by the High Commissioners. Mr. Henry Green, assistant commissary-general, has been sworn in as British resident, in the room of Major Warden, who has been relieved. The inhabitants are giving great attention to wool-growing. From Natal the news is also highly favourable. It has been satisfactorily proved that sugar, rice, and coffee can be grown to advantage. A vessel had arrived from the Mauritius with 15,000 cane-tops to order, while a number of spirited individuals had sent one of their number to Madras for coolies, in order to give the cane a fair trial.

In Cape Town, public attention had been directed to the alleged discovery of coal about twelve miles from the city. A commission, appointed by the Lieut. Governor to inspect the spot, returned without establishing any other fact than the existence of coal; but to what extent, or whether worth working, had to be determined. One or two scientific men are, however, very sanguine as to the result.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At the meeting of the Bombay Branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 15th July, Sir Erskine Perry, Chief Justice of the Supreme Court, President of the Society, read a paper on the geographical distribution of the principal languages of India, and the feasibility of establishing English as a lingua franca.

He commenced by observing that the obstacles interposed by the diversity of languages to the spread of civilization made it very desirable to inquire whether any means existed for encouraging a common medium of intercommunication; but the subject was too literary for a political minute, and perhaps too political for a literary society, yet was worthy of discussion somewhere.

In tracing out the limits of the principal languages, he stated that it is impossible at present to construct an accurate language map, because, first, the limits of neighbouring languages often occur in wild unexplored country; secondly, the vicissitudes of rival Hindu dynasties have successively introduced their languages into the territories of their rivals, so as to occasion much complexity. The Brahmins, at a very early period, made a binary division of the languages of India into northern and southern, allotting five to the former, or the Panch Goar, and five to the latter, or Panch Dravid. The division is not founded on a scientific principle, but approaches so near to accuracy, that it cannot be looked on as other than a fine generalization, and does great credit to their accurate observation and large views. When European scholars first began to study the languages of India, they found so much Sanscrit in the tongues of all of them, that they considered them all to be affiliations of the latter. This opinion is now completely exploded, and all philologists agree that the Tamil of the peninsula, and Sanscrit, are of completely distinct families. With the Tamil are associated the cognate tongues, Canarese, Telinga, Malayalam, and Tulu; with the Sanscrit family, Urqa Hindoo, Bengali, Guzerati, Marathi, and the language of Orissa. In the present state of our knowledge, it cannot be said whether the northern, or Hindi family, is the language of an invading race from the north-west,—a Pracrit, as it were, of Sanscrit,—or whether the aboriginal tongue of the inhabitants has received enrichments from Sanscrit, in such large proportion as almost to efface the original staple of the language. In the distribution of these languages, two principal causes seem to have operated: first, the geological features of the country; second, the accident of some dynasty arising, who were able to extend their mastery over a large tract. Thus the Hindi-speaking population of Hindoostan, divided from Bengal by the high barren lands, the shores of the Vindhya which separate Bengal from Bahar, and the Bengal kingdom of Goar, which arose under favourable circumstances, would enable a uniform language to rise amongst thirty millions of people. The geological causes separating Guzerat from Maratha are also very striking. The Guzars, excellent cultivators, followed the black soil to the south, as far as it extended along the shores of the Gulf of Cambay; the Marathas, on the contrary, mountaineers, clung to their hills, and go no further to the north than the Kolwan hills extend. In the peninsula, the same causes may be seen in operation: thus the Canarese is essentially a plateau language; the Tulu and Malayalam are essentially Concani languages, shut out from the plateau by the lofty western ghats; the Tamil, Telinga, and Urya are also in their original Concani or coast languages; but as the eastern ghats are far more accessible than the western ghats, these languages found little difficulty in surmounting the plateau, and spreading themselves over its plains.

Sir Erskine then discussed the question whether anything can be done by provision and forethought to break down the barriers which distinct languages interpose between communication to the circulation of ideas. The growth of a lingua franca usually arises from a spontaneous movement on the part of nations animated by commercial interests. Thus the language of the Venetian traders was picked up, not only by the Asiatic inhabitants of the Levant, but by all other European traders, and thus became the language of the Franks, or a Feringhi Basha. The Malay is another example. But political causes have been by far the most potent in effecting changes upon language, and he cited many cases from history to prove this position.

On the question whether anything can be done to diffuse the knowledge of English as an instrument of civilization and good government, the legislative should take heed of some striking symptoms which denote that a spontaneous movement towards the study is in operation at the present moment; educated natives of Bombay, Calcutta, the North-West Provinces and Madras can communicate with one another in no other language than English. The educated natives of Bombay never use any other language for writing to each other. Where the uses and convenience of mankind are leading them into any particular course, there the legislator may step in with effect, and accelerate the beneficial movement by a judicious measure in a remarkable degree. No one supposes that an enactment to make the Marwadi traders keep their books in English would be operative; but the introduction of English as the language of public records, and the knowledge of it as a qualification for office, would direct the attention of all the better classes of India to its study, and fill its cutcherries with well-qualified umedwars.

Dr. Wilson, in an additional notice of the funeral remains from Gehrarah, in Mesopotamia, pointed out the striking agreement of the most important of them with those discovered by the late Capt. Newbold in the sepulchres of Pandavaram Dewal, in the south of India, and expressed his opinion as on the whole accordant with that of Capt. Newbold, who wrote as follows:—“They appear to me to be the almost only tangible vestiges remaining to us, except Holy Writ, of certain similarities in the languages of nations now wide asunder, and the traditions which prevail in almost every Eastern nation, of an extensive migration, at a period of high antiquity, of one family of the human race, radiating in various directions from one given centre at a time, ‘when the whole earth was of one family and one speech,’ which the Lord confounded, and from thence did scatter them abroad upon the face of all the earth; in a word, they are the footmarks of the builders of Babel, witnesses of the truth of sacred history all eloquent in their silence, similarity, and distinctness.” It is curious, added Dr. Wilson, that, in the neighbourhood of Babylon itself, here referred to, a sarcophagus has been found exactly agreeing with that procured in India.

The Rev. Dr. Stevenson presented to the Society a notice, with a translation, of a Sanscrit inscription, which is in the porch of the Great Cave at Kenery, Salsette. This inscription is in the Sanscrit language, and the only one there that is in that language, the rest being in Pracrit. The most remarkable point in this inscription is its containing the name of Buddhaghassa, famous in Ceylon and the Eastern Peninsula, as being the Buddhist apostle of Siam and Burmah. According to the Ceylonese authorities, he left India A.D. 410. As this inscription records the furnishing of the temple with seats by one of his auditors, it must have been excavated before that period.

At a preceding meeting of the same Society, the Rev. J. M. Mitchell read a paper upon Zend literature, in continuation of one on the same subject read about eighteen months ago.

He briefly referred to the continuation by Dr. Loth, of those investigations connecting the mythology of the Veda and the Zendavesta which had been so skilfully commenced in his dissertation on the legend of Feridun; but the paper was mainly occupied with an explanation of the very important works of Dr. Spiegel, professor of Oriental languages at Erlangen. The most important of these are, first, papers in the Journal of the Royal Academy of Sciences at Munich, and in the Journal of the German Oriental Society, chiefly occupied with the discussion of the criticism of the text of the Zendavesta; secondly, a new translation of the nineteenth fargard of the Vendidad, with copious notes; third, a grammar of what the professor calls the Parsee language; fourth, an edition of the Zendavesta itself.

With regard to the new version by Spiegel of the nineteenth fargard of the Vendidad, Mr. Mitchell submitted a translation of the German into English, and also an English version, by Mr. Dhanjibhai Framjee, of the Gujarati translation by Dastur Framji Aspandiarji. Doubts had often been expressed, and by none more than some of the Parsis themselves, as to the correctness of Framji Aspandiarji's version, and as no other translation into Gujarati is accessible (the one executed by the late Chief Dastur Edulji Darabji being locked up, apparently, in the archives of the Panchayet), it is of importance to fix its value. The result of a careful comparison of the three versions aforesaid is that, whilst Anquetil Duperron is perpetually departing both from Spiegel and Framji, the latter two agree in most things of importance. Spiegel tells us that he has no acquaintance with the Gujarati versions, so that this coincidence between the professor and the Dastur is strong primâ facie evidence that they are both right.

With regard to the grammar of the Parsi language, the learned professor has found, in studying the multifarious writings included in the Zendavesta, and the works therewith connected, that the treatises included under what is termed Pehlvi are, in fact, in two different languages; and one of these, for want of a better name, he has called the Parsi language, and has entered, in the work in question, into a full examination of its character. He finds it intermediate between the proper Pehlvi (Huzvares) and the modern Persian. Many things in the latter, otherwise unintelligible, are cleared up by it. It seems related to the Deri dialect, to which again the idiom of the great national epic of Persia, the Shah Nameh, approximates. Besides this distinction in the works generally termed Pehlivi, the so-called Zend also divides itself, on careful examination, into two languages, or dialects. Spiegel finds that the second part of the Yagna is written in an idiom very considerably different from that of the first part, and apparently more ancient. He holds that the oldest part of the Avasta is the second part of the Yagna; the next oldest the Vendidad; and the next the first part of the Yagna. (See this subject fully examined in a remarkable paper in Weber's Indische Studien, vol. i. pp. 303-315.)

But the most important of all Spiegel's labours is his edition of the Zendavesta itself, which is now in the press at Vienna. A copy of the first part of the work was submitted to the members present, and was much admired for the beauty of the typography. The Oriental part will consist of three volumes, 8vo. and will contain the original text, the Pehlivi version, a copious list of various readings, and a German translation of the whole.

According to Count Krasinski (Religious History of the Slavonic Nations), the language of the Lithuanians, or Lettonians, a branch of the great Indo-Germanic family, is so nearly related to the Sanscrit, that the late Professor Bohlen, of Königsberg, a great Sanscrit scholar, found that the Lithuanian peasants could perfectly understand whole phrases in Sanscrit which he submitted to them.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

MONDAY, September 20, 1852.

THE decease of a public man at the advanced age of eighty-three, whose growing infirmities have for several years past rendered his tenure of life most precarious, can scarcely be regarded as unexpected; yet the death of the Duke of Wellington has been felt throughout the country as if it were a sudden blow. The truth is, that we had not realized to the full extent the removal for ever of such a man, upon whom, in all political emergencies, the community and the Government have been accustomed to lean. The loss of his military talents, great as they were, may be repaired; we do not want soldiers educated in his school, who, if their services were required in the field, might emulate them. In diplomatic skill and experience, rivals of the Duke might be still more readily found. As a statesman and legislator, it would be too much to claim for him a greater measure of abilities than has been possessed by some of his contemporaries. But when all these great qualities were combined in one individual, whose profound sagacity, deep discernment, firmness of purpose, fertility of resources, prudence and circumspection, had been exercised and disciplined in a career like that of the great man who has just departed, we may well deem the loss of him irreparable, and doubt whether the world will ever behold his like again. The conviction that in all cases of state difficulty, foreign or domestic, the opinion of the Duke would be sound and sensible, made him invaluable as a counsellor. His name was a tower of strength to the country. The reputation which he enjoyed throughout Europe, in civil as well as military affairs, gave a certain degree of weight to the nation in its intercourse with foreign powers. Though he has for some time ceased to take any share in the deliberations of the Cabinet, his connection with the Government in a military capacity gave a kind of indirect support to its operations which no mere commander-in-chief had ever conferred. In short, the disappearance of the Great Duke, albeit his physical energies have been for some time on the wane, has left a chasm which will be long perceived and lamented.

The defects in the character of the Duke of Wellington seem to have been, in a great degree, the almost unavoidable result of the conflict of opposite virtues which entered into its composition. The qualities which made him so distinguished a commander of armies, communicated a hardness and inflexibility to his civil administration. His experience of the mischief wrought by political agitation in foreign countries disposed him to favour rather a repressive than a liberal policy in his own. But it must be remembered that he emancipated the Roman Catholics, and advocated the free-trade measures of Sir Robert Peel.

In comparison with the services which this truly great personage rendered to his country and to mankind, the blemishes which diversify, rather than disfigure, his character, become trivial indeed. Of his Indian career it has been truly said that it would alone have earned for him a conspicuous place in history. The eminent military talents, and the extraordinary perseverance, displayed by him in the Peninsula, consummated by a victory in Belgium which liberated Europe from a threatened thralldom, and gave it uninterrupted peace, required no aid from services of a civil kind to found a title to the admiration of posterity. But the merits of the Duke of Wellington, as a negotiator, as a minister, and as a statesman, would stand prominent were they not overpowered by the effulgence of his fame as a soldier.

There is one consideration which, after the first access of sorrow has subsided, may help to reconcile the country to a loss which, great as it is, might have befallen us at a time when its weight would have been heavier. Whilst the Duke lived, the associations that clung to the conqueror of Napoleon, and the honours he bore connected with the humiliation of France, kept national jealousies from extinction, which now, it may be hoped, are buried in his grave.

A RECENT American work of fiction,* powerfully written, calculated by its intense dramatic interest to enchain attention and arouse the feelings and passions, and which is circulating with the rapidity of fire in Europe as well as the United States, presents to the world a frightful picture of the horrors of Negro slavery, with the avowed aim of accomplishing what the voice of religion, the pleading of humanity, the protests of the wise and the good, argument, eloquence, and example, have attempted in vain. It proposes to shame down the cruel institution; to expose it to the scorn, contempt, and hatred of mankind; to put the slaveholder out of the pale of civilized society, and to brand the Southern States of the American Union with such a dark moral dye, as to distinguish them by their complexion from their fellow states. This end the authoress professes to seek, not by exaggerating the evils of slavery, or raising imaginary phantoms of tyranny, but by showing what slavery in America really is; by exhibiting it, in its best and its worst phases; as "a living dramatic reality." Accordingly, the separate incidents that compose the narrative, she tells us, are to a very great extent authentic, having occurred under her own observation, or that of her friends. "She or her friends have known characters the counterpart of almost all that are introduced; and many of the sayings are word for word as heard by herself or reported to her."

* Uncle Tom's Cabin; or Negro Life in the Slave States of America. By Harriet Beecher Stowe.

We can believe this. The incidents, however appalling, are not without parallel in the records of slavery in the British West Indies in by-gone times. The brutality of a negro might stand even in favourable contrast beside that of a Huggins.

Exception has not been taken; as far as we can learn, in America, to the accuracy of the portraits. It seems to be admitted that the descriptions are true as regards individual cases, which is all that Mrs. Stowe has alleged. She acknowledges that there are generous men in the Southern States who bewail the existence of slavery, and do their utmost to mitigate its miseries. She has introduced into her novel, as one of the leading agents, a slave-owner of the kindest and most indulgent nature, whose failing is, perhaps, on the side of lenity towards a class, the abject condition of which tends to extinguish the good and to foster the growth of all bad qualities. But she justly asks, "Cannot the ruffian, the brutal, the debased, by slave-law, own just as many slaves as the best and purest? Are the honourable, the just, the high-minded, and the compassionate, the majority anywhere in this world?"

The objection to the work is of another kind, founded upon its avowed object. It has been said that to raise an outcry against slavery is really to increase the difficulty, and lessen the chances of systematic abolition; that the owners of human cattle in the slave states are the victims of an institution, upon the maintenance of which their property depends; that to make the whole, as it were, responsible for the offences of a few, and thus confound the innocent with the guilty, will unite all in a bond of resistance against what will be deemed an unjust sentence, which will operate as persecution. But these and similar arguments were urged against the emancipation of our West India slaves, and for a long time they exerted an influence even upon our abolitionists at home, who, moreover, felt that sudden emancipation would not benefit the slaves themselves. "Not only I," said Mr. Wilberforce, in 1822, "but all the chief advocates of the abolition, declared from the first that our object was, by ameliorating regulations, and by stopping the influx of uninstructed savages, to advance slowly towards the period when these unhappy beings might exchange their degraded state of slavery for that of a free and industrious peasantry." Efforts were accordingly made for several years to induce the colonial legislatures and the slave-owners to co-operate in this benevolent and politic work with the philanthropists in this country, but in vain; and, seven years later, Mr. Wilberforce came to the conclusion that "we must endeavour to produce throughout the whole country a just sense of our crime in maintaining such a cruel system." This was done, and three years after the Abolition Act passed.

There are certain public ills the cure of which is out of the reach of every remedy but one,—an expression of the universal indignation of mankind. Of this class of evils, negro slavery is a conspicuous example. Slavery, as an institution, in particular societies, may, under certain circumstances, be palliated, perhaps defended; but the institution of negro slavery is so detestable in its origin, and has so many horrible features, that its existence in any society is utterly indefensible, and can be tolerated only upon the ground that greater evils would attend its abolition. No such plea can be alleged on the part of the slave states of America, any more than in the case of our West-Indian colonies. Indemnification for property can be made in one instance as well as in another, and lessons of precaution may be derived from the example set by England, that would lessen and even annihilate the ills with which hasty emancipation visited the proprietors of estates in the West Indies.

But however formidable might be the dangers attending the extinction of negro slavery in America, they ought to be incurred and grappled with. That great nation, which is making such rapid strides in all the paths of civilization, is disgraced by this barbarous institution, though confined to only a part of its territories. What American can read the following animated speech of an accomplished Mulatto man, in Kentucky, as delivered in Mrs. Stowe's work, without a feeling of degradation? In reply to the rebuke of a friend; that by endeavouring to escape to Canada, he was going to break the laws of his country, George Harris answers:—

"My country! What country have I, or any one, like me, born of a slave mother? What laws are there for us? We don't make them: all they do for us is to crush us. Don't you tell us all, once a year, that governments derive their just power from the consent of the governed? Look at my face,—look at my hands,—look at my body: am not I a man as much as you are! Well; hear what I tell you. I had a father—one of your Kentucky gentlemen,—who didn't think enough of me to keep me from being sold, with his dogs and horses, to satisfy the estate, when he died. I saw my mother put up at sheriff's sale, with her seven children. They were sold before her eyes, one by one, all to different masters. I was the youngest. She came and knelt down before old mas'r, and begged him to buy her with me, that she might have at least one child with her; and he kicked her away with his heavy boot. I saw him do it, and the last I heard was her moans and screams, when I was tied to his horse's neck, to be carried off to his place. My master traded with one of the men and bought my oldest sister. She was a pious, good girl, and as handsome as my poor mother had been. She was well brought up, and had good manners. Sir, I have heard her whipped, when it seemed as if every blow cut into my heart, and I could not help her. She was whipped for wanting to live a decent Christian life, such as your laws give no slave-girl a right to live. At last, I saw her chained with a trader's gang, to be sent to market in Orleans—sent there for nothing but that. I grew up: not a living soul cared for me more than a dog: nothing but whippings, scolding, starving. I have been glad to take the bones they threw to their dogs. I never had a kind word spoken to me till I came to your factory. You treated me well; you encouraged me to do well; to learn to read and write. Then I found a wife. You know how beautiful she was. She is as good as she is beautiful, and I was so happy. Now comes my master, and takes me from all I like, and sends me down to the very dirt. And why? To teach me I'm only a nigger. Last of all he comes between me and my wife, and says I shall give her up, and live with another woman. And all this your laws give him power to do, in spite of God or man. Do you call these laws of my country? Sir, I haven't any country; any more than I have any father."

And this is a system that must be dealt with mildly, and abstemiously, lest the agents, one portion of a nation, virtually condemned by the other, should be wounded and irritated! Rather let it be denounced by a tempest of execration, and, possibly, the demands of justice, refused to reason, may be conceded to shame.

A WRITER in the Times has urged the superiority of a land expedition against the capital of Burmah, through Arracan, by the Aeng pass, over a long water route up the Irrawaddy. Looking at the map, whence it would appear that the pass in question is not more than about forty miles from the Irrawaddy at Patanago, which is higher up the river than Prome eighty or ninety miles, and consequently so much nearer Ava, the Arracan route seems, indeed, to be preferable. But, in military operations, other considerations besides distance enter into the question, and it has been found that the Aeng road presents no facilities for the transport of artillery, or accommodation for the passage of more than a limited number of troops at one time. According to an article which is inserted in our Bengal intelligence, it would be easier to send troops by sea to Bassein, at the very mouth of the Irrawaddy, and by river steamers up the river to Patanago, than to convey them by sea to Sandoway, and from thence across the country by the Aeng pass to that town. It has been discovered, however, that the Aeng creek is navigable thirty miles farther than had been supposed, and the Assistant Commissioner in Arracan has opened a communication overland between that place and Bassein.

There is the less necessity for incurring the risks of a land march through a swampy, jungly, unexplored country, now that we have an efficient steam navy in the Irrawaddy, which, as the result of Captain Tarleton's expedition proves, can reach Prome in four days from Rangoon, and Ava in eight or nine. Double this time would carry the British army to the capital in little more than a fortnight, through the line of the enemy's defences, the destruction of which may be essential to the effectual humbling of the court of Ava. Moreover, there appears some hope, from the manifest feeling of the Burmese people, that the presence of the British fleet and army in the lower Irrawaddy, may enlist their services in our favour. "Nothing can be more evident," says a Calcutta journal, "than the anxious desire of the people throughout the lower provinces to come under English rule." The overthrow of the dynasty of Alompra seems to be indispensable to a permanent peace with Burmah, and this event is by no means improbable.

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

THE history of a life so full of incidents as that of the late Duke of Wellington, extending over a long and most eventful period, can be compressed into the space we are able to appropriate even to such a subject only by restricting our notice to such a portion of it as falls more immediately within our province,—namely, his military career in India.

It is remarkable that, although the Duke was descended from a noble family, some degree of doubt and uncertainty should hang over the precise date of his birth, the place where he first saw the light, and even his family name. He was the third son of the first Earl of Mornington, and was born in the year 1769, in Ireland; but whether at Dangan Castle, in the county of Meath, or at Mornington House, Dublin; and whether on the 30th April or the 1st May, are points hitherto unsettled. The family of De Wellesley, or Wellesley, of Anglo-Saxon origin, is of great antiquity in Ireland: the first ancestor who went thither from England, in 1172, was William de Wellesley, standard-bearer to King Henry II. The name, about the middle of the sixteenth century, became corrupted from Wellesley to Wellsley, Wesley, Westley, and finally Wesley. Mr. Garret (or Gerald) Wesley, of Dangan, county of Meath, the last of that name, dying in 1728, without issue, devised his estates to his cousin-germane, Richard Colley (or Cowley), on condition that he and his heirs took the name of Wesley. This Richard Colley, afterwards Wesley, in 1746, was created Baron Morning-ton of Ireland; and his son, advanced in the Irish peerage to an earldom, was the father of the Duke of Wellington.

Arthur Wesley,—for thus he wrote his name at the outset of his career,—was deprived of his father at the age of twelve years. His mother, daughter of the first Viscount Dungannon, a lady of sense and talents, directed his early education. In due time he was sent to Eton, and ultimately to the military academy of Angers, in France, with the view of preparing him, as a younger son, for the profession of arms. In 1787, he obtained an ensigncy in the 73rd Foot, and subsequently became lieutenant in the 76th and 41st regiments of infantry, and in the 12th Light Dragoons. In 1791, he was promoted to a company in the 59th, and in 1793, was made major in the 33rd Foot, of which corps he became, by purchase, lieutenant-colonel in the same year. In the latter capacity, in 1794, when only twenty-five, he embarked with his regiment for Flanders, and served his first campaign under Lord Moira and the Duke of York. He was engaged in several affairs, and distinguished himself as commander of the rear-guard, in covering the retreat of the British army, having been selected for that important and trying post by General Dundas. On its return to England, the 33rd was destined to the West Indies; but, owing to adverse weather and other causes, the sailing of the fleet was delayed, and the regiment was ordered to the East Indies. Illness prevented its young lieutenant-colonel from accompanying his corps; but he followed speedily, and in 1797 landed at Calcutta, where he was soon joined by his distinguished brother, then Earl of Mornington, who had been appointed Governor-General of India,—a circumstance which probably afforded to the young officer opportunities, that might not otherwise have offered, for displaying his talents. During the voyage, we are told by Major Sherer, upon the authority of a fellow-passenger, the future conqueror of Assaye "passed much time in his cabin, diligently reading, to prepare himself for command and conduct in that country."

The vigorous policy of Lord Mornington, from which we date a splendid era in our Indian history, demanded energetic instruments in the military department. The feeble and temporizing administration of his predecessor had suffered the elements of political danger to acquire strength, so that Tippoo Sulthan, the Malabattas, and the French, were severally menacing our power in India. To the former, as the most formidable, the attention of the Governor-General was immediately directed, since the Sulthan was not only in possession of large resources, but in communication with the French republicans in the Mauritius.

General Harris, the commander-in-chief at Madras, was accordingly directed to march into the Carnatic and against Seringapatam, Tippoo's capital. The army collected for these objects, increased by reinforcements from Bengal, including the 33rd regiment, commenced its march from Vellore on the 3rd February, 1799, crossed the Mysore frontier on the 7th March, and on the 4th May, the fortress of Seringapatam was in our possession, the campaign had ended, and Mysore was at our mercy.

In these operations, Lieutenant-Colonel Wellesley commanded not merely his own corps, but the Nizam's Contingent. Whilst the forces were collecting at Vellore, he held the temporary command. In the advance, at the battle of Mallavelly, Wellesley's division, on the left, opposed to the enemy's right, performed the great feat of the day, by overthrowing a large body of the enemy posted in a strong position.

At the siege of Seringapatam an incident occurred which has been much misrepresented in its details. Colonel Wellesley was directed to carry a tope, that of Sultan Pettah, whence an advanced post of the enemy annoyed the besiegers. He entered the tope with the 33rd, which was assailed by a hot fire, and, owing to the darkness of the night, got into confusion, in com-sequence of which the attack then failed; but it was renewed successfully the following day. General Harris, in his Journal, records the incident thus: "6th April, 1799. Remained under great anxiety till near twelve at night, from the fear our troops had fired on each other. Near twelve, Colonel Wellesley came to my tent, in a good deal of agitation, to say he had not carried the tope. It proved that the 33rd, with which he attacked, got into confusion, and could not be formed, which was a great pity, as it must be particularly unpleasant to him." In Allison's History of Europe, the young officer is represented as entering the general's tent, before he was awake, throwing himself upon a table, and falling fast asleep!

Colonel Wellesley commanded in the trenches during the siege, and when the fortress was captured, he was selected to command the city, by reason of "his discretion, judgment, temper, and integrity." In this office he was charged with duties totally distinct in their nature from the ordinary routine of military service, including measures of finance, leaving a large margin of discretion. The manner in which he performed these duties, was long remembered with gratitude by the inhabitants of Seringapatam. He had to reconstruct the whole native administration, to appoint officers, repair roads, open communications, and provide for the numberless exigencies of the whole Mysore state.

In the fulfilment of these duties he had to put down a Mahratta adventurer named Dhoondia Waugh, who had been imprisoned by Tipoo, and was liberated without due examination on the capture of Seringapatam. Dhoondia, collecting a body of men of desperate fortunes, set up for himself, and in 1800 threatened Mysore with 5,000 horse. Colonel Wellesley took the command of a force and hastened against the marauder, whom he surprised by forced marches, and, without waiting for the rest of his troops, he attacked with a party of European dragoons and some native cavalry, cutting up the whole horde, and killing their chief, who called himself "the king of the world." An offer had been made to Colonel Wellesley to take off this freebooter by assassination, but he rejected it with disdain, and upon the death of Dhoondia, he took charge of his favourite son, whom he protected during his stay in India.

The success of the English in Mysore alarmed the Mahratta leaders, one of whom, Scindia, had, besides a large force of native cavalry, brigades of infantry disciplined and officered by Frenchmen, numbering nearly 20,000. The Peishwa, the nominal head of the Mahratta confederacy, was a mere tool in the hands of this chieftain, with whom his rival, Holkar, was at issue, and during one of their conflicts for supremacy, he fled to Bassein, where he negotiated a treaty with the British, in which he stipulated to receive a subsidiary force, cede territory for their subsistence, and discharge all French and other foreigners from his service. To support the Peishwa, and to enforce this treaty, the Madras army, under General Stuart, advanced to the Toombudra, in 1802, and Major-General Wellesley (who had attained this rank in April of that year) was detached with a select corps to march upon Poonah, to enable the Peishwa to take possession of his capital. Hearing that one of Holkar's chiefs intended to plunder the city, he made a march of sixty miles in thirty hours, entered Poonah with his cavalry, the Mahrattas flying at his approach, and the Peishwa was reinstated in his authority.

This successful interposition united the two Mahratta chieftains, Scindia and Holkar, in a league against the British. To meet this emergency, Lord Mornington provided an adequate force, investing the officers in command of the several armies with full discretionary powers, civil and political, and whilst Lord Lake took the field against the Mahrattas in Upper India, Major-General Wellesley was ordered to commence operations against those in the Deccan, with an army of less than 10,000 men, Europeans and natives.

In these operations, the future hero of Waterloo developed diplomatic as well as military talents in a very high degree. The result was the victory of Assaye, fought in September, 1803, in which the host of Scindia, consisting of 50,000 men, was thoroughly beaten by not more than 4,500. "Never was any victory gained under so many disadvantages," says Mr. Southey; "superior arms and discipline have often prevailed against as great a numerical difference; but it would be describing the least part of this day's glory to say that the number of the enemy was as ten to one: they had disciplined troops in the field under European officers who more than doubled the British force; they had 100 pieces of cannon, which were served with perfect skill, and which the British, without the aid of artillery, twice won with the bayonet."

This was the first pitched battle in which the Duke had commanded, and it established not only his own military reputation, but the pre-eminence of the British troops, native as well as European, in the East.

Endeavours were now made by Scindia to accomplish by negotiation and intrigue what he had failed to effect by force; but in these endeavours he was baffled by the vigilance of the British commander, who, following up his success, gave the Mahratta chief and the Berar rajah another overthrow at Argaum, which enabled him to dictate to Scindia a treaty of peace in December, 1803. "The conduct of this war," observes a biographer of the Duke, "would have alone afforded glory enough for a single life, and secured for the British commander a niche in history."

Major-General (now Sir Arthur) Wellesley, after the conclusion of the Mahratta war, returned to England in 1805, and from this period, his services were dedicated to the interests of his country and the world in Europe, which they filled with his fame. It would lead us far beyond the limits to which we are confined, were we merely to chronicle the events which have imparted to the renown of the "great Duke" an imperishable lustre, as the most consummate military commander of ancient or modern times.

On the 13th September the Duke retired to rest at Walmer Castle in apparent health. Early on the following morning, his valet was desired by him to send for his medical attendant, who found his illustrious patient suffering from pains in the chest and stomach, as he supposed, from indigestion, but in the full possession of his faculties. In the course of the forenoon, however, he was seized with a succession of fits, which deprived him of speech and apparently of consciousness, and he expired in the afternoon so quietly that the moment of his decease was not observed by those about him.

The Duke married in 1806 the Hon. Catherine Pakenham, sister of the Earl of Longford, and by this lady (who died in 1831) he has left two sons, the eldest of whom succeeds to his British hereditary honours. The second son, Lord Charles Wellesley, is a colonel in the army and Member of Parliament for Windsor.

THE UPPER INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.

THIS project, full details of which appear in our advertisement columns, has attracted much notice in the city, and is very favourably spoken of in various journals. We extract the following testimonies from two, whose opinions upon such a subject are entitled to weight:—

A railway company, called the Upper India, makes its appearance this week, to construct railways in that part of our dominions. The plan is to commence at Allahabad, where the navigation of the Ganges for steamers terminates, and to carry an iron road in time to Lahore and the Indus. The country is favourable for the project, being generally flat. In the first instance the railway will only be constructed to Cawnpore, the largest military station in India, with which there is a great deal of communication. It will be afterwards extended. The project seems feasible; and our empire in India will be more securely preserved by carrying thither all the advantages of our civilization than by other means. Private enterprise cannot do much there, however, unless backed by the Indian Government, and this plan seems deserving of its support, and is likely, we are informed, to receive it.—Economist.

The two important facts, of the extremely favourable character of the country through which the line will pass (Allahabad to Cawnpore), and the large amount of traffic that now passes in that route, appear to be so well ascertained and authenticated, that we shall not now stop to inquire as to the authorities. We shall, therefore, proceed at once to deal with the results obtained.

Owing to the unusual levelness of the country, and the absence of all engineering difficulties whatever, the cost of the line, unfurnished with working stock, is estimated at 3,000l. per mile. Another 2,000l. a mile covers the cost of the working stock, &c.; so that for 5,000l. the line will be completely made and stocked. This is on the American scale of cheapness. In American railways are excellent properties, not because they have large streams of traffic, but because their capital cost is light.

But the Upper India Railway is not only to be made as cheaply as the cheapest of the American railways, but its traffic is enormous. The existing traffic passing over every mile of the line is "officially ascertained" to be 1,000,000 tons of goods per annum, and 100,000 passengers per annum, besides some other traffic.

What amount of revenue per mile per annum will this traffic produce? It is stated, that the toll now paid for goods is 4d. to 6d. per ton per mile. Assume that the railway company—carrying in half an hour what now takes a whole day—had the lower tariff, namely 4d. per mile. The gross revenue from goods alone would then be as much as 16,500l. per mile per annum.

But let us assume that instead of 4d. per ton per mile, and 2d. per passenger per mile, the railway charges should be as low as 1d. for both descriptions of traffic. We are not aware that charges so low as 1d. would be imposed on the railway company. Our only reason for assuming a 1d. instead of 4d. and 2d. is merely to see what the position of the company would, in that event, be.

	Per annum per mile.
The goods traffic at 1d. per ton per mile would yield	£4,125
Passenger, 1d. per mile, about	400
	£4,525
Working expenses at 50 per cent.	2,262

Profit 2,262
2,262l. per mile per annum profit on a capital cost of 5,000l. per mile is equal to a dividend of about 50 per cent. per annum. So that we see, at this low capital cost, the existing traffic would yield, taken at rates much lower than those now charged—namely, at a 1d. per mile per ton and per passenger,—magnificent dividends.

Our readers are of course aware of the existence of the East-Indian Railway Company, a company guaranteed by the government a minimum dividend of five per cent. per annum, whose line is in course of formation, and destined we believe to be of great service to the country. Their line runs from Calcutta to Rajmahal (or Rajmahl), Rajmahal being a town at the head of the Delta of the Ganges. Originally, that line was to have taken another route, namely from Calcutta to Mirzapore. There is very little doubt that it was a wise determination to deviate its original route, going to Rajmahal, in place of Mirzapore, since to get to Mirzapore in a direct line across the country, as was intended, a vast district of almost barren and yet most difficult country would have had to be traversed, incurring enormous capital cost, and carrying the line for hundreds of miles completely out of the way of traffic.

In taking the Rajmahal route, the East-Indian Railway Company adopted, it appears, the line which Mr. W. P. Andrew, the managing director of the Upper-India Railway Company, projected or suggested. Mr. W. P. Andrew is well known as the author of a work which in its day acquired great celebrity, entitled, "Indian Railways, by an Old Indian Postmaster." That work was published in the year 1846. At pages 122 and 123 (of the second edition), we find Mr. Andrew writing thus—

"The East-Indian (from Calcutta to Mirzapore) declining all co-operation with the river, would do this in a slow and most expensive manner, if allowed to carry its plans into effect, and be entirely dependent on the through traffic between the termini. The Great Western (from Calcutta to Rajmahal), and the line from Allahabad to Delhi, passing many towns and villages, and taking advantage of the river navigation where it is available (instead of superseding, would stimulate corresponding improvements in the river), they would, at half the cost, and in one-quarter of the time, supply this now indispensable desideratum. By adopting the river from Rajmahal to Allahabad, the average cost of construction would be reduced one-half, as that portion between Bardwan and Allahabad, which comprises all the difficulties, would not be included in the general estimate for a complete communication between Calcutta and the Sutlej, and the outlay would be saved for making four hundred miles of railway through a barren, desolate, and difficult country. On the whole, then, it is our conviction that the Great Western of Bengal (from Calcutta to Rajmahal) and the line from Allahabad to Delhi, co-operating with fleets of river steamers, from Rajmahal to Allahabad, would be at once not only the most judicious, the easiest, and least costly, the soonest constructed, and in every other point of view the most advantageous mode of introducing the railway system into India, but most probably the only practicable mode that is at present before Government."

Our readers will understand that, at the time Mr. Andrew then wrote (in 1846), the East-Indian Railway Company's line was to go, as he in the above quotation mentions, from Calcutta to Mirzapore. It was against this plan that he wrote, suggesting the better one of running from Calcutta to Rajmahal, taking advantage of the good river navigation from Rajmahal to Allahabad, and then constructing a line from Allahabad to Delhi, and Cawnpore, Agra, &c.—Herapath's Journal.

ABD-EL-KADER.—The liberation of Abd-el-Kader has of late been talked of, on condition, it is true, of his removal to Mecca. Those rumours having obtained some credit, the Chambers of Commerce of Algiers, in the name of the interests it represents, has thought proper to address to the Minister of War some urgent observations, which we fully approve. We are informed that other Chambers of Commerce, that of Philippeville in particular, intend to combine their efforts with those already attempted to prevent the execution of a measure, which, whatever may be said to the contrary, would be now dangerously premature. We do not precisely know what opinion is entertained in France as to the importance of that resolution, and the degree of confidence to be attached to the promises the Emir might make in order to obtain his liberty. But there is one thing certain, namely, that whatever may be the sincerity of the ex-Emir—and it will be agreed that, religiously or politically speaking, it is very doubtful, from the manner in which he executed the modest conditions of the treaty of the Tafna—and whatever good intentions he may have in that respect, it does not depend upon himself to cease to be a cause of disturbance and embarrassment to us in Algeria. The moment he arrives at Mecca, we shall have every day pilgrims returning from the Holy City, circulating without his participation or knowledge, the most dangerous reports as to his intentions. Our Arabs, fond of stories and credulous as they are, will have their eyes incessantly turned to that quarter of the world; and we repeat it, it would be an eternal source of false rumour and agitation. Once more, we trust that the liberation of Abd-el-Kader will not take place.—Achar (Algeria) Sept. 7.

THE 'KOH-I-NOOR'.—The re-cutting of this gem has been finished, and the expectations of Mr. Pedder, the Jewish artist who undertook this task, have been fully realized. It is surpassed by any other diamond above ground in shape, lustre, and beauty. Her Majesty inspected the two smaller diamonds before her departure for Belmoral, and expressed the high satisfaction she felt at the brilliancy and beauty given them by the new process. We anticipate that her satisfaction will be heightened on beholding the "mountain of light." We are given to understand that it will be set either in the crown, or form an ornament to adorn the Queen. The artisans employed have each received from the hands of their employer, Mr. Garrard, the Queen's jeweller, a piece of silver plate, with the model of the Koh-i-noor in the centre, and bearing the following inscription:—"Presented by Mr. Garrard to Mr. Pedder (Mr. Voorzanger), in commemoration of the cutting of the Koh-i-noor, commenced the 16th of July, and finished the 7th of September, 1852."—Jewish Chronicle.

STEAM TO AUSTRALIA, VIA PANAMA.—The long-talked of project for crossing the Pacific Ocean by steam may be said, at length, to be in a fair train for consummation. In about a year, powerful screw steam-ships will be placed on the station to run to and from Panama and Sydney, touching at Tahiti and New Zealand. The Australasian Pacific Mail Steam Company are pressing forward their arrangements for taking up the line, and have contracted for the immediate construction of five iron screw steam-ships of 1,560 tons burden and 300-horse power. The first vessel is to be ready in nine months from the present date, and will be at once despatched to Sydney as a pioneer of the line, and thence to occupy the Pacific station to Panama. The highest rate of speed possible has been the only condition imposed on the contractors, and it is therefore expected that these vessels will provide for the most rapid and regular route to Australia. The communication each way is to be monthly, and the Australasian Company's steam-ships will run in correspondence with the direct West India mail steamers from Chagres to Southampton. It is anticipated that Sydney will thus be reached in fifty to fifty-five days from Southampton.

CAPE AND CALCUTTA MAILS.—The General Screw Steamship Company's new vessel Indiana, of 1,800 tons and 300-horse power, commanded by Capt. George Patrick Lambert, who is well known in the Indian trade, sailed on Wednesday, with mails for the Cape of Good Hope and the East Indies. The Indiana was inspected, previous to her sailing, by Capt. Low, of Her Majesty's ship Impregnable, who expressed himself highly pleased with the ship and her equipments. She has 120,000 ft. in specie, 400 tons of general merchandise, and 860 tons of patent fuel. Several screw steam-ships are now in a forward state of construction for the enterprising owners of the Indiana. They are to be 2,500 tons each, fitted in a very superior style, and destined to form a line of packets between this country and the Australian colonies.

STEAM-TRADER TO AUSTRALIA.—Arrangements have been completed by Messrs. W. S. Lindsey and Co. for the construction of an iron screw-vessel, for the Australian trade, of about 2,300 tons burden (1,600 tons register), with a nominal power of eighty horses, to work up to about 240. She is to be completed in April, and to be ready to sail in June, when she is to take out 550 young women selected by the Family Colonization Loan Society. The vessel is to be named the Caroline Chisholm.

THE AUSTRALASIAN PACIFIC MAIL STEAM-PACKET COMPANY have received the grant of a royal charter.

THE EASTERN ARCHIPELAGO COMPANY.—The Fourth Annual Report of the Directors of this Company has just been published, with a copious appendix of official papers, relating to the charges brought against the Company by Sir James Brooke, and vindicating the Company from those charges.

THE SCINDS BAGGAGE CORPS.—A little pamphlet has been sent to us, containing certain facts and circumstances relative to the baggage corps of Scinde (now disbanded), with observations upon the experiment, intended, in the author's words, to "save the State from a repetition of the costly folly of bringing gentlemen from Europe to teach our old Indian commissaries how to load a camel, and how to carry their kit." The author asserts that the experiment has cost the revenue of India more than 150,000*l.* and proved a complete failure.

SEA VOYAGE TO INDIA IN A WEEK.—We were not prepared for the startling project of Mr. D. S. Brown, who proposes to make the voyage to India and back in a fortnight! Mr. Brown intends to put his theory into practice by vessels of quite different construction to those at present in use, giving them a greater depth of beam. He proposes to make the under surface of the vessel, which is flat, of two inclined planes, the effect of this will be, when the ship is in motion, to raise her whole hull to the surface of the water, thereby removing entirely the resistance at the bows, which is stated to be the great obstacle of her progress, being an illustration of the principle well known to every schoolboy who has thrown a stone slantingly on the surface of the water, making what is vulgarly called a "duck and drake." By reducing the angles of the inclined plane, speed could be added to the vessel, which could be increased from thirty to sixty miles per hour, and a ship so constructed would be as little affected by the ordinary waves of the Atlantic as a Gravesend steam boat is by a Thames ripple. The hull of the vessel is of a square tubular form; the deck, bottom, and sides being of great thickness, and in order to combine lightness with strength, they are intersected throughout with hollow cells or cavities, consisting of a series of central cells, surrounded by another series of smaller cells; by means of these the weight of the vessel would be reduced to one-eighth of the amount, according to the number of series employed, and still have nearly all the advantages of solidity; while the form in which the hull is made gives to it the strength of a tube, enabling it to be made of almost any length with perfect safety. If water obtains its wonted superiority as a mode of locomotion, the velocity of a steam-ship might as much exceed that of a railway carriage, as the railway carriage now does the steam-ship. Unseen rocks could not endanger a ship whose path was on the surface; sea-sickness could not take place where there was no oscillation; and the size of the vessel would place her beyond the mercy of the wind and waves.—Mining Journal.

BAGGAGE FROM INDIA.—The subject having been under the special consideration of the revenue authorities, it has been ruled and directed that silk goods, the produce of India, and the effects of parties arriving by the overland route, which are brought to this country by way of Europe, are not admissible at the lower rate of duty, it being legally indispensable that such articles, to be entitled to admission at the lower rate, should be the produce of, and imported direct from, India to this country.

ROMANIST MISSION TO THE EAST.—Six missionaries of the Congregation of Foreign Missions embarked at Bordeaux on the 29th August; five for Hindostan, and one for Tibet.

THE SANDWICH ISLANDS QUESTION.—The United States Correspondent of the Times, writing from New York, August 21st, says: "It will be remembered that, some twelve years ago, a certain French admiral undertook to carry out the Kosuth principle of intervention in the affairs of the Sandwich Islands, and that the British consul interposed a pretty effectual check to the ambition of the Frenchman. In tracing American journalism since that period, we have, from time to time, seen the progress of the American mind on that subject, and it has been gradually approaching a point, which it has now nearly reached, of believing that these islands ought to be left absolutely free and independent, or that they ought to fall into our possession. The Americans feel that they have a kind of right to the Sandwich Islands. They have been enlightened, civilized, and Christianized by our missionaries; they have been enriched by our whaling interest in the Pacific, and now they form a convenient stopping place for our vessels in the voyage from California and Asia. It may appear strange, but I am entirely persuaded it is true, that a vast majority of our public men and of our citizens would resent any attempt on the part of European powers to interfere in the affairs of the Sandwich Islands, almost as indignantly as an attempt to interfere to break up the treaty of the north-eastern boundary."

THE LATE MAJOR GENERAL SIR EPHRAIM STANNUS, C.B.—The friends of this highly respected and deeply-regretted officer will be gratified to hear that a very handsome mural monument has been erected to his memory, in St. James's church, Croydon, by six of his old and dear friends.

THE BRASS TRADE.—Considerable orders for brass foundry from Calcutta and other parts of India arrived by the last mail at Birmingham.

BILLS ON INDIA.—The amount received at the East-India House for bills on India from the 24th of August to the 7th of September has been 206,991*l.*

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1859, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20.		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6

* The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

This Company is established to introduce railways into Upper India. The first section, about 150 miles in length, commencing at Allahabad, at the confluence of the Ganges and Jumna, will terminate at Cawnpore. The future sections will carry on the line to Agra, Delhi, Lahore, and the Indus.

Allahabad is an ancient and populous city, of great fame and importance in the East. Crowds of pilgrims resort to its sacred shrines and temples; it is the entrepôt for the traffic by the steamers and the larger country craft, and is one of the principal civil and military stations. Cawnpore is the largest military station in India.

There is, both by steamers and country craft, a continuous permanent water-communication between Calcutta and Allahabad. The yearly tonnage of the Lower Ganges is 1,600,000 by the country craft alone. The number of passengers is also very great. Deep water comes at Allahabad, and, consequently, it is at this important city that the real difficulty and expense of transit begin. The sandbanks of the Upper Ganges, and the sharp edges of rock of the Jumna, rendering the navigation by even the smaller country craft slow and precarious.

The insurance of merchandise and property from Agra to Allahabad by the river route, in consequence of the danger and difficulty of the navigation, is as high as from Calcutta to England, the distance in the one case being 300 miles, in the latter 15,000 miles.

Above Allahabad, notwithstanding the defective river navigation, and the rude and expensive land-carriage which costs from 4d. to 8d. per ton per mile, moving at the slow rate of ten miles in twenty-four hours, there is an officially ascertained traffic of above 1,000,000 tons, and a land passenger traffic by various conveyances exceeding 100,000 per annum, besides passengers by boats, and about 300,000 travellers on foot.

Having a great and navigable river connecting Calcutta and Allahabad, a railroad would, by beginning at the latter city, and proceeding by Agra and Delhi to Lahore, establish a steam communication from Calcutta through the fertile and populous Doab in the North-West Provinces, "occupying the great line of Indian traffic with Central and Upper Asia." This is the great line of military as well as of commercial intercourse, more than three-fourths of the Bengal army being cantoned above Allahabad, and almost all emergent movements of troops and stores taking place to the north-west, or in advance of that town.

One of the Directors of this Company, so far back as 1846, in a work of his on Indian railways ("Indian Railways," by an Old Indian Postmaster), stated that he had seen "no large portion of territory present the like facilities for the introduction of a railway, as from Allahabad to Delhi.

"This line would have no rival, for the river steamers, instead of competing with it, would form a powerful basis, and keep up a continuous communication between the Railway and Calcutta, and our great military stations and magazines at Allahabad, Cawnpore, Agra, and Delhi, would all be in close communication with each other, and, by means of the steamers, have a free and rapid access to Calcutta."

Subsequently, the Indian Railway Commission confirmed, from actual survey, the accuracy of this opinion; and still more recently, Major J. P. Kennedy, late Director of the Railway Department to the Government of India, in his Report to the Marquis of Dalhousie, Governor-General, expressed himself as follows:—"Between Allahabad and Delhi there is no engineering question of difficulty whatever, as the beautiful flat bed (extending for several hundred miles in the direction of the line, in the Doab, between the rivers Ganges and Jumna), with its numerous commercial towns, offers, perhaps, the most singularly inviting district for laying down a railway that can be found in the world; free as it is from inundation, from hills, from river-crossings, and road-crossings, in short, from any impediment, and almost every ordinary source of expenditure in railway construction." Slight as the whole amount of labour is that would be required to carry a single line of railroad from Allahabad to Lahore and the Indus, it is the intention of this Company to proceed in a gradual manner, opening short sections, having an important town at either terminus.

The route consists of component parts, each complete in itself, possessing a local as well as a through traffic.

The present capital of the Company has been fixed at a sum which will leave a sufficient margin for contingencies, and the capital for future sections will be raised from time to time as may be necessary.

From the paramount importance of this railway to the good government and prosperity of India, the Directors have every hope of obtaining from the Hon. East-India Company the same terms and conditions as have been already accorded to similar undertakings, the existing traffic securing a return on the capital invested far beyond the amount of any guarantee that could be required.

The Directors are hereby empowered to treat for and make such arrangements with the Court of Directors and the Board of Control as to them may seem beneficial to the Company, as well as for securing a guaranteed dividend from the East-India Company, as in regard to territorial concessions.

The deposit to be paid on the allotment of shares will be two shillings per share, being after the rate of ten shillings per cent., the amount prescribed by the Act 7 & 8 Vict., c. 110.

A deed embodying the provisions required by that Act, and such as the Directors may consider proper for the regulation of the Company, and for carrying out the objects in view, will be prepared; and if any Shareholder should fail to execute the same for one month after the publication of a notice in the "Times" newspaper, calling on the Proprietors so to do, his Shares, with the Deposits paid thereon, will become forfeited to the use of the Company.

Application will be made for a Charter of Incorporation, or an Act of Parliament, limiting the liability of the Shareholders to the amount of their Subscriptions.

WHITE (of the firm of WHITE, LUDLOW, and Co.) having been appointed, by the Committee of Management in India, Agent to the New or Young Promotions Indenture Bonus Fund, it is requested that all communications in reference thereto be made, either personally or by letter, to Major White, at Messrs. GUTTA PERCHA TUBING.

Many inquiries having been made as to the DURABILITY of GUTTA BERCHA TUBING, the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY beg to call attention to the following Extracts of Letters from parties who have used it for a considerable length of time.

From SIR RAYMOND JARVIS, Bart.

"VENTNOR, Isles of Wight,
March 10th, 1882.

"In reply to your letter respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Service, I can state with much satisfaction, it answers perfectly. Many Builders and other persons have lately examined it, and there is not the least apparent difference since the first laying down, now several years; and I am informed that it is to be adopted generally in the houses that are being erected here."

From C. HACKER, Esq., Surveyor to
HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.

(Second Testimonial, after Two Years' Trial.)

"OFFICE OF WORKS, WINDHAM PARK,
January 10th, 1882.

"In answer to your inquiries respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Suctions, I find that the water has not affected it in the least, although it will cut lead through in two years; we have adopted it largely, being cheaper than lead, much easier fixed, and a more perfect job."

Tubing of any required length, of every size up to six inches in diameter.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THERE is little to add to the news from Burmah communicated in our last Summary, which contained the particulars of the dash made by Captain Tarleton upon Prome, the capture of the place,—the governor having fled,—its occupation for twenty-four hours, and the attack and dispersion of the war-boats employed in passing Bundoolla's army, or the relics of it, across the Irrawaddy. It appears from a despatch of Commodore Lambert, which is inserted in another part of this paper, that Mr. Burbank, the commander of the Company's steamer Pluto, having been informed that the Burmese troops had evacuated the fortified post on the heights of Akouk-toung, sent a force on shore to demolish the works. This was accomplished on the 14th July, without any opposition, when all the enemy's guns on the heights of Akouk-toung, twenty-eight in number, were either destroyed or brought off to the steamers. Next day, the steamers proceeded to Sahlaydan, where they captured six large boats laden with grain and arms; and, on the 16th, arrived off Pendaugmew, where some government boats were destroyed. On the 17th, Mr. Burbank anchored off Prome, when some of the inhabitants immediately came off with the intelligence that 500 troops had been stationed on the hill at the back of the town, but decamped directly the steamers came in sight. He also learnt that Bundoolla, with the remnant of his army, consisting of only 2,000 men, the rest having deserted, was encamped at Ethamew, a town without any defences, nine miles inland.

The latest intelligence from Rangoon is, that on the 11th August, when it was reported that Prome, Donabaw, and other places had been burned by the Burmese troops, Bundoolla having determined to avoid a general action, and to have recourse to the guerilla system of warfare. The last accounts stated that he had taken up a position on the hill commanding Prome. All the letters from the scene of war express a feeling of disappointment, said to be general, at the delay of the operations up the Irrawaddy; but it is supposed that the Governor-General has been satisfied of the prudence of this delay; and if it be true that, besides the force of the enemy in front, a large Burmese army had been collected on the Setang river, at Shway-gyn, to the north-east of Pegu, with which they threaten our position at Rangoon, only a hundred miles distant, it may not be advisable to make an advance to Prome until a sufficient force can be left at Rangoon to defeat any attempt which may be made upon it by the largest force the enemy can bring into the field.

Commodore Lambert, accompanied by Capt. Rundell, of the Madras Engineers, was shortly to proceed in the Phlegethon towards Prome, whither General Godwin was to follow as soon as the Madras reinforcements arrived. Meanwhile the light steamers were still running up and down the Irrawaddy, in its various branches, preventing the enemy from strengthening himself on the banks of those streams.

Several attempts had been made to surprise Martaban, but the Burmese fled on the discharge of the first round of artillery with which they were greeted.

Most of the Bengal corps destined to reinforce the army in Burmah were on their way to Calcutta. Among them are the 1st European Bengal Fusiliers, 10th and 37th N.I., the 4th Sikh Local Infantry, and the Sikh regiment of Loodianah. These, with the wing of H.M.'s 80th, which was conveyed to Rangoon by the Precursor, will form the two additional infantry brigades which Bengal is to contribute to the force in Burmah. Only one brigade will proceed from Madras; the body-guard at this presidency will not be sent.

Nothing had transpired at Calcutta as to the object and results of the Governor-General's visit to Rangoon. "He declared himself well satisfied with the appearance and conduct of the troops," says the Harkara, "but he was silent as to the work cut out for them, and the question of annexation is still a matter for mere conjecture. The general impression is, that on this point his lordship is waiting the instructions of the home authorities." His purposes, according to the Bombay Times, have been cramped by "the silly peace palaver in Parliament about the impolicy of the annexation of countries to which we have the most perfect right, and which would prove invaluable to us."

On the north-western frontier, the Delhi Gazette of August 18th is sorry to learn there is every prospect of renewed differences in the trans-Indus provinces. "The kothul is said to be again closed, and the road between Peshawur and Kohat so unsafe for Europeans, that a prohibitory order has been issued to that effect, and passengers have therefore to proceed along the left bank of the Indus." The Lahore Chronicle also understands that matters are not progressing quite so smoothly as was expected would be the case in the Peshawur division. "The Momunds, it is true, are willing to stand by the terms offered and accepted; but the Haleemzaie people of Punj Pao and the neighbourhood seem to think that, having obtained an inch they may take their ell, and have now demanded the so-called restitution of some old jagheers, to which they lay claim."

One of the up-country papers reports the discovery of a plot among the Mussulmans, the object of which was to encourage the frontier tribes to wage a religious war against the British Government. Papers, printed and manuscript, designed for that purpose, it is said, had been intercepted, and depôts of concealed arms discovered.

A disturbance had broken out at the bigoted city of Benares, excited, according to one account, by rumours of a design on the part of the authorities to christianize the Hindoos by force; and, according to other statements, by an alleged intention to make the prisoners in jail eat together without regard to the prejudices of caste. We subjoin a history of the affair from a Benares letter, published in the Delhi Gazette :—

"It appears that a certain Naga, a sort of low-caste Brahmin, was convicted of some offence, and 'taking into consideration his general bad character and previous convictions,' was sentenced to imprisonment for nine years; but his friends thought it was a piece of cruel oppression, and stirred up all the budmashes of the city to make a row, which they succeeded in doing. This occurred on Sunday, the 1st August. The Naga's friends were not slow to use mendacity as an agent for stirring up their hearers. Of course they suggested that the messing system was about to be introduced into the jail, and that the jail-birds were to be all made Christians of. The crowd shouted 'Jye Narain, Maro Gobind Sahib'—meaning our magistrate, Mr. Gubbins; they sat in punchayet over it, and towards evening on Monday they determined to put their threat of marring Gobind Sahib into execution. They marched up to the cantonments, their war-cry, 'Jye Narain, Maro Gobind Sahib,' resounding; few of them had any arms, and those few only lathes. Mr. Gubbins, hearing of their projected visit, sallied out in his buggy, and on the city road met the crowd, who were most vociferous; he endeavoured to speak to them, but they would not hear him. They picked up pieces of kunkur, with which the roads were about to be mended, and projected a number of them at Mr. Gubbins, who returned. Two officers happened to meet them; they were saluted in the same way as Mr. Gubbins, kunkur metals being thrown recklessly about; the general and his wife, daughter, and son-in-law, were treated in the same way. Another gentleman, and his wife and daughters, were not less warmly received. However, Mr. Gubbins procured a dozen of irregular cavalry, who met them in the road, and belaboured the crowd with their whips, and they fled back to the city. Keeping their shops shut, they sat in punchayet beyond Baillipore, a village just outside the city. A report of this having reached Mr. Gubbins, he proceeded with a couple of companies of sepoy and a squadron of irregular cavalry, on the 3rd, to the scene, and, choosing from the large number there congregated those whom he thought best suited for the society of the Naga, escorted them to jail."

Letters from Ellichpore state that the Nizam had avowed his inability, in future, to pay the contingent.

It is announced that the Commander-in-Chief does not proceed to Calcutta, but will, in all probability, winter at Umbala.

The Bengal relief is at length out, and is given in a succeeding column.

BENGAL. BURMAH.

The Governor-General returned from Rangoon on the Feroze, on Friday last, true to the day he had fixed on leaving Calcutta. He remained at Rangoon three days inspecting the arrangements which had been made, more especially for the accommodation of the troops, examining the position and prospect of affairs, and consulting with the military and naval commanders regarding our ulterior operations. We are happy to find that he met the missionaries at Rangoon during his stay; and we feel certain, that from the constant and unreserved intercourse which they maintain with the natives of the country, of all classes, they were able to furnish more accurate and valuable information regarding the feelings, hopes, and wishes of the people, than any other body of men.

The letters brought by the Feroze inform us that the steam flotilla continues to maintain the high character it has earned for enterprise and efficiency. It has just made another addition to its laurels, and established the importance of this arm of the service, not only by keeping open the river communication between Rangoon and Prome, and ascertaining the state and movements of the enemy, but also by maintaining the prestige of our power by its spirited and successful exertions. We now learn that General Bundoolah was staggered beyond recovery by the boldness of Captain Tarlton in his first voyage, in turning his position and conducting the squadron up the eastern channel, and taking possession of the fortified position of Prome, with its guns and ammunition, as we stated a fortnight ago. This unexpected occupation of that important post, and the vigorous attack made on Bundoolah by Captain Tarlton as he moved down the river, are said to have caused the great Burmese army to melt away, so that the general has not more than from 1,500 to 2,000 men under his standard. Soon after Captain Tarlton's return to Rangoon, he started, as it appears, on a second expedition to Prome; the general, it is said, declined to give him the assistance of any soldiers, and so the sailors had the entire credit of the achievement. Captain Tarlton, in repassing the fortified rock a little below Prome, where General Bundoolah had taken up his position before, observed that it wore a deserted appearance, and he determined, therefore, to land and reconnoitre it, when he found, to his surprise and delight, that it was unoccupied, and that the guns, twenty-eight in number, though removed from their former position, were lying on the ground. They were at once transferred to the steamers, and seventeen war-boats, which were moored to the bank, were also captured. The steamers then proceeded up a second time to Prome, where two of them remain, while the others returned to Donabew. The villagers throughout the route manifested the most friendly disposition, and brought fowls and bullocks with the greatest willingness, and disposed of them at prices ridiculously low. Captain Tarlton has thus the merit of having broken up the organization of Bundoolah's army, and captured no fewer than fifty pieces of ordnance, with the aid of a few blue jackets. We have thus obtained complete possession of the river as far as Prome, and the commodore now guarantees to land 2,000 troops there from Rangoon in five days. The army is impatient to be led up there by water, and there can be little doubt that an army of 5,000 men might at the present time be landed in a fortnight even at Ava itself, and bring the war to a speedy termination.

Every one is anxiously inquiring the result of the Governor-General's visit to Rangoon, which, according to general expectation, was intended merely to decide the question of the immediate advance to Prome of a large detachment of our troops, but no one is, apparently, able to divine the secret. To us it appears a matter of small consequence whether Prome be occupied a month sooner or a month later, provided the army which is destined for the capital be sent up to that city with all its requirements, on the steamers, during the rainy season; and we cannot doubt that every possible effort will be made to accomplish this object, and thereby to spare our troops the fatigue and embarrassments of a long land journey. We shall thus be able to avail ourselves to their fullest extent of all the advantages resulting from our steamers, and shorten the distance to the capital, as well as the duration of the campaign, in no ordinary degree.

It has been stated in the papers that the question of annexation must await the decision of the Indian authorities at home, and that they are at issue with Lord Dalhousie on the subject. How far this may be the case it is not for us to say. It is well known to all the readers of English newspapers that both the ministry and the press have expressed their strong disapprobation of any territorial increase on this occasion. But this is the same course which they have invariably pursued from the days of Hastings to the present time, deprecating and reprobating every addition to our Indian territory. It is not without its advantage that they should give us such repeated admonitions of the vanity of human wishes.

On the other hand, it is impossible for any one in India, and least of all for the Governor-General, to be insensible to the importance and the necessity of annexing at the least the whole province of Pegu, from the foot of the Aeng Pass to a direct point on the western limit of the Burmese territories. Independently of the vast importance of avoiding a third Burmese war, which, however, would be inevitable, if we left that haughty and exasperated court in full possession of its resources, the whole population of that country—a thing unprecedented in Asia—have thrown themselves upon our protection, and virtually annexed themselves to our dominion; and there could be no inconsistency or folly greater than that of abandoning them to the tender mercies of their task-masters, and leaving them to seek relief from the most galling oppression under which any nation has ever groaned, through the power of America or France. In these circumstances, annexation becomes a virtue of necessity, and the British government is bound to give the Talens and Karens, now flocking and clinging to its standard, the benefits of British institutions, for which they are so eager. It is therefore easy to suppose that Lord Dalhousie's observations and convictions may have led him to combat the repugnance of the court and the board at home on the question of annexation, and it is the general expectation that the reply of the home authorities may be expected next month. It must be manifest, that after so great a political question as that of a large addition to the empire from one of the Indo-Chinese kingdoms has been, as it must necessarily have been, brought before the public authorities at home, it would be out of the question to take any step in advance in the teeth of their opposition. But they will doubtless have the good sense to give Lord Dalhousie permission to act in this matter according to his own discretion and the judgment he may form of the exigency of circumstances. In taking leave of the subject for the present week, we are constrained to notice an ugly rumour which has been obtaining circulation in Calcutta, since the return of the Feroze, that it was intended only to annex the maritime coast and a strip of land around Martaban, so as to leave Moulmein still the capital of British Burmah. That such a proposal may have been made to Lord Dalhousie, is very probably true, but his lordship is far too perspicacious and prudent to give it even the most transient approbation. If we annex, we must at the least take the whole of Pegu, from Patanago across to the Salween, though it is not improbable that circumstances may arise to include Ava itself in the British dominions. Be that as it may, the preposterous proposal which has apparently been imported in the Feroze, of simply making some small addition to the territory of Moulmein, cannot be mentioned but to be scouted.—Friend of India, Aug. 12.

On the evening of the Governor-General's departure, the following order, in his lordship's own peculiar and appropriate style, was published:—

"The Most Noble the Governor-General of India cannot forget the opportunity, which has offered to him by his visit to Rangoon of again offering to the combined force his most cordial acknowledgment of the valuable and distinguished service they have rendered here. The gratification which the Governor-General experiences in thus congratulating the force on its success in the field, is greatly enhanced by his being able to add the expression of his unqualified approbation of its conduct in quarters. In every branch whatever, Naval or Military, European or Native, the force has exhibited an orderly conduct, and inoffensive demeanour towards the people of the country, and a spirit of sound discipline, which are as truly honourable to its character as the high distinction it has won in battle. Whatever may be the future course of the service, whatever may be the ultimate fate of this country, the Governor-General has the proud satisfaction of feeling, that the people of Burmah will hereafter associate with the presence of a British force among them no other reflections than those of its irresistible bravery in the field, of its order, forbearance, and obedience in the camp."

The letters state that there is a considerable, some say universal, feeling of disappointment that an immediate advance is not made on Prome by water; but we think both the General and Governor-General do well to act on the safe side, and postpone the movement on Prome till the arrival of reinforcements. When we have once occupied that place, we must keep it; any retrograde movement will do more to damage the expedition than all our successes will have done to benefit it. It is certain that the Burmese are establishing the most formidable stockades in the vicinity of Prome, and intend to make a stand there for the fortunes of the empire. There is always a danger of falling into the common error of underrating an enemy, and we may, as we have done before, pay dear for it. It is the part of prudence to assemble such a force at Prome as shall make success certain, and afterwards enable us to hold our ground while we advance to the capital. Nor must it be forgotten that the Burmese have collected a large force on the Setang river, at Shway-gya, to the north-east of Pegu, with which they threaten our position at Rangoon, which is only 100 miles distant. It will not therefore be advisable to make an advance to Prome until we are able to leave a sufficient force at Rangoon to defeat any attempt which may be made on it by the largest force the enemy can bring into the field. We think it not improbable that, by the middle of September, there will be sufficient reinforcements collected at Rangoon, from Madras and Bengal, to enable the general to move up with confidence to Prome, in the steamers, at once, and occupy that position. If by the 29th of September we have a large force at Prome, ready to march on the capital, we shall not have done ill.

We have no doubt about the incorporation of Pegu with our dominions. It would not only be the wisest, and the most politic course we could pursue, but, in the progress of circumstances, it has become inevitable. In the former war, Lord Combermere advocated the propriety of annexing Pegu, and seizing Prome, and then remaining in position without marching to Ava; but his opinion was overruled. It was well argued that the Burmese would assuredly invade our new territories, and in some mode, and to some extent, insult our new frontier. This we could not, of course, put up with, and we should then be obliged to recur to the original project of an advance to Ava. It was found that under no circumstances was it possible to dispense with the capture of the capital. The same reasoning will apply with still greater force to the present occasion. But it would greatly aid and facilitate this enterprise, if the province of Pegu was at once separated from the kingdom of Burmah, and annexed to the British territories. By annexing Pegu before we march to Prome, we leave a contented population of British subjects in our rear as we advance towards the capital. When we have invested Ava, it is very probable that the king and his court will fly. But this would only prolong the war for a short period, and it would enable us to ascertain the nature and resources of the upper province, and to regulate our future course with some degree of confidence. Oriental courts are not self-denying enough to make any protracted residence in the jungles. If the king were to take refuge among the Shans, they would sell him any day for a thousand tickals. Sooner or later, we should arrive at a treaty, moulded according to our own dictation.—Ibid. Aug. 19.

The latest news from Burmah is contained in the following letter from Rangoon, dated 10th August:—

"Prome and Donnabew have been burned for the sympathy of the inhabitants towards the British. The enemy is said to be taking advantage of the time allowed them to fortify Prome, Pegue, and other stations; and that, too, in a manner more dangerous to our mode of attack than previous erections. The desultory nature of our late expeditions has shown to them the advantages of guerilla warfare, of which we fear they will avail themselves. It is whispered that the Governor-General, on his late visit to this place, saw in its full force the pernicious effects of delay and inaction; and we therefore anticipate, that, knowing the responsibility he is under to the home Government for the results of this war, he will, with the shrewd good sense, and decisive energy which has marked his public career, insist on our general yielding either to a change of tactics or a successor of unimpaired vigour, and whose more supple mind for the adaptation of the changes of circumstance and science would more properly fit him for the conduct of a war of this description. In the fort, improvements of every description progress. Substantial wooden barracks are built, or in process of erection, and the attention to the health and comfort of the men is most pleasing. These arrangements, as well as the roads and bridges making, and drainage in progress, reflect the highest credit on the skill and industry of the engineer officers. Sanitary regulations are vigorously carried out, the jungle around the pagodas is being cleared, and illicit grog-selling suppressed, our venerable Commander-in-Chief taking great personal interest in the latter cause. The theatre is completed, and in full work; the scenery is excellently painted, especially the description of the taking of the Great Pagoda, and the arrangements and fittings of the interior, which will contain an immense audience, worthy of the spirited individuals who set it going—the performances have been mostly very good, though good female actors are rather scarce. The towns of Rangoon, Poussendounce, Kemmendine, and Dalla, are estimated to contain upwards of 70,000 inhabitants;—in these the most perfect order and freedom from dacoity prevail, though there is no police force. This is only to be attributed to the energetic and strict regulations established by Capt. Lyster, the magistrate, whose stern and summary punishments fall heavy on detected offenders, who find no shelter from the technical restraints of misused and perverted law; and the voracious complainant finds the terrors of castigation impend over him with the equitable severity of martial jurisdiction; circumstances which, combined, deter crime, from the impossibility of escaping punishment. The Government have ordered a survey of the town, with a view to lay it out, and draining it on an approved plan. Commisariat and ordnance godowns are to be built on an extensive scale, which, with other expensive public works going on, inclines me to agree with the natives, who say, that if we were intending to give up the country again, we should not spend so much money and labour in it."—Bombay Telegraph, Sept. 1.

RAILWAY FOR THE N. W. PROVINCES.

The three presidencies of Bengal, Madras, and Bombay have now obtained the grant of railways from the Government of India. The rail at each of them is constructed under different agencies, and controlled by different authorities, and we are certain that this arrangement will eventually be found more beneficial to the undertaking than if one great and unwieldy body had been created for the purpose of conducting the whole system of rails throughout the East Indies, though a thousand miles apart. There now remain the wants of only one presidency to be provided for, we mean that of the north-west provinces, and we cannot suppose that after the Court of Directors have manifested so much liberality in reference to the other portions of this empire, they will hesitate to bestow this boon on the remaining division, where it is so greatly needed, and will give so extraordinary and immediate an impulse to trade and industry.

For the purposes of the railway, the Bengal presidency may be considered as extending from the great port of Calcutta to the great mart of the west, Mirzapore. Such appears also to be the decision of the Court of Directors, who, in their recent orders for the survey of the line by the engineer officers of the East-India Railway Company, fixed Mirzapore as the limit of their labours. The Agra Presidency Railway would therefore extend from Mirzapore to Delhi, or as much beyond that city as might be deemed advisable. The distance from Calcutta to Mirzapore by the river route, which has now been adopted, was calculated by Mr. Simms, the consulting engineer of Government, at 537 miles; the distance from Mirzapore to Delhi, at 418. The longer section of the line would thus belong to the Bengal railway, the shorter to the Agra rail. We are fully aware that at one time, before we had any experience of railways in India, or of the mode in which they were to be constructed, or the time they would occupy, or the various physical impediments which were required to be overcome, it was contemplated that the north-west line and that of Bengal should be constructed under the same system of agency. It was proposed that the rail should commence at Howrah, and proceed in unbroken succession to the extreme limits of the north-west provinces; but we are very much mistaken if the experience of the last two years has not tended to modify this opinion, and to enforce the conclusion that the Agra rail should be considered as distinct from that of Bengal as that of Bombay is, and that it should be carried on under a different and independent instrumentality. The construction of the railway is found to involve so much more labour, toil, and responsibility, than was at first expected, that the allotment of more than a manageable line to a single company appears to be unadvisable. If the line to Mirzapore be left in the hands of the East-India Railway Company, it will be quite as much as they can manage with convenience to themselves, and advantage to the interest of the country. The road from Howrah to the collieries, a distance of 120 miles, will probably be finished by the end of next year. Some are so sanguine as to fix an earlier period, and we sincerely hope their expectations will not be disappointed. But our calculation may be correct, and in that case it will be apparent to all that if a line of 120 miles requires three years, the line to Mirzapore will not be finished, at the same rate of progression, under thirteen years. It would be preposterous, however, to keep the north-west provinces out of their rail during this long period, while the Bengal rail was slowly and deliberately progressing up towards its frontier. It would be far more advisable to consider the interests of the Agra railway apart, and to provide at once for its construction, independent of the Bengal line.

The Agra railway, if it extended no farther than Delhi, would comprise, as we have stated, 418 miles, of which 52 miles are below Allahabad, and 366 above it. The country above Allahabad is perhaps better adapted for the rail than any other part of India. This line, which would run through the Doab, presents almost a perfect level, and the fewest engineering difficulties to be met with in any part of India. It seems to have been especially formed by the hand of nature for railway operations; and the impediments to be overcome are so few, that the work might be completed within a very short period, and at a comparatively small cost. It is probable that 7,000*l.* a mile would cover every item of expense, and the whole line would therefore not require a larger capital than 3,000,000*l.* sterling. The Court of Directors have now discovered that money may be readily obtained in London, on the guarantee of the revenues of India, at the rate of four per cent. The risk to Government in the construction of a line from Mirzapore to Delhi, would not, therefore, in the whole, exceed 180,000*l.* a year. This risk, however, would be mere nominal than real; the immense traffic of those opulent provinces, and the constant intercourse which is kept up among its inhabitants, enables us to affirm, without hesitation, that the returns from the rail, in the very first year of its operations, would completely cover this sum, and leave Government free from all loss.

If the court should be persuaded, without any farther hesitation, to give a line of railway to the Agra presidency, in the same manner as they have bestowed a rail on the three others, we are strongly disposed to recommend, though only by way of experiment, the adoption of an entirely new system of operations. The machinery of the East-India Railway Company, which was the first ever constructed for the establishment of rails in India, was the best which could be devised at the time. It was a perfectly novel and untried project to construct a long and expensive railroad in India, by means of a company in England, who were to be checked at every turn by the Government authorities at home, and whose responsible agents in this country were to be as much under the control of the local government, as regards the smallest minutiae of their operations, as if they had been members of the public service. The machinery has been found to be unnecessarily complicated, and to involve too much friction. A more simple agency might possibly be found to work better; that is, with greater expedition, and less expense. We venture to propose, therefore, that the Court of Directors should raise the 3,000,000*l.* necessary for this work, without the intervention of a company,—that the work should be intrusted to the superintendence of one engineer-in-chief, either a first-class engineer from England, or, if there be any one practically qualified for the work in the Indian service, one of the corps of military engineers; that he should have under him a sufficient number of resident engineers, men of the same high scientific and practical knowledge as the present staff of the East-India Railway Company; that the whole undertaking should be placed under the control of the Lieut.-governor of the north-west provinces; and, lastly, that the whole line of 3,000,000*l.* be placed in the hands of two of the great contractors in England. In the hands of two of the great contractors in England, who have accumulated vast resources for which they have no longer any adequate employ, now that there are so few railways remaining to be constructed in England, the work would be done both reasonably and expeditiously, and in five years we should in all probability have the rail established from Mirzapore to Delhi. We desire it to be distinctly understood, that in throwing out these hints for the construction of a railway at the only presidency on which it has not been bestowed, nothing can be farther from our intention than to interfere in the smallest degree with the claim of the East-India Railway Company to the construction of the Bengal line of more than 500 miles, which will give it full occupation for more than ten years.—Friend of India, Aug. 19.

MR. HENRY TORRENS.

It is with deep regret that we have to announce the death, yesterday afternoon, in the house of Sir James Colville, at Calcutta, of Mr. Henry Whitelock Torrens, of the Bengal Civil Service, and agent to the Governor-General at Moorshedabad, at the age of 47. He came to Calcutta upon a visit to Mr. Courtenay, private secretary to the Governor-General, a few days ago; but almost immediately on his arrival was seized with illness, accompanied by delirium, and sank without, we believe, having rallied sufficiently to be able to hold any communication with his friends. He was a victim to the fatal mistake of staying a few months too long in this country—in which he arrived in 1827, but at a more mature age than most civilians, having previously graduated at Oxford. He had never since revisited his native land. Latterly, he felt his health breaking, and his desire to return to home and family preyed upon him; but he was a man of high feeling, and could not reconcile himself to the idea of quitting his post while his conduct therein was in any respect in question. We and other friends in vain endeavoured to persuade him that the utmost which could be imputed to him, in his late dispute with the magistrate of Moorshedabad, was an excess of zeal in the cause of those interests which he was appointed to protect. "Honour before all" was his maxim, although he confessed that he thought his life endangered by remaining. He stayed—and died. Mr. Torrens was possessed of talents, acquirements, and accomplishments, rare in this country. To an excellent acquaintance with classic lore, and the languages and literature of modern Europe he united the attainments of a profound oriental scholar. As a writer, he was almost equally happy whether in the playful, the grave, or the satiric style; and those who recollect him on the boards of the Sans Souci can vouch for his histrionic and musical talent. It grieves us that a mind in which the sterling and the elegant were united in a manner not often to be observed, should have gone out, suddenly obscured while the oil in the lamp of life seemed to promise a long continuance to its genial brightness.—Citizen, Aug. 17.

The death of Mr. Henry Torrens, one of the ablest members of the civil service, was not without suspicion of poison. Mr. Torrens has for some time past held the post of Governor-General's agent at Moorshedabad, an office which is that of a controller of one of the company's great pensioners, the Nawab Nazim, as he is usually styled. In this employment Mr. Torrens made himself peculiarly obnoxious to the confidential servants of the Nawab, and their quarrels have latterly given rise to judicial proceedings. He mentioned some time ago that his life had been attempted by poison, which may perhaps be the only reason for the present suspicion. Mr. Torrens will be long remembered by his exceedingly spirited and appropriate translation of a part of the Arabian Nights, a work which it is to be regretted, he threw up unfinished.—Englishman, Aug. 19.

GIGANTIC SPIDERS.—Captain Sherwill, in an excursion to the Kurrukpoor Hills, south of Monghyr, found upon the summit of Maruk, a table-topped hill of 1,100 feet elevation, several of the gigantic webs of the peira spider, some of which measured (including the guy ropes) from 10 to 20 feet in diameter, the reticulated portion being about 5 feet, in the centre of which the spider, of a formidable size and very active, sits waiting for prey. "The webs," he says, "from their great strength, offered a sensible resistance when forcing our way through them; in the web of one of the spiders we found a bird entangled, and the young spiders, about eight in number, feeding upon the carcass. The bird was, with the exception of his legs and beak, entirely enveloped in web, and was much decomposed; the entwined web had completely pinioned the wings of the bird, so as to render his escape impossible. The bird was about the size of a field lark, and was near the centre of the web; the old spider was about a foot above the bird; we secured, measured, and bottled him. His dimensions were six inches across the legs; he was armed with a formidable pair of mandibles.

THE GREAT PAGODA AT RANGOON.—General Godwin has issued the following order: "It is with deep regret the Lieut.-General has learned that attempts have been made to break into the Great Pagoda. This building is a monument of British valour,—it is also one of the most imposing edifices in the world from its magnitude and beauty, which alone should protect it in the eyes of civilization. The Lieut.-General regrets he has countenanced the destruction of so many images as have been defaced to turn their shrines into private residence, but henceforth it is strictly forbidden to displace stick or stone on any pretext. A committee of field officers will carefully visit the pagoda, particularly behind the houses now occupied, and report on its state as early as possible. This committee will consist of Lieut.-Colonels Reynolds, Coote, and Foord. The Lieut.-General invites all officers and men to co-operate in preserving such of the smaller pagodas as have not been defaced, particularly the one to the left of the 40th lines and that on the north-east corner of the plateau of the Great Pagoda, and he calls on all persons to check further destruction."

THE PENAL CODE.—We should not be surprised if one of the earliest performances of Mr. Peacock's administration were to be the promulgation of the Penal Code. That Code, we believe, was minutely and carefully considered and discussed in Mr. Bethune's time, and as it is understood that the Court of Directors do not manifest any further hesitation or vacillation in regard to its introduction as the criminal law of the land, it is not likely to cost Mr. Peacock any great amount of labour and polishing to fit it for general use.—Hurkaru.

HINDU-ENGLISH.—The Friend of India publishes the following as a verbatim copy of a letter from a native correspondent: "Honorable Sir,—Permit me the honor to request you few lines of my poor letter which will meet with your honor now 15th July 1852 Monday in the night tim my wife has birth a son will you be kind to edition it in your paper but again I am writing to your honour for it because twice I have written you to edition som thing in your paper but you did not answer me or edition in your paper though I am writing to your honour that will you be agree attentive on this subject, that is to edition on your paper Friend of India or not. I am, &c."

LORD DALHOUSIE, it seems, from all we learn, to be very certain, has obtained an extension of his lease of office for another year, at least, to enable him to finish the Burmese war.—Hurkaru.

A SERIOUS OUTBREAK occurred at Benares. The magistrate, it was reported, had given orders that the prisoners in the jail should mess together, irrespective of castes, and their friends in the city, enraged at the innovation, collected in a large body on the 4th July, and marched towards the cantonments. As they were all armed with clubs, and commenced maltreating the passengers, the magistrate sent a requisition for the assistance of the military, and two companies of native infantry, with a body of fifty irregular horse, were immediately dispatched to the scene. The rioters were encountered about midway between the city and the cantonments, and broke at the first charge of the soldiery. About forty of the ringleaders were captured, and the remainder fled in all directions.—Hurkaru. Mr. Gubbins, the magistrate, had been fortunate enough to arrest the entire "punchayat," or committee, who directed the movements of the rioters. Hearing that this body, to the number of 300 men, were sitting at Secrole, he promptly marched out with two companies of the 27th N.I., and a troop of irregular cavalry, and surrounded them at a place about five miles from the city. The whole body were at once marched off to jail, and the "moral effect" of the capture and of the utter discomfiture of the rioters is said to have been immense. It is, however, suspected that men of much higher rank are at the bottom of the affair, and that great efforts have been made by a rival banker to throw suspicion on a very wealthy dealer. During the tumult, a rich native, Debnaryun Singh, when the Military Bazaar was threatened with a scarcity of food, forwarded a large supply of grain for the use of the troops,—an act which should not be allowed to pass unnoticed by the authorities. One correspondent says, that among the pretexts for the outbreak were the deportation of three or four dangerous bulls, and the preaching of the missionaries.—Friend of India.

MILITARY FUND.—The Citizen states that the Bengal Military Fund and the Bengal Military Orphan Society are to be amalgamated into one, under the management of an active and able secretary and a competent staff, assisted by the directors.

SUPREME v. MOFUSSIL COURTS.—A beautiful illustration of the benefits of English law has recently been afforded in the Supreme Court. A Mr. Smith, of Meerut, brought an action for libel against the proprietor of the Mofussilite in the Supreme Court, but unfortunately did not arrive on the day fixed for trial. The case was therefore struck off the list, and the prosecutor will have to pay all the expenses of bringing down his witnesses 900 miles without the satisfaction of trying his case, merely because the roads are in so disgraceful a condition. Mr. Smith may, perhaps, be able to institute a fresh action, but in that case, as witnesses will be already in Calcutta, he will not receive the costs of bringing them down.—Friend of India, Aug. 12.

DR. G. CHUCKERBUTTY has offered himself as a candidate under the new Municipal Act for the post of commissioner of the southern or European division of Calcutta.

OPIMUM SALE.—The following is the result of the eighth opium sale:—

	Chests.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar	1,920	... 1,208	... 23,20,875
Benares	880	... 1,204	... 10,59,750

DETERIORATING THE CURRENCY.—The Englishman calls attention to a new system of deteriorating the silver rupees. There are two sizes of the Victoria rupee in circulation, and the cheat is effected by reducing the larger size to the size of the former, and then "milling" the edges anew.

DISTRICT DAWKS.—Baboo Joy Kissen Mookerjee, the well-known zemindar of Ooterparah, has been fined Rs. 100 by the magistrate of Howrah, for neglecting to keep a dawk station in some village in his zemindaries. The dawk station was required to convey letters from the neighbouring thannah to the magistrate's court, and the Baboo considered that the Government dawk was sufficiently near at hand. He has appealed to the sessions judge. The question does not, we believe, refer only to this unimportant fine, but involves the whole question of the right of Government to compel zemindars to maintain the district dawk.—Friend of India.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE GANGES.—The Delhi Gazette has learnt that it is in contemplation to throw a bridge of pontoons across the Ganges at Rajghaut, Benares. The stream at this point is only 1,000 yards in width, but is in some places sixty feet deep.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND THE BOARD OF REVENUE.—We have heard that the Board of Revenue has sent in an answer to the Governor-General's reprimand of its "unparalleled presumption." The board, we understand, have explained that it was very far from their intention to say any thing likely to be offensive to the head of the Government, whom of course they were bound to address with the utmost respect and deference. They apologize for any language which may have led to his lordship's misapprehension of their meaning. They did not, as we had been led to suppose, and as even the Governor-General seems to have imagined, remonstrate against the appointment of Mr. Houston as salt agent. They simply recommended that, as the salt agent was at a distance that precluded their immediate control over him, and they were nevertheless responsible for his manner of conducting his duties, he should be placed under the supervision or authority of the commissioner. They express their extreme regret that their meaning should have been liable to an offensive construction, for they did not presume to protest against any appointment which should have received the sanction of the Government.—Hurkaru, Aug. 8.

A CONSPIRACY against the Government, somewhat resembling that of Patna in 1845, according to the Mofussilite, has been discovered in the North-West Provinces. The prime mover of the present design is said to have been the Kazee at Meerut, who has since died, and the object was to induce the mountaineers of the extreme frontier to proclaim a religious war against the British. Great quantities of arms had been forwarded to different stations, and a depot established at Meerut, which has been seized by the authorities. The discovery is said to have been made by the civil authorities of Rawul Pindee.

A CONSPIRACY CASE, to be tried in the Supreme Court, was attracting much attention in Calcutta. Among the defendants are Mutty Loll Seal, the "millionaire," and Mr. W. N. Hedger an attorney. These, and the clerk of the latter, are charged with having conspired to bring a false accusation against one Joggopaul Chatterjee of having perjured himself, in denying his signature to a law-paper. The prosecutor has been twice tried for the alleged perjury, and each time acquitted. The jury had found a true bill.

QUININE IN CHOLERA.—A "correspondent of the Mofussilite, writing from Umballa, says that Dr. Smith, of the horse, artillery has cured fourteen out of eighteen cholera patients by the use of quinine; ten grains administered every half hour, with brandy or port wine to support the strength of the patient.

LIEUT.-COL. BURLTON, the Calcutta Morning Chronicle states, has accepted Rs. 30,000 to retire from the service.

CAPTAIN BROWNE AND THE AUTHORITIES OF CHANDERNAGORE.—The Citizen gives an account of a "very awkward affair" which and occurred at Chandernagore. Capt. Browne, of the — regt. N. I. was walking on the esplanade, when a little dog, which accompanied him, ran into the governor's compound, and was pelted out by the gardener. Capt. Browne unfortunately got into a passion, and abused the man, who returned it, and was struck by the officer. The sepoy on guard interfered, and was also struck. After this, Capt. Browne mounted his horse and rode off leisurely, but was overtaken by a file of sepoy, severely thrashed and thrown into prison. He was sentenced to pay a fine of Rs. 400.

THE LIEUT.-GOVERNOR N.W.P. will, in the ensuing season, make a tour through the Rajpootana and Saugor districts, going up the great Dekan road to Benares, and thence through the Doab back to Agra. The camp will move on or about the 1st November, and return by the end of February.—Lahore Chron.

A DISPUTE between the two sons of the late Raja Dheeran Sing, Juwahn Singh and Motee Singh, has been referred by Maharaja Goolab Singh to Sir Henry Lawrence, and the litigants are, one (Motee Singh) here, and the other on his way. Dewan Joala Sahas, the chief minister of the maharaja, is also at Lahore. Raja Sahab Deel, a man of acknowledged integrity and worth, has been named as umpire, and on his report the decision will mainly rest.—Ibid.

CAPTAIN FORSTER.—The Court of Directors, "in consideration of the gallant conduct and the zealous services of local Captain W. R. Forster, second in command of the Shekawatee battalion, have authorised the Indian government to confer upon him the commission of captain of infantry, unattached."

THE UNION BANK AFFAIR, says the Hurkaru, is not yet quite over, the "agitators" having written for full powers from shareholders in England, with a view to taking further steps in the matter.

HONOURS TO EASTERN PORTS.—To-morrow, being the anniversary of the death of the poet Ameer-Khosroo, whose tomb is close beside that of Nizam-ood-deen, the Mohamedans of Delhi proceed thither, and do honour to the remains of the poet.—Delhi Gazette, August 4.

THE RETIERS.—Letters from Simla mention that the Commander-in-Chief's relief crossed one made out by the Governor-General, the latter directing only the Peshawur regiments and those going down country to move; while that of the Commander-in-Chief contained upwards of seventy regiments.—Ibid. July 31.

CAPTAIN HICKS was on the point of leaving Attock for Peshawur, when he thought it would be quite as well to remain there until a storm which was coming on should subside. The rain was coming through an open window of the room in which he was sitting, and he got up to close it, but, whilst in the act of doing this, he was struck dead by the lightning. His death was instantaneous, so much so, that the friend with whom he was staying jumped up to see what was the matter, and found Captain Hicks quite dead, and in the same position as when he last observed him shutting the window.—Delhi Gaz. Aug. 21.

AGRA BANK.—At the half-yearly general meeting of the Agra Bank, the profits on the half year allowed the declaration of a dividend of 9 per cent. It seems more than probable that the head-quarters will be removed to Calcutta.—Ibid. Aug. 18.

RETIREMENTS.—Brevet-Major Corfield, 47th N.I., now on furlough, is about to retire from the service, receiving Rs. 19,000 from the regiment. We also understand that Major Armstrong and Brevet-Major Boulton, of the same corps, will likewise retire about the end of the next year, on their being purchased out. It is said that Colonel Phillips, of the Light Cavalry, is about to retire, and that Lieutenant-Colonels Mackenzie and Lucius Smith will also leave the service on obtaining promotion.—Lahore Chron.

CHOLERA still continues at Dehra. It has carried off upwards of thirty men of the Kumaon Battalion stationed here. It is gradually progressing through Kumaon and Gurwal. It has appeared at Sreenugur, three or four fatal cases occurring daily. But it is a remarkable fact, in reference to the progress of this disease in the hills, that its virulence appears to be confined to the houses and villages situate in hot and low valleys.—Ibid. Aug. 11.

THE ROOKEE COLLEGE has received the final sanction of the Court of Directors, as a permanent government establishment. Its efficiency and utility have already been tested, and are glad to hear that the institution is to be placed on an enlarged footing.—Ibid.

THE MURDERS AT BAITOOL.—We have been favoured with a line from our friend in central India responding to the notice in our issue of the 17th ult., wherein we alluded to the total absence of all corroboration of the bloody deeds of which Baitool had recently been the scene. He informs us that the affair partook too much of actuality and completion to be benefited by extended comments by him; that no further confirmation than he received regarding it at the time he made the communication to us was needed; and that had he harboured the slightest doubt as to its entire truthfulness, no publicity would have been bestowed on a matter so serious. He further intimates to us that we have been led into an error in stating that a European lady and family had been the subjects of the atrocities, he supposed by the Delhi Gazette's correspondent, who vaguely enough reported that "the family of Dr. —" (giving the name in full, but which it would have been in better taste to have omitted) "had been murdered, &c.," without explaining the character of the family. On referring to his former note, we observe no mention made by our correspondent of the victims being Europeans, and he now gives us the following brief and painful recital of the facts:—"The unhappy victims of such fell barbarity were, a married native woman, with whom Dr. — had cohabited prior to his departure from Baitool; a child born by this woman to her husband previously to her illicit intimacy with Dr. —; two children of Dr. —'s by her; and the aged mother of the first-mentioned victim. The outraged husband had constantly threatened to seek revenge when the opportunity presented itself; and he is now in custody on suspicion, but it is doubtful whether the crime can be brought home to him."—Bombay Times, Aug. 7.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE OBSERVATORY.—We understand that there are four applicants for the appointment of superintendent of the Calcutta Observatory, about to be vacated by the retirement of Professor Ross. The candidates in the field are Baboos Sreenauth Doss, Radhanauth Sikdhar, Gopennauth Sen, and Mr. W. N. James, an assistant in the great trigonometrical survey of India.—Hurkara, Aug. 19.

EARTHQUAKE.—A correspondent from Dacca, dating his letter 10th August, states that five minutes after five A.M., on the 9th instant, the inhabitants were startled by a severe shock of an earthquake. It passed on from east to west, and stopped the clock of our informant, which stands on a bracket with the pendulum which moves from north to south. The shock was so severe that a friend was nearly thrown down from his chair, while engaged in the useful occupation of reading a leader in the columns of the Citizen. Our correspondent says, "the like before was never felt, at least for the last five and sixty years."—Citizen, Aug. 16.

THE SHEKAWATTEE BATTALION has volunteered for service in Burmah.

FRONTIER MAGAZINES.—A correspondent at Simla writes:—"The Governor-General, having fully considered the question regarding the frontier magazines, has come to the conclusion that it would be advisable to retain Ferozepore as the chief depôt for the Punjab, adding a subordinate depôt at Jhelum. The position of Ferozepore is obviously favourable, when the stores are brought by the Indus from Bombay, as recent inquiries have shown it is very desirable they should be. For all the military stations between the Sutledge and the Chenaub, Ferozepore is as conveniently situated as Jhelum, while the buildings already in existence there, and the magazine arrangements which have long been in operation, give it an advantage over Jhelum, where neither buildings nor arrangements have been commenced. Experience, too, has shown that Jhelum itself and the Derajat can be supplied with stores from Ferozepore, with great convenience of speed. These considerations all point to the expediency of retaining Ferozepore as the main frontier magazine; at all events, it must be maintained until the doubts which have been raised regarding the navigation of the Jhelum have been settled by means of a regular survey, which I hear his lordship has ordered. It is also reported that the Governor-General is fully and decidedly of opinion that the site selected for the construction of a depôt at Jhelum, a building of this nature being highly necessary there, should be commenced upon with the concurrence of the Military Board, to whom I believe a reference on this extremely important point has been made."—Hurkara, Aug. 19.

CASHMERE.—(Extract of a letter from the valley).—"Run-beer Singh, attended by a huge rabble of soldiers, Brahmins, and mendicants, has gone to the annual pilgrimage of Amurnath, a shrine situated high up in the snowy range; the merits of which trip are said to consist in the host of privations incidental to a tour through barren rocks, and also in the performance of a few miles' penance in puris naturalibus! Our resident has betaken himself to that lovely spot, the Gul Mar (distant from Sreenugur some thirty miles); it is situated about 4000 feet above the valley, and is romantically picturesque. Imagine towering mountains, clad with pine forests to the verge of the snow; a dell carpeted with green turf and spangled with gaily coloured flowers, running for miles along their base and murmuring stream, glittering under the genial sunbeam, to complete the landscape. Night robbery is increasing here at a great rate; no person seems to feel secure, the houses of the principal shopkeepers are continually visited, and one of them informed me that the gangs are composed of soldiers, and that he could plainly distinguish them by the moonlight. The merchants have solicited some protection against the thieves, but are told there is no remedy. Such is the state of things, that a rumour has got abroad, the prince is trying to obtain a lakh of rupees, to make up a deficit in the royal treasury, and such is the method he has adopted of raising it. Extortion is still in vogue. Yesterday I saw a victim of it hanging in the bazaar; he was a dyer by trade, and was ordered at the Rajah's command to furnish Rs. 500, of which being able to muster only 300, he sought safety in suicide! All the shops are strictly watched by two or three armed sentries, who levy imposts on their own account, on the work or goods of the occupants; one or two of these robbers have been complained of by visitors to the prince, and received punishment. From all I have lately seen, I should say the soldiery have the upper hand here, and that a row may be sooner or later expected."

ACCESSION TO THE ARMY.—The annexed paragraph is copied from an Allahabad letter of 30th of July, published in the Calcutta Morning Chronicle of 6th August:—"A considerable sensation has been created here in favour of Captain McGregor's appeal in England for the distribution of a certain number of cadetships to the officers of the army, for their sons and relatives. This sympathy with the gallant captain and his endeavours, arises from the accession of four young gentlemen cadets to the strength of the station during the last ten days, and in regimental gradation too. These four olive branches, belonging to a major, a captain, a lieutenant, and a jolly ensign, were born in the above order, or as it were by seniority, and are all described as most lovely babies, although one that I saw looked as if it had apoplexy, and struck me as anything but handsome."

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—The information we gave last week from a casual notice in the Overland Summary, that the Court of Directors had sanctioned the electric telegraph for India has been fully confirmed by our private letters, which had been accidentally detained. The Board of Control and the Court of Directors have given their full consent to all the suggestions made by Lord Dalhousie regarding the establishment of the great lines of telegraphic communication throughout India, without hesitation. The transaction we have now the pleasure of noticing is rendered memorable by two circumstances; first, that the boon is the greatest which has ever been bestowed on India since it came into compass; and, secondly, that it has been granted in the shortest period within which any concession has ever been known to have been made. We believe that Lord Dalhousie's official minute on the subject, which has proved so beneficial, was written after he had returned to Calcutta from the north-west provinces, and had an opportunity of ascertaining the success of Dr. O'Shaughnessy's experiment. He was at once struck with the inconceivable advantage which would arise to Government from the establishment of similar lines throughout India, and he lost no time in soliciting the immediate attention of the home authorities to the subject. The despatches went home, we believe, on the 8th of April, and before the end of July, in less than four months—information has reached Calcutta that the court had given their most cordial sanction to the proposal.—Friend of India, Aug. 12.

A NEW METEOROLOGICAL DISCOVERY, the Englishman states, has been explained to the Asiatic Society of Bengal by Mr. Piddington. The discovery consists in the measurement "in geographical miles of the distance from the crest of one rising wave (barometric) to that of another in the very height and fury of a Cyclone." It has been found that during the Madras Cyclone of April, 1851, the average distance was 4.6 miles, and the interval of time at which they followed each other, one hour and one minute, though the Cyclone itself was travelling at the rate of 7.6 miles per hour.

THE AFFREEDIES.—The Delhi Gazette says that cold-blooded murders are frequent between Bannoo and Peshawar, chiefly committed by the Affreedies. A Golundaze of the 8th battalion was hacked to pieces by three robbers on the 12th July, and a grass-cutter was also killed a few days afterwards by men of the same tribe. Rahmut Khan, the Affreedie chief, receives, it is said, Rs. 6,000 a year from the British Government to keep open the passes.

MISSIONARY PROGRESS.—A number of educated Hindoos in despair of checking the progress of Christianity by the ordinary weapons of calumny and persecution, have resorted to the more civilized expedient of attacking its doctrines at the root. They have commenced the publication of a monthly periodical filled with extracts from infidel writers, which they are endeavouring to circulate as an antidote to the teaching of the Missionaries.—Friend of India.

THE HISTORY OF THE CONQUERORS OF HIND, by Maharajah Apurva Krishna Bahadoor, honorary poet to his Majesty the King of Delhi.—We have received the fourth chapter of this work, which contrary to the usual custom in India, is issued as a serial bound in cloth. It is "published by command of his Majesty," that is, we presume, the King of Delhi, and is intended "to extend the fame of his Majesty's ancestors, and to record their heroic actions." It is written in Oordoo verse, doubtless worthy of a poet laureate to so illustrious a potentate, and as far as we can judge from the English translation, it does not debase the dignity of history by poetic flights or lofty imaginings. We think it was Dr. Johnson, who said that history ought to be like an almanac; and the Maharajah has followed the precept to the letter. Read by this light, even the story of Humayoon, every page of which is a romance, becomes dry and uninteresting; and the hero who three times lost and three times regained his crown, sinks into an ordinary prince who "died at the age of fifty-one after a reign of twenty-five years."—Friend of India.

THE MEMORIAL OF THE CALCUTTA BRITISH INDIA ASSOCIATION TO PARLIAMENT contains some very sweeping charges against the public administration in India, and it will be said, and what is more, it will be believed, that these have been concocted in the dark, and have been clandestinely sent to England, lest they should be subjected to exposure in this country, where the subject is fully understood. The memorial contains many demands of new power and larger prerogatives on behalf of the natives, and it will be said that the concealment of the document arose from a dread of the examination of these pretensions in this country. Any such suspicion diffused abroad in England will do infinitely more harm to the cause of the memorial than even the most adverse remarks of the press here. There is nothing which rouses the indignation of an Englishman so much as to hear of any proceeding which wears the appearance of a bold and corner dodge. We are most anxious that the opinions of the natives should be fully represented to the parliamentary committee; but when they go up to that body, not only with a statement of what they wish parliament to do for the country, but also of what they wish it to believe regarding the present system, they are bound to give the utmost publicity to their opinions, that they may be freely sifted, and ventilated in India.—Friend of India, Aug. 12.

APPLICATIONS FOR COMMISSIONS ON VETERAN ESTABLISHMENT.

Fort William, Aug. 20.—The following paragraphs of a military letter from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, dated 1st July 1852, are published for general information:

Letter dated 9th March, 1852, No. 35.—Memorials of assistant commissaries B. Murphy and W. Raynor, praying for the commission of lieutenant on the veteran establishment, supported by the recommendation of the Com.-in-Chief.

5. "The present appear to be such cases as were contemplated by us when we issued our resolution to grant, in special instances, under the united recommendation of the government and Com.-in-Chief, the commission of lieutenant on the veteran establishment to distinguished warrant officers of the class above the rank of conductor.

6. "Assistant commissary Murphy has served fifty years, thirty-three of which he has passed in the ordnance department. Assistant commissary Raynor's service extends to forty-four years, of which thirty-two in the ordnance. Both have maintained high characters in the discharge of their duties, and both have served in the field. They are recommended for the distinction by his excellency the Com.-in-Chief, who as your government observe, it will be seen entirely concurs in the favourable view taken of their claim taken by his predecessor."

7. "We now authorise you to grant to assistant commissaries Murphy and Raynor commissions as lieutenants on the veteran establishment from the date of your receipt of this despatch."

The honourable court's despatch having been received on the 17th August, 1852, the commissions of lieutenant on the veteran establishment and the allowances to be drawn by lieutenants Murphy and Raynor will have effect from that date.

THE NIZAM'S DOMINIONS.

The province of Berar appears to be still in a very disturbed state. The Ellichpore correspondent of the Madras Spectator, writing on the 20th July, says:—"Three troops of cavalry, two 6-pounders and a 12-pounder howitzer, the head quarters of the 5th Nizam's Infantry, and flank companies of the 2nd "Russell's" Nizam's Infantry, have been ordered to be held in readiness, to march on field service, on an hour's notice. Captain Daniel, 2nd "Russell's" N.I. has been ordered to take charge of the cavalry, whilst in the field. The brigadier has acted judiciously, in choosing this officer to lead the cavalry, he well knowing the morale of the men; and the bold and rapid marches they can make, when necessary, to take advantage of attacking an enemy unexpectedly. Report says, the cause for sounding the tocsin is, that some Rohillas, whom the Naib of Kolahpore had entertained in his service, not being paid their wages, proceeded to Reidpore, whether he had fled, to seize him person, and make him fulfil his engagement. The Naib of Reidpore, alarmed at the approach of the Rohillas, ran away from his village, and came into Ellichpore cantonments; being the bearer of his own news, he no doubt represented his case in the most favourable manner. Hence, I should think that the brigadier, anticipating an overt act of aggression on the part of the Rohillas, ordered the force to be held in readiness to repress them. The disturbance originates from the contention of Boodun Khan and Emam Newaz Jung for the possession of Oomrowtee. The incumbent (Boodun Khan's naib) was ordered to be ousted: accordingly, the naib of Kolahpore, Emam Newaz Jung's servant, hired Rohillas to effect this object. In the mean time, Boodun Khan, who had promised a larger douceur to the minister, received a sunnud, confirming him in possession of Oomrowtee. On receipt of this last order, the naib of Kolahpore fled, leaving the Rohillas in the lurch, without paying them one pice of their pay. By the bye, a word or two, regarding this same Boodun Khan. He was Talookdar of Muktal some years ago, when several complaints were preferred against him, by the Ranees of Lookapilla. Crimes of the blackest dye were laid to his charge. Col. Tomkyns, the then brigadier of Bolarum, was ordered to proceed to Muktal, to investigate the charges. The facts which were elicited were not made public; but one thing is notorious, that Boodun Khan was deprived of his Talookdarship; and the colonel installed another man in his office. Fair ground for the inference, that malversation must have been brought home to him. He is now a great man in the city of Hyderabad, it would appear. It is to be hoped he has turned over a new leaf; but it is more probable that he can, chameleon like, at all times change to suit his purpose. What a pity that the Nizam's fiscal affairs should be confided to such hands."

The Madras Spectator's Hyderabad correspondent, writing on the 11th August, gives the subjoined account of a rather strange method of securing payment of debts:—"A scene of violence is now being perpetrated, which you may perhaps think worth publishing. Two Brahmins, brothers, suffering misery and destitution in common with a great part of the community for lack of payment of their arrears, inveigled Sonajee Pundit, one of the two ministers of finance, into an apartment, where they have shut themselves up with him, now about thirty-six hours. The minister has not failed to send deputies to them, with a profusion of promises, to obtain the release of Sonajee Pundit, but without effect. The brothers refuse to receive any pledge whatsoever but from General Fraser or Shums-ool-Oomra. Here, at least, we see these two gentlemen brought into contrast with Saraj-ool-Moolk. The Governor-General has restored the old reading of the order, and the contingent is to be paid at the beginning of the fifth month, instead of the sixth month, as had lately been decided. The Nizam has ordered Shums-ool-Oomra to send his troops against the Sikhs, who are levying black mail. Shums-ool-Oomra's movements are slow, and apparently reluctant. I question whether his party is strong enough to put down the Sikhs. Why the Arabs, who are strong enough for the service, are not sent out, is no longer a question. The solution is known. The Arabs will do just as they please."

The LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Madras on August the 23rd via Point-de-Galle. The Pottinger, with the subsequent mail of August 24, left Aden Sept. 14 for Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.

MEDICAL COMMITTEE.—The Madras Government has at length taken itself to doing "good by stealth;" it is the duty of the journalist to make it "fame;" should there be any blushes, let us trust the fact will be notified in the Gazette. A medical committee has been for some weeks in existence at the presidency—it is our turn to blush now, that we come so late with the duty of thoroughly investigating the Materia Medica of India. Six Mofussil committees have been also instituted at the principal stations; to assist in the inquiry and correspond with the central body. Selfishness is laid down in some ethical theories as the basis of all virtues; we fear the display of goodness now recorded germinates from some such inferior principle, as the ultimate object of the committee's researches is to discover to what extent the medical supplies, now ordered sent at considerable expense from Europe, may be supplied of equal quality and much cheaper in this country. There is not the least doubt that the results of the investigation will be the disclosure of much new, pleasing, and not the least though last—profitable knowledge.—Athenaeum, Aug. 24.

A MELANCHOLY OCCURRENCE has happened at Belgum. Sergt.-maj. Smith, of the 2nd company, 1st batt. artillery, was lying in his room on the night of the 7th August, when he saw a man approaching his room from the direction of the school-room, which is adjacent to his own. He asked the man what he wanted, to which an indirect reply was given: the sergeant-major saw a bayonet in his hand, and, jumping up, seized him by the throat; but, in the scuffle, the rifleman managed to stab his victim in the groin or lower part of the abdomen. The name of the murderer is M'James Duncan, a highlander.

REINFORCEMENTS FOR BURMAH.—The H. C. steamer Ferose arrived in the Madras roads on Thursday, bearing the despatches of the Governor-General to the Madras authorities regarding the reinforcements for Burma. Only one brigade, we hear, is to be despatched for the present from Madras, which will consist, it is generally thought, of the 1st Fusiliers, the 5th M.N.I., now at Khyook Phyeok, the 19th N.I.; the C. Troop Horse artillery, and two companies of sappers; the whole under the command of Brigadier Malcolm McNeill. The Madras army will furnish a deputy quarter-master-general for the Army of Ava, and a deputy assistant adjutant-general for the Madras division. The ordnance arrangements to continue, we understand, as at present; and the medical staff will receive no accessions from Madras. The force will be despatched by steamers, four in addition to the Ferose, almost immediately; but the Madras authorities are at liberty to engage all necessary tonnage, and have already invited tenders. We must congratulate the public that Madras is not to lose the services of the body-guard. The gallant volunteers have received the thanks of the Governor-General for the offer of their services, which, however, it has not been deemed expedient to divert from their present arduous employment. A regiment of irregular cavalry from Bengal, more accustomed to the rough work of soldiering, will be employed. No increase, it is said, will be made to the establishments of regiments proceeding on foreign service.—Athenaeum, Aug. 21.

EAST INDIAN EMIGRATION.—The scheme of East Indian emigration to the Australian colonies, which was proposed some time ago, which created a momentary sensation, and which (as such sudden agitations in this benighted presidency usually do) almost as suddenly subsided, but which was subsequently revived, and the flickering spark of which occasionally is observed amidst the almost Cimmerian darkness which is the unhappy characteristic of the capital of the Carnatic, is likely to derive a fresh stimulus, but upon a somewhat different basis, by the enterprising exertions of a few private individuals. Some two or three gentlemen have determined upon purchasing a small vessel, for the purpose of having her fitted out for passengers to the colonies, arranging their plans in such a way as shall insure a cheap and comfortable passage for persons of moderate means, upon terms which we are induced to believe will prove extremely advantageous to those embarking for Sydney or Van Diemen's Land, and which are likely also to prove moderately profitable to the speculators, if the proposal which the parties intend to make should be taken up by any of those who are desirous of exchanging a residence in this country for a pleasanter one in Australia.—Examiner, Aug. 20.

THE LATE CAPTAIN ELIOT, of the Madras Engineers, was a brother of Sir Henry Eliot, secretary to the Government of India, and shared largely in the talent which distinguishes that most eminent public servant. The Madras Government have long enjoyed a creditable distinction for the judgment and care with which their selections have been made of officers to fill scientific appointments under them, and never were better selections made than those of Captain Ludlow, for the charge of the Magnetic Observatory at the Presidency, and that of Lieut. Eliot for a similar establishment at Singapore. Mr. Eliot's labours commenced in December, 1840, and having set the work fairly agoing on the spot, he, simultaneously with these, had observations made in Java, Borneo, and others of the islands around; and at the meeting of the British Association, in 1845, it was intimated that his records had been sent in to the Royal Society completed up to December, 1844. [At this time the various magnetic observatories had mostly finished the term of duty originally assigned to them, and those under the East-India Company were from 1846 directed to be discontinued, with the exception of Madras and Bombay, which imposed such a very trifling tax upon the states that they were desired to remain in operation. Mr. Eliot was now sent on a general meteorological and magnetic survey in the Eastern Seas, the results of which have been for some months past daily expected to appear before the world, when a career, alike honourable to himself, and useful to the world, was cut short by the hand of death. The loss of this able and much lamented officer adds one to the score of illustrations every year supplies of the extreme importance of speedy publication of the information collected for the public service.—Bombay Times, Aug. 21.

THE MOPLAHS.—Intelligence has reached the Madras Administration from Malabar, that another Moplah outbreak had been nipped in the bud. Four Moplahs, armed, had been trying to raise a following, but, before the popular frenzy was worked up to the point of enlistment, the authorities interfered, and the four desperadoes shut themselves up in a building at Poothoor, a village about twelve miles to the north-east of Calicut, where the Talook people made short work with them. We are indebted to a correspondent on the coast for the following items of news from Malabar: our informant dates from Cochin, 17th inst.—"The Moplahs are running a-muck again. Three of them fired at a Mamboody on the 8th inst. at a place called Manasherry, in the Calicut talook, but missed the intended victim. What their real or alleged grievance has been, I have not as yet learned. They, however, felt disposed to manage matters in the true Tipperary style. After firing at this official, they attempted to force an entry into the residence of one Manoel Nair, a chieftain of some prowess, but finding they were likely to meet with a warm reception, they abandoned the idea and proceeded on to Poothoor in Tamboocherry, which is not far from Calicut. There they took possession of the menon's or village accountant's house, which they resolved to surrender only with their lives. The tasildars of Calicut and Coormenaad proceed to the place with a strong party of peons, and attacked and killed the three Moplahs, who died game; but what injury has been inflicted on the peons I have not heard. A sharp correspondence is now being carried on between the commissioner, Mr. Strange, and the collector of Malabar, relative to the Moplah outbreaks.—Bombay Times, Aug. 28.

DISAFFECTION IN A NATIVE CORPS.—Our Ootacamund correspondent informs us that the Commander-in-Chief had received intelligence from Trichinopoly, of great disaffection existing in the 29th regiment, stationed there. Our informant speaks of it as mutiny; we hope, however, that he has been misinformed on the subject. The disaffection was caused by the commanding officer ordering the men to be supplied with cotton caps for roll-call parades, &c., and that a certain portion of their pay should be stopped to pay for them.—Bangalore Herald, Aug. 13.

BOMBAY.

The LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Bombay on August 21st.

ADEN.—We have letters from Aden to the 13th inst. The steam frigate Auckland, which left Bombay on the 24th ult. reached her destination at 5 a.m. on the 10th inst., and her mails were taken on to Suez at 6 p.m. by the Victoria. The P. and O. Co.'s steamer Oriental arrived at 8 a.m. on the 11th, and left the same evening for Calcutta. The Eria left Aden for Suez at daylight on the 29th July, but ran short of coal and failed to get to the latter port; in time either, to get her own cargo put on board the Bombay, from Alexandria, or take over the cargo and passengers for Bombay, which had been brought on by the Oriental. The Eria had on board 1,200 bales of silk, worth 120,000l. which would thus be detained at Alexandria till the departure of the next mail for England. The medical attendant of the pasha of Jeddah had gone to Suez in the Victoria on his way home. He and the pasha, with but four attendants, having escaped from a desperate fight which had taken place with the Arabs near that town, he had made the best of his way to Aden. It would appear that the Turkish troops had been surprised whilst on the march: forty of the Albanian regiment threw down their arms and were instantly slaughtered, but the remainder fought till the corps was exterminated. The pasha, who is said to have behaved with great resolution, cut his way through the enemy, and, with six followers, had got beyond the reach of pursuit, when, overpowered by fatigue, he sank down and died from exhaustion. The pasha of Mocha, at the head of 200 regulars and 400 irregulars, had taken the field against the insurgents,—but it was reported at Aden that they were surrounded and cooped up by the Arabs; and as the soldiers of the government were afraid to face the enemy, their position was an exceedingly critical one. It was expected at Aden that the H.C.'s sloop Elephantstone would be ordered to cruise on the coast, for the protection of British interests.—Bombay Times, Aug. 25.

ANTIQUITIES.—A friend has brought to our notice the discovery of some work of human hands constructed perhaps ages ago, and which has made its appearance in the bed of the Mutteer River, about eight miles from this. The natives seem to think it was a fort, but others think it more likely to be the foundation of a bridge. We doubt not that inquiries will be made to throw further light on the subject. The large quantities of sand-hills which once covered the spot have been gradually washed away, and the river now forms its course on the spot where probably it may have run years ago.—Karnachee Advertiser, Aug. 14.

OFFICIAL LANGUAGE IN SCINDE.—Some discussion, we understand, is going on relative to the language which should be adopted in Scinde; that at present is a mongrel Persian, and perfectly unintelligible, and is, we fear, made the groundwork of much misrepresentation. The ryot of Scinde knows Sindhee, the British officers presiding at courts know only Hindustani, and between them is the native "omlah," knowing a language only intelligible to themselves; thus the ryot and ruler are severed from each other. By all means let us have plain Sindhee, which should be known to all officers able to fill the post of collector, magistrate, &c. Mongrel Persian conveys innumerable meanings to any subject, and is a dangerous language to deal in for the interests of Scinde on the one side and the British officer on the other.—Ibid.

THE SAUGOR AND NURBUDDA COMMISSION.—We hear that extensive changes will shortly take place amongst the constituents of the Saugor and Nerbudda Commission, in consequence of the sickness of one, the retirement of another, and the directed presence of a third with his corps now on service in Burmah. All these are first-class, or officiating first-class deputies.—Bombay Times, Sept. 1.

REPORTED GOLD-MINE.—We were informed yesterday that nothing less than a gold mine had been discovered in the camp. Inquiries soon led us to the spot, on the road to the northward of H.M.'s 64th regt. mess. Many were the visions of riches which floated through our brain as we approached where Englishmen, Parsees, Musselmans, and Hindos seemed collected in various multitudes, digging away with an exertion and spirit deserving of a better cause. Alas! and could it be so?—Yea! it turned out to be, as appeared to us, a sunk bath or water-tank without even a repee! Digging was, however, going on. There is no knowing what patience and perseverance may not do.—Ibid.

TWO MORE SOLDIERS of the Bombay army have been transported as felons for having offered violence to their superiors. We have heard that courts-martial are in future to be recommended to be more sparing of this punishment, and to substitute solitary confinement, and the infliction of the lash, in India, for it, in all cases where these are at all likely to be attended with any benefit. The miserable life led by military convicts in Norfolk Island does not appear to be understood by soldiers in India, or if it is, it seems to have no effect on them: something else than transportation requires therefore to be tried—the sooner the better.—Bombay Times, Aug. 28.

THE CEREMONY of driving the silver nail into the fore part of the keel of the twelve-gun brig, now on the stocks, was gone through yesterday afternoon, the hammer being wielded by the hand of the beautiful daughter of J. Warden, Esq. This observance has, we believe, been objected to by some as being heathenish, but we certainly did not observe that any attempt was made upon the occasion to introduce the worship of false gods. We say nothing about goddesses, for such was the galaxy of female beauty present that a certain degree of adoration became both natural and excusable.—Bombay Times, Aug. 25.

THE INDIAN NAVY.—On Monday last, a court-martial assembled on board the Hastings, to try two seamen for desertion. The Court consisted of the following gentlemen:—Captain Porter, president; Captain Kemphorne, Commanders Frushard, Jenkins, Young, and Barker; Lieutenants Rennie, Balfour, Berthon, and Grounds, members. The Court found it impossible to proceed, there being no one present competent to perform the duties of judge-advocate; and having waited six hours, they at four o'clock adjourned, intimating the fact, and the explanation, to the flag officer. The Commander-in-Chief immediately directed his secretary, Mr. Bone, to act as judge-advocate, and the following day the Court re-assembled. But here again a fresh difficulty occurred. The Judge Advocate allowed that from the reocency of his appointment it was impossible for him to have mastered the case, and the seamen themselves had received no intimation of the charges on which they were to be tried, although the offence, if established, might have subjected them to capital punishment. Being questioned, under these circumstances, whether they were willing that the matter should be proceeded with, they stated that they were; and the Court proceeded accordingly. To constitute desertion, three days' absence without leave is indispensable. These men had only, in reality, been away about twelve hours from their ship. The consequence was, the case broke down at once. No court-martial had ever been requisite, and their commanding officer was perfectly competent to deal with them for the offence of being absent without leave. We need not add one word of commentary to the above facts. The want of a Judge-Advocate is due to Government,—probably, indeed, to the general Government of India, as no stipendiary, even to the extent of one rupee a month, can be appointed without the sanction of supreme authority.—Bombay Times, Aug. 28.

LEARN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES, gentlemen of the army, or you will not be qualified for staff berths of any kind, will, we expect, shortly be the rule throughout India. On the 5th inst. his Honour the President of the Council of India, in Council, was pleased to direct "that officers who have not passed the prescribed examination in the native languages qualifying for the appointment of interpreter, shall not be placed in charge of commissariat offices during the absence of executive officers on temporary leave, under General Order, Governor General, 20th March, 1851." Are all executive commissariat officers qualified as interpreters, we should like to know?—Bombay Times, Aug. 21.

THE BOMBAY RAIL.—The works of our rail have, even in the thickest of the rains, been in most active progress, and are now in a state of advancement that must astonish the most sanguine; and it seems not unlikely that a considerable extent will be opened by the 31st of October, the second anniversary of turning the first sod. At present, every spot where work-people can be employed literally swarms with them, the hum of industry resounding on every side. The embankment across Sion Marsh has for some time been completed; as was expected, a very considerable amount of shrinkage has taken place, and the subsidence has been especially unequal; as the rails here are in use, the sleepers have acquired to be from time to time detached and slightly raised, to regulate their level. Hence the locomotive is at present actively at work carrying ballast from Sion, where it is excavated from the diggings along the line, through Salsette, to wherever it is required, daily making up the deficiencies arising from shrinkage as they appear. The re-adjustment of the rails from Byculla along the flats will not be commenced till the rains are over, as the locomotive has work enough for the next six months farther on. The Mahim branch is, we believe, nearly completed. From Nowrojee, on Bhandarghar Hill, as it is more frequently called, the rails are completed all along, and heavy waggons drawn by bullocks are busily at work. To the southward of this, again, towards Bombay, the cutting and embanking is finished, and the ballasting laid down, but neither the sleepers nor the rails. The line has emerged from the native town, and a cutting is in progress opposite Boree Bunder, workpeople being busily engaged on both sides of the public road. The works now approach close to the terminus—immediately to the south-westward of the Fort George Gate, near the large tank, by the washermen's arcade. From this direction the fort would appear to be considered impregnable, as permanent erections have been permitted to the washermen, and are about to be so to the railway company, in defiance of the regulation so sternly enforced opposite the sea-face of the ramparts. The bridge which crosses the public road over the rail at Byculla, expected to have been in use in May, is still incomplete; it is to be perfectly flat, the floor for the roadway to be supported by strong iron girders. We mentioned many months back the existence of two structures in this neighbourhood, commenced about the same time, striking from their extreme dissimilitude and from the influence the one was likely hereafter to exercise on the other and on its congeners.—Bombay Times, July 29.

BARODA AFFAIRS.—We have just seen a circular from Government, intimating the dismissal of Nursoo Pant, late agent to the resident at Baroda, from the public service; and stating that he is no longer fit to hold a situation under Government. Our readers will be able to draw the proper inference from this, without the aid of our comments.—Telegraph, Sept. 1.

"THE BOMBAY ASSOCIATION" was formed on the 26th August, composed of the principal native inhabitants of Bombay—Hindoo, Parsee, Mahomedan, Jewish, and Indo-Portuguese—and instituted with the object of ascertaining the wants of the people of India, and the measures calculated to advance their welfare, and of representing the same to the authorities in India and England. No less a sum than Rs. 24,000 had been subscribed to promote the object of the association.

THE AUSTRALIAN EMIGRATION MANIA has reached Bombay. A vessel, named the Romynde, was in this port, bound for Portland and Port Phillip. A good many intending emigrants, both Europeans and East-Indians, had booked themselves for a passage in her; and it is stated that numerous soldiers in the European regiments in the interior, entitled to their discharge, had applied for it to Government, in order to proceed to the land of gold.

NATIVE EDUCATION.—A correspondent of the Bombay Times mentions, that a great meeting was held at Sholapore on the 25th July, for the purpose of establishing an English school and native general library. Upwards of 600 persons attended, comprising all the wealthiest Sirdars, merchants, and other natives of the zillah, and all the European gentlemen of the neighbourhood. Messrs. Nava Morojee and Pandurang Juggernath addressed the audience, in the vernacular, and upwards of Rs. 3,000 was subscribed on the spot towards the erection of the school-house.

FAIRS IN SCINDE.—Mr. Frow, the commissioner of Scinde, in continuation of his efforts to establish fairs in Scinde, has issued a notification to the mercantile community, that all the duties now levied on the frontier of Scinde will be suspended from the 15th November to the 15th February, during which the fairs are to take place. Commodious buildings are also in course of erection for the accommodation of the merchants, and any suggestions from the traders themselves will be immediately attended to. As the export frontier duties have since been abolished in toto, part of this notification has ceased to be of value.

BANK OF BOMBAY.—From the very first, the bank of Bombay suffered from an inability to employ its funds. A Bengal secretary was disappointed in getting shares at par, and after throwing every obstacle in the way of a charter, through revengeful feelings, he managed, when he found further delay impracticable, to strike a blow at the bank from which it could not, as yet, have recovered; from this cause came one of the conditions of the Bengal Act, that the whole of the subscribed capital be paid into the Government treasury before the bank could be allowed to open. To provide suitable employment for these funds became difficult, especially under the restrictive clauses of the Act; and in this crisis, speculation in Government paper was resorted to, and nearly seventy lacs of the available funds, eighteen lacs above the capital, were invested in the four per cent. loan at par. We see by the statement published yesterday, that the amount locked up in Government securities still exceeds thirty-three lacs; therefore, to reduce this investment to its present figure of three-fifths of the capital, must have entailed a considerable loss, and taken away much of what would otherwise have formed a part of the dividends. This is what Bengal supremacy has produced. But the bank had opponents even stronger than Mr. Thoby Prinsep. The Court of Directors, at the time the bank charter was applied for, held almost a monopoly of the exchange operations of India, and, fearing that chartered banks might interfere greatly with their hypothecation system, became very solicitous to prevent the evil consequences to the public in general, and to the shareholders in particular, of overtrading. As if this was not enough opposition, we find Calcutta jobbery stepping in to crush all hope of a wholesome employment of capital. The bank, by its charter, is at liberty to open branches at Calcutta and Madras, and the directors at one time attempted this, but their guardian angels in Bengal, and the cherubins in London, were opposed to the measure; they desired to restrict the business of Bengal to the chartered bank, and to the celebrated Union Bank. The injury resulting from Thoby Prinsep's failure to obtain shares at par is now nearly overcome, but the second and third injuries are still in operation; and at a time when we find the bank resorting to house-building in a dear place like this, for want of better employment for its money, we think it is worthy of serious consideration whether or not the restrictions against exchange operations, and the semi-restrictions against agencies, should not be removed.—Bombay Gazette, Aug. 5.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

DRESS OF OFFICERS IN THE INDIAN NAVY.

Commodore's Office, Bombay, July 29, 1852.—In consequence of a communication from the Hon. Court of Directors, and by direction of the Right Hon. the Gov. in Council, and to prevent any mistake in the future arrangements of the uniform of the officers of the Indian Navy,—

I hereby order the following changes to take place:—

Commodores of 2nd Class and Captains of Three Years' Standing.—Two gold epaulettes with forty bullions each, a bonnet and crescent, and edging to the strap;—devices, an anchor surmounted by a grenade, above that the lion.

Captains under Three Years.—The same epaulettes; devices, an anchor surmounted by a lion.

Commanders.—Two epaulettes, gold bullions 3½ inches long, 1½ inch in circumference;—device, a lion.

Lieutenants.—Two plain gold epaulettes, bullion 3 inches long, 1½ inch in circumference;—no device.

All the devices on the epaulettes are to be of silver.

Pursers.—Two epaulettes of gold, the same bullion as Lieutenants, but silver strap.

Secretary to Commander-in-Chief.—The same as pursers, with a golden lion on the strap.

Surgeons.—The same as pursers.

The epaulettes of all grades are to be loose bullion, and the present box and jacket epaulettes are to be discontinued.

And as much inconvenience has arisen from a want of uniformity of dress for the officers of the service (more particularly so when waiting upon their superiors) who, from the variety of orders given, and from their being at present six or seven different dresses worn, can scarcely know which is right, I beg it to be distinctly understood that I have no objection to the surtout coat being continued without epaulettes, as worn by the officers of the Royal Navy, and with distinctive lace on the cuffs, as follows, viz.—

Commodore of 2nd Class.—Four rows ½ of an inch wide.

Captains.—Three rows ½ inch wide.

Commanders and Secretary to Commander-in-Chief.—Two rows ½ inch wide.

Lieutenants.—One row ½ inch wide.

The surtout coats of all other officers to be plain. The coat to be of blue cloth or kersymerie, double-breasted, with the Hon. Co.'s buttons, and to be worn only by officers above and with the rank of purser.

Jackets and round hats to be worn on board the ship, if permitted by the captain or commanding officer.

Mates and midshipmen, when on duty at the dockyard, or rigging-loft, or in boats, may wear a blue cloth jacket.

The caps of all officers down to the rank of clerk, and of 1st class engineers, and 1st class boatswains, gunners, and carpenters, are to be surmounted with the Company's lion.

The officers of the Indian Navy employed on shore as officers at the dockyard, will appear either in or out of uniform, according to custom, but at other times they will wear the uniform of their rank.

I call upon commanding officers, as well as the senior officers of the fleet, to see these orders and regulations strictly carried out, and to impress upon the younger officers of the service the necessity of setting a good example by being more attentive to their dress and appearance than, I regret to say, a few of them have hitherto been.

The uniform ordered is to be adopted immediately, but six months from this date will be allowed for procuring and changing the epaulettes.

(Signed) H. J. LEEKE, Commodore,
Commander-in-Chief, I. N.

DISCHARGE OF MUSICIANS.

Head-Quarters, Poona, Aug. 3, 1852.—Several cases having been brought to the notice of the commander of the forces in which commanding officers of corps or band committees appeared to have made arrangements with musicians belonging to other bands or regiments, and to have furnished them with the means of purchasing their discharge from the army, under engagements for their entertainment as band-master or musician, without having previously obtained the concurrence of the authority under whose immediate orders the men were serving, the major-general is pleased strictly to prohibit so irregular a proceeding for the future, and will hold commanding officers of corps responsible that no such engagements be entered into henceforth with the men of any other band or regiment.

EXAMINATION OF OFFICERS APPOINTED TO COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.

Bombay Castle, Aug. 24, 1852.—With reference to the G. G. O. by the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, dated Simlah, 6th September, 1852, laying down certain rules for the examination of officers appointed to the commissariat department on the Bengal establishment, the Right Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to establish the following rules in respect to the appointment of commissariat officers under this Presidency, viz:—

2. Candidates on being first appointed, will undergo a course of training, partly at the Presidency, and partly at Poona or Kurrachee, at the discretion of the commissary general, to whom a certificate of qualification of each candidate will be forwarded by the executive commissariat officer under whom he has served after a bona fide probation of twelve months; the commissary general will countersign, and submit these certificates to the President of the Committee of Examination.

3. The examinations will only be held at the Presidency, the Committee being composed of the secretary to the military board in the commissariat branch, the deputy military auditor general, and the deputy commissary general, the senior to preside; in the absence of any of these officers those officiating for them to perform this duty.

5. His Lordship in Council is also pleased to decide that no sub-assistant commissary general appointed to the department after the 6th September, 1851, the date of the promulgation of the G. O. by the Most Noble the Governor-General of India, will be promoted to the grade of deputy assistant commissary general, unless he passes the prescribed examination, and that no candidate who fails after twelve months' probation to pass the examination in question, will be appointed to the department.

6. The following are the heads of the examination:—

1. The probationer's acquaintance with his responsibility, and duties in the care and custody of the public cattle and stores under the charge of a commissariat officer.

2. His knowledge of the system of procuring supplies by departmental agency or contract as circumstances may require, and the rules affecting the preparation of contract deeds, and the liability of contractors.

3. His acquaintance with the mode of rationing European troops, and the different articles comprising their rations.

4. His acquaintance with the mode of rationing native troops, and with the circumstance under which rations are issued to them.

7. His knowledge of the equipments of cattle and stores required for the cavalry, artillery, and infantry, with reference to their numbers and the distance to be marched.

8. His general knowledge of book-keeping and his capacity in conducting with correctness and facility official correspondence in general, and framing such reports as are expected from commissariat officers.

9. His ability to prepare monthly disbursements from the account of his department and of commissariat agents with an account current, and his knowledge of the vouchers required to support charges under the different heads of expenditure.

10. The extent to which the probationer is conversant with the general system of accounts in the commissariat department.

CEYLON.

We are informed that, a few days ago, Lieut.-General Bainbridge gave a dinner to several of the Kandian nobles. Amongst those present were the members of the Dunaville, Molligodde, and Debegame families, to partake of the hospitality of their respected host. It is indeed a pleasing illustration of the absence of ignorant prejudice so wrongly attributed to the high-born races of Asia, to find them seated at the table of the English gentleman. We have lived to have had the Mahomedans exchange with us the Salaam Allikoom a salutation which ten years ago was an absolute impossibility.—Times, July 27.

It is said that Sir J. Pakington has, in consequence of the loss to the local revenue to the extent of 10,000*l.* a year, by the order for the abrogation of the cinnamon export duty, transmitted a peremptory request to Sir George Anderson for the reduction of salaries. The minute regarding these alterations will probably appear in next Saturday's Gazette. In the mean time, rumour has it that Mr. Gibson's salary will be curtailed 300*l.* a year; the police magistrate's augmentations are to be stopped, and coûte qui coûte, the loss to the revenue must be made. We, however, have heard nothing of any proposed reduction of either the salaries of the governor or the bishop. Of course, they will have a handsome slice cut from their loaf.—The public will look out anxiously for the publication of the orders from the Colonial Office.—Ibid.

CHINA.

THE INSURRECTION.—Suen, the Literary Chancellor of Kwang-se, has made the following report to the Emperor relative to the bad management of affairs and seizure of territory by the rebels in that province. The report runs as follows:—

"That, in the 27th year of Tsou-kwang (1847), Luy-tsae-how made a disturbance in Kwang-se, on which occasion many of his followers escaped punishment, and afterwards, by the carelessness of the district officers, many good men were led to join the insurrection. The anger of his Imperial Majesty being thus aroused, he thought not of the expense, but sent the great General Sae-shang-ah to cut off the rebels, thinking by a single arrow (i.e. by the slightest movement of the army) to establish his authority. But on arriving in Kwang-se, Sae-shang-ah could not continue a single scheme to overpower the rebels, understanding only how to deceive the court,—one day he would report a victory, and, on the next, the great merit of some officer—all of which was false. Yung-gan-chow was encompassed by the rebels for several months, although above 100,000 soldiers were collected from all quarters to overpower them; yet, instead of exterminating the rebels, they suffered them to march quietly away to Kwei-in-foo, which they immediately attacked. The writer, therefore, humbly prays that the said great general, for having deceived his Majesty, and involved the people in calamity by his mismanagement, be dealt with according to law.

"On the arrival of the Lieut.-Governor Tsou-ming-heo, he also proved utterly useless, for he kept his troops in encampment, and, listening to the words of the Censor Choo-ke, did nothing but drill the troops in their camps, and so wasted the money of his country in vain. On the 16th day of the 2nd moon, the rebels marched from Yung-gan, without any hindrance from the imperial troops. On the 26th day of the same month, they came to Yang-shan and Pih-sha; on the 27th they reached Luh-tang; on the 28th Leaug-fung, and on the 29th they got to the provincial city Kwei-in-foo, which they attacked for several days. Had it not been for the arrival of the Commander-in-chief the provincial city would certainly have been taken possession of by the rebels.

"The writer has been obliged to refer all this, praying that your Imperial Majesty will examine the affair."

Imperial Rescript in reply to the above.—"In reference to the report of Leun, the Literary Chancellor of Kwang-se, on account of the gross mismanagement on the part of Sae-shang-ah, and the loss of some territory through the carelessness of the Lieut.-Governor Tsou-ming-heo, I ought certainly to deal with them according to law. Choo-ke, the Censor, for advising such careless management of the army, is ordered to be dismissed from his office; and all those officers who have been meritoriously reported by Sae-shang-ah shall not be promoted for the present, but will be duly rewarded after the complete destruction of the rebels. The extermination of the rebels shall, in future, be under the direction of Chung, the Governor of Hoo-nan and Hoo-ph, and Choo, the Commander-in-chief of Hoo-nan. As for the great General Sae-shang-ah, and the Lieut.-Governor Tsou-ming-heo, they will be placed in the respective camps, to try what they can do; and if they will not exert their utmost strength to cut off the rebels, they shall really be punished as they deserve, and then it will be useless for them to say they have not been duly warned.—Respect this."

The following was received from a Chinese professing Christianity, some time ago:—

"We hear that King Teen-tih has taken the district town of Cheong-sa, in the province of Hoo-kwang, and has ordered churches to be erected for the worship of Shang-te (God). He has left troops to guard the city of Leen-chow, where there are also some Tartar troops. Teen-tih has adopted the dress and ceremonials of the Ming dynasty. It appears, however, that about one-half of the Hak-ka inhabitants of Kwei-in-foo and neighbouring districts refuse to worship Shang-te; because, at the commencement of the rebellion, about 3,000 Hak-ka people, both old and young, were either killed, or perished by starvation in the mountains. Three of their head men, of the respective ages of 16, 25, and 35, have sworn by their own blood, and have collected an armed band to attack Teen-tih."—Friend of China, July 17.

Gold is not the only large product which Australia sends to Europe. Her exports of wool reach in value nearly two millions of pounds sterling, and her tallow to nearly half a million. LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Colonel Rawlinson's examination of the cuneiform inscriptions continues to throw an astonishing light upon Assyrian history, and to attest, in a very remarkable manner, the accuracy of the Biblical records, with which the inscriptions appear to be in perfect unison.

In a paper written from Nineveh, read before the Royal Asiatic Society in June last, and which is printed with the Annual Report of the Society, just issued, Colonel Rawlinson has given a copious summary of the annals of Assyria, embracing the important results of the historical and geographical information which, he says, has been unfolded to him since he read to the Society his Memoir on the Inscriptions of Assyria and Babylon two years ago.

The great features of his present communication are the determination of the chronology,—which gives to the inscriptions a fixed place in history,—and the annals of Sennacherib. A rapid sketch of the records of the empire, as expounded by the colonel, will serve as a preface to his translation of the Sennacherib annals, which harmonize so wonderfully with the Scriptural writings.

The Assyrian empire was founded about B.C. 1250, by a king named after the goddess Decerto, or Semiramis, who probably built the city of Nineveh upon the Tigris. Several kings intervened between him and Anak-bar-beth-hira, who was the first to carry the Assyrian arms into foreign countries. His exploits are recorded upon a slab found in Nimrud. Connected Assyrian history commences with the 10th century B.C., from which point we have now an almost unbroken line of kings, down to the capture of Nineveh, in B.C. 606.

Sardanapalus, the grandson of Adrammelech I., ascended the throne about B.C. 930. His achievements, which were known to the Greeks, are chronicled upon a monolith, and Colonel Rawlinson promises a translation of this important inscription, which describes the various expeditions of the king, and affords the means of identifying a multitude of countries and cities mentioned in the books of Scripture, and of illustrating the general geography of Western Asia. The annals of his son, Divanubara, are likewise recorded, and have been already translated by Colonel Rawlinson.

We pass over the reigns of the succeeding monarchs until we come to Sargina, or Sargon, as he is termed by Isaiah (and whom the colonel identifies with Tiglath Pileser and Shalmaneser), a rebel, who destroyed the old royal family of Assyria, founding another dynasty, the events of whose reign are the subjects of several inscriptions, illustrating many important points of Scriptural and profane history, which are pointed out by Colonel Rawlinson in this very interesting paper.

Sargina was succeeded in B.C. 716 by his son, Sennacherib, and the following translation of the annals of the first six years of his reign is the result of the most careful scrutiny and comparison of three independent inscriptions.

His annals thus commence:—"In the first year of my reign I fought a battle with Merodach Baladan, king of Kar-duniyas, and the troops of Susiana who formed his army, and I defeated them [at a place supposed to be Warka]. He embarked on board his ships and fled across the sea, concealing himself in the country of Guzumman; to the river Agammi and the parts beyond it he fled. His ships saved him. His standards, his chariots, his horses, and his mares, his cattle, his camels, and his mules, which he abandoned on the field of battle, all fell into my hands. I then marched to his palace, which was near the city of Babylon; I opened the royal treasure-house and rifled it of the gold and silver vessels, the hoards of gold and silver, altogether a vast booty; his idols, the women of his palace, all his chief men, &c. &c. &c., each and all I seized and carried off into captivity. By the grace of Assur, my lord, 79 of the principal fortified cities of the Chaldeans, and 820 of the smaller towns which depended on them, I took and plundered. The nomadic tribes of the Arameans and Chaldeans who inhabited the Mesopotamian country, I subdued and carried off into captivity.

"A man of the name of Bel-adon, the son of one of my confidential officers, who had been bred up in my palace [all this is obscure], I appointed to be king of the country, attaching to his government the provinces of the north and east.

"At the same time I subjugated the Aramean tribes who lined the Tigris and Euphrates: the Tehaman [Teman of Scripture], the Rikis, the Yeukh, the Huud, the Kihrim, the Melikh, the Gurum, the Huul, the Damun, the Tebul, the Kindar [Kedar of Scripture], the Ruhua, the Bukud, the Khamram, the Khagarin [Hagarenes], the Nabaut [Nebaioth or Nabatæans], the Lihata, and the Arameans Proper. I carried off to Nineveh 208,000 men and women, 8,200 horses and mares, 11,180 head of cattle, 5,230 camels, 1,020,100 sheep, 800,300 goats; altogether an enormous booty."

Of this expedition it is only necessary to remark that the King Merodach Baladan, against whom it was directed, and who had been in arms against Sargina during a great part of that monarch's reign, was the same who a few years later sent an embassy to Hezekiah. It is further of interest to observe that the capital of the Chaldean king, even up to this late period of history, was in the lower country, at Kar-duniyas, and not at Babylon. The expedition against Babylon is mentioned both by Polybius and Abydenus as the opening exploit of Sennacherib's reign. A supplementary expedition took place during this year against certain tribes depending on the cities of Kharara and Khigami, of which places nothing is known.

Sennacherib during his second year was entirely occupied among the mountains to the north and east. He seems to have crossed the Taurus into countries to which his ancestors had never penetrated; and his annals contain the usual amount of burning and plundering, sweeping off the old population and planting fresh colonies in their place. The names are for the most part obscure, but there is one passage of interest in which the subjugated countries are said to have been committed to the care of the chief of Arraphki (the Arrapachitis of the Greeks), and memorial tablets to have been erected on the spot, these tablets probably still existing in the Kurdish mountains.

The annals of the third year require to be noticed in more detail. "In my third year," says Sennacherib, "I went up to the country of Khelta or Hittites [a name used to designate all Southern Syria; that is, Phœnicia, Palestine, and the country to the East, as far as the Euphrates]. Lubya, king of Sidon [the Eliaæus of Menander], had thrown off the yoke of allegiance. On my approach from Abiri he fled to Yetsan, which was on the sea-coast." [Yetsan is always spoken of as a maritime city, south of Phœnicia, which formed the extreme limit of the Assyrian territory towards Egypt; it must, therefore, represent the "Rhinocolura" of the Greeks.] "I reduced his entire country; the places which submitted to me were Sidon, the Greater and Sidon the Less, Beth Zitta, Saripat, Mahallat, Husuvva, Akzib, and Akka." [These names are of great interest, for they indicate all the Phœnician ports, in geographical order, from north to south. The distinction of two Sidons is new to geography. Beth Zitta, "the city of olives," is unknown, but it must be looked for between Sidon and Sarepta or Zariphat, the Saripat of the inscriptions; Mahallat is equivalent to the Hebrew מַחֲלַת, "an ascent;" and Husuvva is "Tyre," the name being derived from Usous, who, according to Sanchoniathon, was one of the founders of the city. In a subsequent part, however, of this inscription, Sennacherib speaks of the "Tyrians" under their own proper name. The two remaining cities Akzib and Akka are Akhzib or "Ecdippa," and Acco or "Acre," and we have thus a complete tableau of the whole Phœnician coast. Sennacherib now continues.] "I placed Tubal on the throne in the place of Lubya, and imposed on him the regulated amount of tribute. The kings of the sea-coast all repaired to my presence in the neighbourhood of the city of Husuvva, or Tyre, and brought me their accustomed tribute. These kings were, Mushalimmu (?) of Huslirun, Tubal of Sidon, Abdi Likat of Arvad [Arvad], Hurikhi of Gubal [Byblos], Mittinti of Ashdod, Budastor of Beth Anmon, Kammuranat of and of Huduma [Edom]. Sitka of Ascalon, who did not come to pay me homage, the gods of his house, and his treasures, his sons and his daughters, and his brothers of the house of his father, I seized and sent off to Nineveh.—I placed another chief [name illegible] on the throne of Ascalon, and I imposed on him the regulated amount of tribute." [The really important portion of the annals now commences.] "In the autumn of the year certain other cities, which had refused to submit to my authority, I took and plundered. The nobles and the people of Ekron having expelled their king Haddiya and the Assyrian troops who garrisoned the town, attached themselves to Hezekiah of Judea, and paid their adorations to his god [the name is lost]. The kings of Egypt also sent horsemen and footmen, belonging to the army of the king of Mirukha [Merœ or Ethiopia], of which the numbers could not be counted. In the neighbourhood of the city of Allakhis [Lachish], I joined battle with them. The captains of the cohorts, and the young men of the kings of Egypt, and the captains of the cohorts of the king of 'Merœ,' I put to the sword in the country of Lubana [Libnah]. Afterwards I moved to the city of Ekron, and the chiefs of the people having humbled themselves, I admitted them into my service; but the young men I carried into captivity, to inhabit the cities of Assyria. Their goods and wealth also I plundered to an untold amount. Their king Haddiya I then brought back from the city of Jerusalem, and again placed in authority over them, imposing on him the regulated tribute of the empire; and because Hezekiah, king of Judæa, did not submit to my yoke, 46 of his strong fenced cities, and innumerable smaller towns which depended on them, I took and plundered; but I left to him Jerusalem, his capital city, and some of the inferior towns around it." [A faulty passage and of doubtful signification here follows.] "The cities which I had taken and plundered, I detained from the government of Hezekiah, and distributed between the kings of Asshodon, and Ascalon, and Ekron, and Gazah; and having thus invaded the territory of these chiefs, I imposed on them a corresponding increase of tribute over that to which they had formerly been subjected; and because Hezekiah still continued to refuse to pay me homage, I attacked and carried off the whole population, fixed and nomade, which dwelled around Jerusalem, with 30 talents of gold and 800 talents of silver, the accumulated wealth of the nobles of Hezekiah's court, and of their daughters, with the officers of his palace, men slaves and women slaves. I returned to Nineveh, and I accounted this spoil for the tribute which he refused to pay me."

Now the value of this notice can hardly be overstated. It gives us the Assyrian version of one of the most important episodes of Scripture history, and, coloured as we must expect to find it in favour of the Assyrians, it still confirms the most important feature of the Scriptural account. Jerusalem alone, of all the cities of Syria, did not fall under the arms of Sennacherib. The Jewish and Assyrian versions of the campaign are, on the whole, indeed, strikingly illustrative of each other, as Colonel Rawlinson shows by a comparison and an analysis.

The events of the fourth year are meagre, relating to an expedition against the Chaldees; those in the fifth refer to two distinct expeditions, and the annals of the sixth year comprise the conquest of the Chaldean colony, at a place called Nagiat, to accomplish which Sennacherib embarked with his army on board a fleet constructed by artificers from Tyre and Sidon, and Yabna (the Jabneh of Scripture), at Beth Yakina.

Sennacherib, according to Colonel Rawlinson, died in B.C. 698, and the interval between that year and the taking of Nineveh, B.C. 606, was occupied by the reigns of three kings, Assur-akh-adana (the Biblical Esar-haddon), his son, Assur-adon-pal, and the sovereign who yielded up his empire to Cyaxares, whose name has not yet been read. Several of the names, indeed, Colonel Rawlinson says, are doubtful; but those of Sargina, Sennacherib, and Esar-haddon, "may be received with implicit confidence."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, October 5, 1852.

THE evidence contained in the intelligence from Burmah, brought by the last two mails, of the weakness of its government and the desire of the people to throw off their allegiance, has greatly stimulated the cry in the Indian journals for annexation of territory there upon a very large scale. Even the most cautious and moderate join in this cry, and, but for one consideration, which, in the height of their enthusiasm, these writers overlook, the case they make out is a very strong one.

That the existing Burmese government is probably the worst of all the remaining despotism, of the East; that its subjects would rejoice at exchanging the rule of the "All Powerful Lord of the Universe" for that of Lord Dalhousie; that civilization and humanity would gain, as well as they by the exchange;—all these postulates may be granted. It still remains to be shown that a large appropriation of the Burmese dominions would be justifiable as well as politico. "We ought," says the Friend of India, "to sever the whole of Pegu from the empire, and attach it to our own interests. We have no doubt about the incorporation of Pegu with our dominions: it would not only be the wisest and the most politic course we could pursue, but, in the progress of circumstances, it has become inevitable. Doubtless the Ministers,"—who have expressed, the writer thinks unfortunately, an opinion adverse to any annexation,— "will change their opinion when they learn that the Taliens and the Karens are far more eager for annexation than the Governor-General himself can possibly be, and that the question actually before his lordship is, not whether he shall annex Pegu, but whether he shall dis sever its inhabitants from us."

All this is convincing enough to any one who has made up his mind that we have a right to take whatever we have the power to take; but it leaves untouched the question of justice. The cases of Scinde and the Punjab are cited in vindication of wholesale annexation, and they are, indeed, precedents. The case of Scinde, however, is one which Indian politicians are very reluctant to adopt as a rule for future policy, and, with respect to the Punjab, its appropriation was clearly a matter of necessity. Not so that of Pegu. If the king of Ava shall consent to repair the wrongs his officers have committed; to pay the expenses of the war; and to give ample security against a repetition of injury, justice would be satisfied with a more moderate forfeiture of territory than the kingdom of Pegu.

The policy of the measure is likewise questionable. The people of Pegu are represented to be devoid of personal intrepidity,—a consideration which very much swayed the British authorities, in the last war, in rejecting the proposal to stipulate for the independence of Pegu;—the country must, therefore, be defended by a British force, the payment of which, in addition to the civil administration, may be too much for its resources. Whatever be the result of our occupation of the territory, inconveniences must follow. If the Peguers be disappointed with our rule, and desire either independence or reunion with their former masters, there will be war with the Burmese again, as the allies of the Taliens. If, on the other hand, we content them, their satisfaction may encourage the Burmese to revolt, and then again we shall be plunged into a war like the present. And it is a question which the advocates of annexation should seriously ask themselves, Where is it to end?

THE problem of the amalgamation of races seems in a fair way of being solved by the United States of America, that "go-ahead" nation. Negroes, Celts, and Chinese, three of the most immiscible portions of the whole human family, are assembled there in large numbers, and will in time mingle their blood with the Anglo-Saxon. Africans compose a large proportion of the population in some of the states, and, although the majority are in bondage, they, or their descendants, must eventually be absorbed into the great American community. The Irish settlers are very numerous, and there is no impediment, in respect to colour or condition, to their speedy union with the natives of the country they have adopted. In one state alone, that of California, nearly 50,000 men and women from China have taken up their domicile, animo manendi, and the number of these industrious emigrants may be expected rapidly to increase, especially if their country should, as it probably will, become the scene of political troubles. In a generation or two, perhaps, the pure Anglo-Saxon stock will be found nowhere but in Old England.

There is something inexpressibly pleasing in the prospect, however remote, of the reunion, after the lapse of forty centuries, of the Noachian family, and in the despised children of Ham recovering their status as co-heirs of the same ancestor with ourselves. It is worthy of observation, too, that this result, if it take place, will have been brought about by no extraordinary, far less by preternatural, means, but by the simple operation of those common causes which the wants, or interests, or caprices of mankind put in motion.

We are inclined to regard the emigration of the subjects of China to North America, at the rate at which it is proceeding, as likely to lead to the most important consequences. The Chinese are, of all the Asiatic races, most adapted to coalesce and incorporate with the European. In their physiological traits, their intellectual character, and their habits, there is no great dissimilarity between them and the nations of the West, whom they rival, and perhaps surpass, in industry and activity. Wherever they migrate in bodies, they form thriving and orderly communities. Some hundreds of thousands of Chinese settlers, who would not be missed from their native country, would be a most acceptable addition to the population of a new American state, and if the migration should continue, relations of an intimate kind must insensibly grow up between America and China.

These approximations betwixt societies that have been hitherto kept asunder, partly by difficulties of intercommunication,—now greatly diminished,—and partly by difference of institutions, cannot but have the happiest effects. The enlargement of commercial intercourse, by the interchange of commodities to the mutual benefit of both the parties to the transaction, though the most obvious and sensible, will not be the highest advantage attending them. Free and unobstructed communication between the various nations of the earth is essential to the circulation of knowledge and social refinements, and to the removal of those false notions which retain the human mind in a state of infancy.

The facilities offered by the United States to the naturalization of people of all countries, castes, and colours upon their soil, whilst it must greatly forward the scheme upon which their citizens are intent,—that of extending their acquisitions,—will divest it of much of the selfish character. Offering in its capacious territory a home to emigrants from all nations, imposing civil restraints (except in the slave states) upon none, America would seem to be fulfilling the mission of re-incorporating the whole family of mankind, hitherto divided into jarring septs, in one harmonious brotherhood.

Under these circumstances, designs which in European states would excite the political fears and jealousies of their neighbours, in the United States may be passed over as denoting less an ambitious than a philanthropical quality. The “order” of the “Lone Star,” which, we are told, is making a formidable movement, whose avowed purpose is “to extend the power, influence, and commerce of the United States over the Western Hemisphere and the islands of the Atlantic and Pacific Oceans,” and which is said to “symbolize a ruling sentiment in the Union;” the menaced expeditions against Japan and Cuba; the meditated “absorption of Mexico;” the undisguised design upon the Sandwich Islands, and the cool indifference with which the American Government has received the remonstrance of that of Peru in the matter of the Lobos Islands, are all so many indications, not of ambition on the part of the United States, not of a determination to tyrannize over the weak, making their power stand sponsor for their acts; but a kind Cosmopolitan affection, which seeks to encircle the entire world in a brotherly embrace!

We observe in the Bombay Gazette,—a paper which displays especial soreness whenever it treats of the subordinate position of the Bombay presidency,—some paragraphs relating to the Bank of Bombay, which contain a charge against a late secretary to the Government of India, who is now a member of the East-India Direction, out by rotation, which charge we know to be unfounded.

It is distinctly stated that Mr. H. T. Prinsep, because he failed to obtain shares in that bank at par at the time of its institution, “managed, through revengeful feelings,” to strike a blow against its prosperity, from which it has not yet recovered; which blow was, to require the whole capital to be paid up, and lodged in the Government treasury, before the bank was allowed to commence business; consequently upon which requisition, it became difficult to find employment for the funds, “and, in this crisis, speculation in Government paper was resorted to, and nearly seventy lakhs of the available funds, eighteen lakhs above the capital were invested in the four per cent. loan at par.” There is a further charge against the Court of Directors, who are declared to have prohibited exchange operations, “fearing that chartered banks might interfere greatly with their hypothecation system.” It shows ill for the character of the Indian press, when such statements and insinuations are circulated without the least shadow of proof or foundation in fact.

The Bank of Bombay, when, upon the application of its promoters, the Government and Court of Directors consented to make it a Government Bank, was established precisely on the footing of, and with a Charter Act nearly verbatim corresponding with, the existing Bank of Bengal. The acceptance of such a Charter was the condition upon which the Government was associated with the public for the formation of the institution, and most gladly was that condition accepted by the promoters, because its effect was to raise the shares immediately to a premium of 25 per cent. That the capital should be a paid-up capital, and not merely a subscribed capital, was necessarily a stipulation of that Charter Act; and really it is rather hard upon the Bengal secretary that he should be charged with purposely injuring the Bank of Bombay from revengeful feelings, because, having this large capital to deal with, the Bombay managers made an improvident speculation, by investing, not only the whole amount, but eighteen lakhs beyond, by purchasing Government four per cent. paper at par. The Bengal secretary had nothing to do with that investment; its folly and improvidence were altogether of Bombay origin.

But it is stated that this revengeful Bengal secretary was disappointed in not obtaining shares in the new bank at par, and therefore, in malice, was the cause of the Bombay managers making this bad speculation. We happen to know that the Bengal secretary suffered no such disappointment, for he never applied for shares at all, and never sought, nor, consistently with his position, could have taken them. But his brother, Mr. George Prinsep, who had been a merchant of Bombay, did apply for shares within the period for which they were offered to the public by invitation to subscribe. Before the arrival of the date up to which subscriptions were declared to be admissible, the list was closed, to the exclusion of the later applicants; and Mr. George Prinsep was of this number. Upon the point being referred to the Supreme Government, it was decided that all applicants up to the advertised date had an equal right, and the excluded applicants were ordered to be provided for by a pro rata allotment; so that the secretary's brother, or rather his estate,—because he died before the allotment was finally made,—did get the benefit of shares at par in the institution, which, according to the Bombay Gazette, the secretary, in spite for the disappointment, did his best to ruin!

OFFICIAL DESPATCHES.

BURMESE WAR.

(From the London Gazette, September 21.)

India Board, September 18, 1858.

The following despatches have been this day received at the East-India House:—

The Governor-General of India in Council to the Secret Committee of the East-India Company.

(Extract.)

Fort William, August 7, 1852.

It is in the highest degree satisfactory to us to be enabled to report that the health of the troops on service in Burmah continues good. Supplies are superabundant. An immense population has collected round Rangoon and Kemmendine. They are quiet and manageable, and they exhibit the most perfect confidence in the troops of every description,—a testimony to the forbearance and good conduct of the force, which will be appreciated by you.

The advance of the steam flotilla on Prome, during which fifty-six pieces of artillery were captured from the enemy, is reported to you.

Commodore G. R. Lambert, R.N., to the Governor-General of India.

H.M.S. Fox, at Rangoon, July 14, 1852.

(Extract.)—I have the honour to forward to you a copy of a letter I have received from Commander Tarleton, of H.M.S. Fox, detailing the services he has performed while in charge of the flotilla in the Irrawaddy.

It gives me great pleasure to state, that, gallant and valuable as these services have been, they are strictly in accordance with what I considered were your lordship's wishes, namely, to gain a correct knowledge of the river as far as Prome, which had hitherto been so imperfectly described, and to dislodge and harass the enemy wherever they appeared, if practicable. How this service has been performed I leave to your judgment to decide, after your perusal of Commander Tarleton's letter.

You will perceive, without particularizing any individual under his command, how fully he appreciates the aid he received from all who partook in this gallant enterprise.

Commander J. W. Tarleton, R.N., to Commodore Lambert.

Moniew, July 11, 1852.

(Extract.)—I have the honour to inform you that, in pursuance of the instructions contained in your letter, addressed to me on the 30th ult., I proceeded up the Irrawaddy as far as Yeagain, where I anchored on the 7th inst., having been joined on the way by the East-India Company's steamers Proserpine and Mahanuddy. This place is now deserted both by the enemy and its inhabitants; and we were thus compelled to procure our own fuel. While thus employed, the East-India Company's steamer Phlegethon joined company; when, finding that she had coal sufficient to supply the other vessels, I immediately proceeded with the four steamers. At two p.m., when opposite to Konnongbee, a large number of armed men were observed collected on the bank. On a shell being fired amongst them, they immediately disappeared, either into the jungle, or some holes or trenches near the water's edge, whence they opened a most vigorous fire from five or six guns, and a vast number of muskets. I remained with the flotilla abreast their position for an hour, shelling the enemy to the best of our ability; but, protected as they were by the embankment, no decided impression could be made on them. I have no doubt that we could have carried the work, by running one of the small steamers alongside, and throwing the small-arm men on shore, but this service could not have been performed without certain loss; and, beyond spiking the guns, there was no object to be gained, the jungle covering the bank offering a secure retreat to the Burmese, from which they would have returned as soon as we had re-embarked. I considered, therefore, that I should be more fully carrying out your instructions, in making this a reconnoitring force, by pushing forwards, without further attempt to dislodge the enemy, reported by the neighbouring inhabitants to be 1,500 strong. I have the honour to inclose a list of casualties on this occasion; they are confined to the Medusa, at which, as the leading vessel, the enemy's fire seems to have been principally directed.

At sunset the flotilla anchored off Menoung; at daylight, on the 8th, it again weighed, and proceeded till within sight of an extensive fortification crowning the end of a ridge of hills 300 feet high, terminating abruptly at the town of Akouk-toung (marked in the chart Peeinghse). Bandoela was reported to be here, with 7,000 men, and a number of guns, differently stated from fifteen to forty. Having ascertained from the pilot that a passage might probably be found at this season through a creek to the eastward of the island, opposite Akouk-toung, and thus completely out of range of the enemy's guns, I determined to attempt it, and happily succeeded in getting through, with not less than two fathoms water. Here we learnt that a small steamer belonging to the king of Ava had only left the day previous, and that the whole army of the country was centred at Akouk-toung, or its neighbourhood.

Foreseeing the panic which the presence of the steamers would create above the defensive force, I urged forward with all speed, detaching the Proserpine, as the fastest vessel, to endeavour, by proceeding through the night, to overtake the Government vessel. Mr. Brooking, however, found this impracticable, and was compelled to anchor.

The Mahanuddy's fuel being now exhausted, I left the Phlegethon with her, to supply her wants, and, by dint of great attention on the part of Lieut. Fraser, Indian Navy, and the officers of the Medusa, I succeeded in steaming through the night, and reached Prome at daylight on the 9th. At the south end of the town, near the water's edge, I observed four heavy guns, but no armed men near them. I accordingly anchored the vessel abreast the spot, landed, and made fast a hawser to them, and hove them off: the iron guns were disabled, and sunk in deep water; and the brass ones taken on board. At seven, the Proserpine joined, and, a few hours afterwards, the two other vessels, and, with the boats' crews of the Fox heartily entering on the work, every gun in Prome, twenty-three in number (see return), were thus brought off. In the afternoon, I ascended ten miles higher up the river, as far as Zeegain, where I anchored for the night, leaving the other vessels at Prome to transfer fuel.

I had now, Sir, fully carried out the instructions contained in your letter of the 30th June. There was no prospect of overtaking the steamer, and I had seriously to consider the safety of the vessels under my orders. With an enterprising foe, I was aware that the creek near Akouk-toung might be made impassable; and even by the Burmese, when, by the large force in the neighbourhood, such means were at their command. I therefore decided on an immediate return, with the view to prevent their having time to complete their preparations. I re-joined the vessels off Prome, at daylight on the 10th, and commenced the descent of the river. The city had been in our possession for twenty-four hours, the governor, Mounghine, having fled at our approach. At 10 a.m. we arrived at the entrance of Akouk-toung Creek; when about half way through, we observed several large boats, crowded with armed men; at first it was difficult to make out their intentions, whether these were to attack the vessels, supported by a fire from the shore, or were crossing. It proved to be the latter; and they succeeded, before our guns could be brought to bear upon them, in reaching the bank, from which a straggling fire of musketry was opened, but soon silenced by the great guns of the flotilla. Ten men, who had not time to escape from one of the boats, were made prisoners, and will be sent to Rangoon for interrogation. The steamers now turned round, and ascended the creek again, dispersing the enemy wherever he was to be seen, brought away five brass guns on field-piece carriages that were still in the boats, and burnt the general's state-barge and a number of war-boats, with a large quantity of arms and ammunition.

I am not quite certain as to the movements of the enemy; the reports of the natives not entirely agreeing. They stated that the force began to cross at 3 p.m. on the 9th, and continued to do so through the night, and until we reached them at 10 a.m. on the 10th, as above related. One party insisted that the whole army had crossed; but this was not true, as men could be seen still on the fortifications opposite. The others stated that 1,000 men only had been sent over to defend the creek. I am inclined to believe that the principal part of the army, including the general, had crossed (as our informant told us) on their way to Promé, the road to which leads from here, leaving a small force only at Akouk-toung. The barge, with the two gilt umbrellas and flag, would certainly not have been on this side had Bandoole not crossed himself; and I do not think it probable he would have come over with a detachment. I now continued the descent of the river, being joined by the East-India Company's steamer Pluto, at 3 a.m. The enemy had evacuated his trenches at Koum-sung, and gone upwards. At sunset, the flotilla was anchored off this place, where it is employed provisioning, and getting into readiness for further service.

I trust that this expedition has, for the present, entirely freed the lower country of the presence of the enemy, and I do not apprehend that they will again venture so far from Promé. This will be an incalculable blessing to the inhabitants, who evince to us everywhere the most friendly disposition, and only require security to become contented and happy.

I should be doing great injustice to every officer and man in this little force (consisting of the Medusa, Phlegathon, Proserpine, Madonaddy, with three boats of the Fox, and twenty marines, the officer commanding whom I regret to say is severely wounded) if I failed to present to you the zeal and attention that has been shown on this service by all; without it, I have no hesitation in saying that it could not have been brought to a successful issue.

Commodore G. R. Lambert to the Governor-General of India.

H.M.S. Fox, at Rangoon, July 21, 1852.

(Extract.)—In continuation of my despatch, dated the 14th inst., I have the honour to inform you that this morning I received a report* from Commander Tarleton, detailing further successful operations against the enemy in the neighbourhood of Promé, by a portion of the flotilla under his orders.

Mr. Burbank, the commander of the Pluto, having been informed that the Burmese troops had evacuated the fortified post on the heights of Akouk-toung, and had left their artillery there, sent a force on shore to demolish the works, and to destroy or bring on board the guns. This was accomplished on the 14th inst., without any opposition, after five hours' hard work under a burning sun; when all the enemy's guns on the heights of Akouk-toung, 28 in number, were either destroyed or brought off to the steamers. Their calibre was from 4 to 18-pounders. Next day the steamers proceeded to Sahlaydan, where they captured six large boats laden with grain and arms, which were being conveyed upwards; and, on the 16th, arrived off Pendang-mew, where some Government boats were destroyed.

On the morning of the 17th, Mr. Burbank anchored off Promé. Some of the inhabitants immediately came off with the intelligence that 500 troops had been stationed on the hill at the back of the town, but decamped directly the steamers came in sight. He also learnt that General Bandoole, with the remnant of his army, consisting of only 2,000 men, the rest having deserted, was encamped at Ethamew, a town without any defences, nine miles inland. The inhabitants of Promé, as well as of all the other towns, are most anxious that a steamer shall be permitted to remain off their city, to protect them from the lawless gangs of disbanded soldiers.

In bringing Mr. Burbank's zeal and activity to my notice, Commander Tarleton recapitulates the services performed by the small steam force under his orders, assisted by three boats and 60 seamen and marines from H.M.'s ship Fox, during the last ten days.

The river has been ascended to Promé, 56 guns have been captured, 10 war-boats, and several boats containing military stores and ammunition have been burnt; and an army of 7,000 men, commanded by one of the highest officers in the Burman empire, dispersed, with the exception of 2,000, who are collected in the neighbourhood of Promé, where, without artillery or defences, they are no longer formidable.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of East-India Stock was held on the 22nd September, at the Company's House in Leadenhall Street; Sir J. W. Hegg, Bart., Chairman of the Court of Directors, in the chair.

Capt. P. Gordon suggested that some measures should be taken to give greater publicity to their proceedings. At the present moment there were not more than half-a-dozen proprietors in attendance, exclusive of the directors and the members of the committee of by-laws. The Court would probably sit for about an hour, and then adjourn for another quarter of a year. This was not the way in which the affairs of the Indian empire should be conducted. No doubt, when the discussions on the Charter took place, there would be a very full attendance, and he hoped due accommodation would be afforded to the representatives of the press, by whose services alone the proceedings of the Court were made public.

ADDISCOMBE COLLEGE.

Capt. McGregor said, it might be in the recollection of the Court that, at a previous quarterly meeting, he drew their attention to the subject of the charges made at the colleges belonging to the Company, and that on that occasion he moved for certain papers relative to those military seminaries. Those papers were granted, and he now wished to give notice, in conformity with the rule of the Court, of a motion founded upon those papers, to be brought forward at the next quarterly meeting. The motion he should submit to the Court would be to the effect, "That in accordance with the principle which obtained at the Royal Military Colleges at Woolwich and Sandhurst, it be recommended to the Court of Directors to establish at Addiscombe College a graduated scale of payment for the education of cadets, with a view of reducing the charges for the sons of Indian officers in proportion to the ascertained means of their friends, provided the same could be effected without any increased charge to the East-India Company."

ALI MOURAD, AMEER OF SCIENDE.

Col. Dickinson asked whether the Chairman could give him any information regarding the papers connected with the proceedings of the commission which was appointed in 1850-51 by the Governor-General in Upper Scinde to inquire into the conduct of Ali Mourad, as moved for by Lord Jocelyn in the House of Commons, and ordered to be printed?

The Chairman said, the papers connected with the case of Ali Mourad had already been placed before the House of Lords, containing a description of the forfeited territory, and an estimate of its revenue. The report of the commissioners appointed to inquire into the conduct of Ali Mourad, and other papers called for by the House of Commons, were in the course of preparation, and would be laid before that hon. House, together with all minutes and records connected with the charge against the Ameer of Scinde.

Col. Dickinson said, as all the former papers relating to Scinde had been furnished to the proprietors, he should give notice of a motion for the next court-day, that copies of the report of the commission appointed to investigate certain charges against Ali Mourad, Ameer of Kyrpore, in Upper Scinde, and of the minutes thereon by the Indian Government, together with a copy of the report on Scinde by Sir G. Clerk, Governor of Bombay, be laid before the Court of Proprietors.

TRIGONOMETRICAL SURVEY OF BRITISH INDIA.

Colonel Dickinson said he wished to give notice of a motion for the next court-day, on the subject of the geographical survey of Bombay. In July, 1850, he gave notice of a motion for the production of certain documents having relation to that subject, and on the following court-day the Chairman (Capt. Shepherd) told him that there was no necessity for his pressing that part of his motion which related to the survey of the principal roads, as the matter was under the consideration of the surveyor-general, and that a map of India was being prepared. He now begged to ask whether the surveys and maps so referred to were in preparation, and whether it was the intention of the Court to produce them at an early period. If so, there would be no occasion for him to say any more on the subject.

The Chairman assured the hon. proprietor that the Court of Directors were at all times most anxious to afford to him, and to the proprietors generally, every information in their power, and that when it was not in their power to afford the information required, they were always desirous to send to India for it. The late Chairman, in his answer to the motion of the hon. proprietor, must have alluded to a map which had been formed from the trigonometrical survey under the superintendence of the surveyor-general. That map was in preparation, and was published in sections. All the sections relating to Bombay were not finished. The map was on a large scale, and would give all the principal roads. He was sure the hon. proprietor, from his own experience in India, and from his professional knowledge, must know that it was almost impossible for any map to give all the minor roads; but this map would give all the principal roads, and all the sections relating to Bombay may be expected very soon to be complete. Mr. Walker, under the instructions of the Court of Directors, was now preparing a very large and complete map of the whole of India. Mr. Walker was rather chary of pledging himself as to the precise period when the map would be finished; but he hoped that within a month or six weeks it would be completed, and when complete, it would be the most perfect map of India that ever was published. That map would contain all the principal roads in India, and of course those in the presidency of Bombay. But in order to meet the views of the hon. proprietor, he would tell him that, under the authority of the quarter-master-general of Bombay, a road-book had been prepared which, he inferred from its name, would include all the roads, great and small, in Bombay. Now, the map of Mr. Walker, and that road-book, would afford to the hon. proprietor all the information he could desire. Instructions would be sent out to India for copies of that road-book to be sent home, and thus the hon. proprietor would be able to obtain all the information he required.

Colonel Dickinson was understood to say, that the map prepared under the direction of the quarter-master-general was very imperfect. Roads were laid down in the map which had no existence, while many roads that did exist were altogether omitted, and the map was quite calculated to mislead.

The Chairman said if the hon. proprietor was not satisfied with the statement he (the Chairman) had made, the better way would be for him to hand in his notice of motion for the next court-day, and as before that day arrived, the hon. proprietor would be in possession of Mr. Walker's map and the road-book, then, if they did not afford the information he required, he could proceed with his motion.

Colonel Dickinson then handed in the following notice:—

"That some improved organization of the survey department in India, and of the mapping office in this country, is urgently called for, for making available to the public, in a more convenient form, and with greater expedition than heretofore, the stores of statistical data and geographical delineation with which, there is reason to believe, the records of Government have been long enriched; also for securing to the public, by means of more systematic and timely publication, the advantages of the surveys still in progress, and of those which may be hereafter undertaken in our own territories, as well as in those of our allies."

Mr. Lewin gave notice of a motion to the effect, that the privilege of joining in the election of the Directors of the East-India Company should be extended to parties who held stock and office under the Government in India.

The Hon. Proprietor then gave notice of a motion to the effect, that an opportunity be afforded to the natives of India of being heard by their representatives in the discussions which are about to take place in Parliament relative to the renewal of the charter of the East-India Company.

Captain P. Gordon gave in six notices of motion for the next quarterly Court day. In doing so, the hon. proprietor made six ineffectual attempts to address the Court; but was on every occasion informed by the Chairman that it was not competent for him to make a speech on giving notice of a motion.

The first notice had reference to the occurrences at Malabar; the second related to the proceedings of the British and Foreign Bible Society at Madras, with regard to the circulation of the Scriptures; the third and fourth also had relation to the spread of Christianity in India; the fifth called upon the Court to consider the propriety of having a permanent chairman of the Company; and the sixth notice related to certain letters written by the hon. proprietor to the Governor-General in 1826, and which letters it was proposed that the Court should declare contained matters of grave importance.

THE FUNERAL OF THE LATE DUKE OF WELLINGTON.

Capt. M^r Gregor said, before the Court adjourned, there were two questions which he wished to put. The first was, whether it was in the contemplation of the Court of Directors, as the representatives of the proprietors, to take any measures for expressing their sense of the loss which the nation in general, and India in particular, where a great part of his eminent services were performed, had sustained by the death of the Duke of Wellington? He saw above him the statues of many distinguished gentlemen; and he should like to see in its appropriate niche the statue of that illustrious hero. He knew that on this occasion he was only expressing too freely what every one who heard him must feel; but he hoped that something which appeared like presumption on his part would be excused, for having touched upon a subject which he thought ought not to be wholly overlooked on that their first meeting since the death of the Duke, the country had to deplore. Should any resolution expressive of the sense entertained by the Court at the great loss they had to bear be proposed, it would completely meet the views which had led him to introduce the subject to their notice.

The Chairman said it was quite unnecessary for him to assure the hon. proprietor that the subject to which he had alluded—that of the melancholy loss which the nation and he might say the world had sustained, had not for an instant escaped the deep and serious consideration of the Court of Directors. He was sure that at that moment, and so recently after the melancholy event to which he had alluded, the hon. proprietors would be satisfied with an assurance from him that the subject was under the consideration of the Court of Directors, while he considered that it would be premature for him on that occasion to say more. If, after due deliberation, it should be deemed necessary for the Court of Proprietors to be assembled on the subject, a special Court might be called for the occasion.

Capt. M^r Gregor expressed himself perfectly satisfied with the observations of the hon. chairman. He would now mention the other question which he wished to put. He saw in the papers observations as to probable arrangements that might be made for conducting the funeral of the Duke of Wellington. It was well known that the Duke of Wellington served in India with great distinction,—

The Chairman hoped the hon. proprietor would excuse his interrupting him, but he (the Chairman) thought he could anticipate the question which the hon. proprietor wished to ask. It was obvious that all the arrangements relating to the funeral of the Duke of Wellington must emanate from the Crown, and he really did think that it would not only be premature, but scarcely becoming, if they were to enter upon a discussion of what would be fitting to be done at a funeral, the arrangements for which must be settled by the first authorities in the State.

Capt. M^r Gregor would, after what had fallen from the hon. Chairman, confine himself to this question:—Were the Court of Directors inclined to ascertain whether, in the arrangements for the funeral, a place in the procession would be secured for the officers of the Indian Army? He did not presume to say that this was the proper time for making that inquiry, but he certainly saw no impropriety, when the arrangements should be determined upon, for the Court of Directors to ascertain whether the army of India was to be represented at the funeral as well as Her Majesty's army at home.

The Chairman said he was correct in his anticipation of the nature of the question which the hon. proprietor wished to put to him; and, feeling as he did the expediency of his not asking it, he ventured to interrupt the hon. proprietor. He could say, for himself and his colleagues, that whatever was just and proper and fitting to be done on the occasion, with a view to paying all due honour to the illustrious dead, would be done by them, so far as lay in their power; and he had no doubt that those who it would be fit and proper should take part in the solemnity would have assigned to them their appropriate position. But he must repeat, that for them to discuss the subject at that moment would not only be premature, but scarcely in good taste.

Colonel Dickinson said he entirely confided in the good feeling and judgment of the Directors, and was sure that whatever was necessary to be done in honour of the Duke of Wellington would be done by them.

The Court then adjourned.

UNITED STATES EXPEDITION AGAINST JAPAN.—The New York Herald states that it is privately informed from Washington, that, as soon as Commodore Perry shall have enlightened the President concerning his recent mission to the fishing-grounds, he will resume active preparations for the expedition to Japan. "We are glad to hear it," says the Herald—"glad that the proposed hydrographic survey of Japan is not turned over to the Dutch—glad that the heathen of those islands are not to be abandoned. In these days, nothing but bombshells and bayonets will reclaim the pagans of Japan. Let the gallant commodore hurry up the good work. Brethren, let us pray."

CHINESE IN CALIFORNIA.—Throughout the diggings in California, Chinese villages are springing up: Peking, Canton, and Hong-kong, are among the names given to these Celestial settlements, some of which contain upwards of 1,500 souls. The immigration of Chinese into California is enormous. Since the month of May, the arrivals equaled that from all other quarters of the world, and were nearly three times that of the previous quarter. The immigrants were principally from Canton River and its vicinity. It was estimated that, in the month of August, the number of Chinese resident in California was 27,038, and it was expected before the expiration to increase to 47,000. "But very few Coolies," says a California paper, "so to speak, have been known to return to China. Those who go back and spread the fever are principally small traders, who were in the habit of fitting out junks to go on short coasting expeditions. This class of Chinese, coming to California with their little 'ventures,' dispose of them here, making what would in China be a fortune. Perhaps they dig a little in the mines; and, returning to their homes and acquaintances, puffed in monetary importance, and swaggering about some Celestial Montgomery-street in breezy breeches, and with gold enough to buy a small cartload of strings of China coin, have been the principal means of freighting our shores with the inoffensive moon-eyed children of the sun." A great deal of excitement had been caused among the Chinese population at the diggings by a manifesto from the great Atti, who claims to hold the power supreme over all the Chinese in the land of gold. The document which has caused this great commotion is of the nature of a reward for one Le-Achan, well known as an interpreter and sort of general agent for his brethren in their transactions with the outside barbarians, or white folks. Atti accuses Achan of all sorts of devilish devices to defraud and degrade his nation.

LIEUTENANT-GENERAL SIR JOHN ROSE, K. C. B., Bengal army, who died on the 9th of September, at Holme, N.B., aged 75, was appointed ensign in the Bengal army in 1797; captain in 1806; major, 1813; lieutenant-colonel, 1817; colonel, 1824; major-general in 1837, and lieutenant-general in 1846. He was present at the battles of Malavelly and Periapattam, and was present during the siege and capture of Seringapatam. After the fall of the fortress, Lieut. Rose served, under the late Duke of Wellington (then Colonel Wellesley), at the taking of several forts in the Mysore and Bednore countries, also in the Northern Circars, in 1800. In the same year, Lieut. Rose again volunteered, and served with the expedition to Egypt, under Sir David Baird, and then joined the expedition against the Portuguese settlements of Demau; and was with the Bombay army in Guzerat in 1801-2. In 1803 he served under General Lord Lake at the battle of Delhi, and the reduction of several fortresses. At the capture of Agra he commanded his own regiment of sepoy, when he was severely wounded, and one half of his regiment were either killed or wounded in taking the batteries; and upon this occasion he received the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief in General Orders. In the same year he was also present at the siege and capture of Gwalior. In 1804, when the fortress of Delhi was besieged by 70,000 men and 130 guns, Lieut. Rose commanded a sotie upon the enemy's breaching batteries, inflicted severe loss upon them, and rendered their guns unserviceable; for this gallant act he was again thanked in General Orders. He was also engaged in several other actions during the same year. In 1805 he was present with Lord Lake when he pursued Holkar through the Punjab, and in 1814 he commanded his regiment and captured two forts in the Burdee country, and then settled the differences between the rajah and the British Government. In 1817 he was in the Goorkah war, in 1818 in the Pindarree war, and was actively engaged until the year 1823, when he returned to England, having served in eight campaigns, three expeditions, four great sieges, at the capture of eight forts, two battles, and ten lesser actions, for which he had the honour, on four different occasions, of receiving the thanks of the Commander-in-Chief.—United Service Gazette.

The Sydney Morning Herald contains an account of a new propeller, invented by Sir Thomas Mitchell, the Surveyor-general of New South Wales, a trial of which, in a small steamer at that port, had just excited great interest. It is called the Bomerang propeller, and is constructed on the principle of the weapon of that name, used by the natives to kill game. Although the experiment was only on a small and imperfect scale, a speed of twelve knots an hour against a head-wind is stated to have been obtained. The instrument is described to combine great strength and simplicity, while it has also the advantage that its motion in the water causes but a comparatively slight agitation, so that it is capable of being adapted to canal-boats as well as to other vessels. At the conclusion of the trial, Sir Thomas Mitchell expressed his conviction "that the weapon of the earliest inhabitants of Australia has now led to the determination, mathematically, of the true form by which alone, on the screw principle, high speed on water can be obtained."

A large amount of treasure is said to be hidden in the valley of the Mun river (south of Monghyr), deposited there during troublous times by the rajahs of Kurrukpoor.

Amongst the traditions respecting Mahomet is one which relates that, in one of his excursions to heaven, he heard the noise of the sun and moon making obeisance to the Almighty.

The Ceylon Times says that, within six months, three persons had been killed, and two, if not three, compelled to retreat from the colony by brandy and soda water.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1853, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30	On or before 12th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
39		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1847.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

GUTTA PERCHA TUBING.

Many inquiries having been made as to the DURABILITY of GUTTA PERCHA TUBING, the GUTTA PERCHA COMPANY beg to call attention to the following Extracts of Letters from parties who have used it for a considerable length of time.

From SIR RAYMOND JARVIS, Bart.

"VENTNOR, ISLE OF WIGHT,
March 10th, 1852.

"In reply to your letter respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Service, I can state with much satisfaction, it answers perfectly. Many Builders and other persons have lately examined it, and there is not the least apparent difference since the first laying down, now several years; and I am informed that it is to be adopted generally in the houses that are being erected here."

From C. HACKER, Esq., Surveyor to

HIS GRACE THE DUKE OF BEDFORD.

(Second Testimonial, after Two Years' Trial.)

"OFFICE OF WORKS, WORKS PARK,
January 10th, 1852.

"In answer to your inquiries respecting the Gutta Percha Tubing for Pump Suction, I find that the water has not affected it in the least, although it will eat lead through in two years; we have adopted it largely, being cheaper than lead, much easier fixed, and a more perfect job."

Tubing of any required length, of every size up to six inches in diameter.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

No FURTHER movement had been made at Rangoon, at the date of the latest advices from our army, which reach to the 1st of September. Preparations for a more vigorous prosecution of the war were going forward at Calcutta and Madras, and the latest report is that the Governor-General intends to revisit Rangoon about the time the army is put in motion.

It is stated by the Calcutta Morning Chronicle, that the advance upon Prome is to be made directly the horse artillery from Madras shall reach Rangoon, and without waiting for the Bengal reinforcements, which cannot reach Burmah till some time after the arrival of the artillery. "The force detached for the capture and occupation of Prome," it is added, "will amount to close upon two thousand men of all arms. They will proceed up the Irrawaddy in the steamers, land, capture the place, and there hold their own till the commencement of the cold weather, when the main army will make its advance into Burmah proper and towards the capital." A letter from Rangoon, dated August 24th, says:—"There is no doubt of an early move. You may depend upon it, there will be 2,000 men in Prome before this day month—the steamers are to take up that number, and return for a second detachment of similar strength, and so on, as long as the river is practicable. The land column, with the Horse Artillery and Light Field Battery, will not, I imagine, leave this much before the 1st January, 1853; all will no doubt be ready to advance from Prome towards Ava by the 1st February." Another letter from the same quarter, dated the 31st August, adds:—

"The arrangements for the advance to Prome are progressing rapidly. The troops to form the 1st brigade are, I believe, H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, 80th foot, and a native infantry regiment, under Brigadier Reigolds, c.b.; a company of Madras artillery, with its light field battery, and two 8-inch iron howitzers, under Lieut. Col. Ford; the sappers and miners, and engineer's department, under Major Fraser; the Major-General proceeds in command of the whole. The Fire Queen and captured Chinese junk are now being loaded with the guns, ammunition, and ordnance stores; and as soon as this is completed, they are to proceed, without delay to Henzada, on the Irrawaddy, and stay there, till the troops arrive in the smaller steamers, which will leave Rangoon about the 20th or 25th proximo. Two transports are to remain at Henzada, as receiving-ships; ammunition, stores, and supplies to be sent thither from hence in small vessels or boats, and forwarded on the larger steamers to Prome—a party of marines to protect the depot. On the arrival of the first detachment at Prome, the steamers will return and take up a second, and so on till the whole force is collected there. The whole of the troops now here will move on, leaving the new arrivals to take our place.”

The Bengal division of the army in Burmah is to consist of three infantry brigades, under the command of Brigadier-General Sir John Cheape, who started for Rangoon on the 6th September in the Berenice. The first brigade, already in the country, under Brigadier Reigolds, of H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, consists of H.M.'s 18th and the 40th and 67th regts. of Native Infantry. The second brigade, to be commanded by Lieut. Col. Dickinson, 10th N.I., is to consist of H.M.'s 80th Foot, the 10th N.I., and 4th Sikh local infantry. The third, commanded by Lieut. Col. Huish, 37th N.I., is to be composed of the 1st European Bengal Fusiliers, 37th N.I., and the (Sikh) Regiment of Loodiana.

A material alteration had been made in the order for reinforcements from Madras (announced in our last number), by the substitution of a single brigade for two. H.M.'s 84th Regiment, and the 30th and 45th Regiments Native Infantry, form the disappointed brigade. Their more fortunate comrades had set sail. On the 31st August, the C troop Horse Artillery, with the 19th Regiment Madras Native Infantry, left the roads in transports and the H.C.'s steam-frigate Feroze; followed, on the 7th September, by the 1st Madras Fusiliers, with the Sappers and Miners, in H.M.'s steam-sloop Sphynx and the H.C.'s steamer Mosuffer, both having transports in tow. The later departure of the Fusiliers was owing to the visitation of cholera on the march down from Bellary, which compelled them to halt for several days, and thus prevented them from arriving at Madras in time to embark with the other portions of the brigade. The disease had quite disappeared before the corps had marched into Madras. The Madras papers state that the men of the Fusiliers, “up to the moment of embarkation, stocked themselves liberally with the seeds of the worst diseases; during the week the regiment lay in camp at Madras, excesses of the most disgusting and riotous nature were perpetrated unchecked.”

The command of the Madras division of the army of Ava has been conferred upon Brigadier-General Steel, C.B. that of the brigade, on Brigadier M. McNeill.

The P. and O. Co.'s steamers Precursor and Oriental had been engaged at Calcutta, for the conveyance of troops to Rangoon; and three of the river steamers belonging to Government were to be transferred from the waters of the Hooghly to those of the Irrawaddy for war service.

The letters from Rangoon,—copious extracts from which are given elsewhere,—add many incidents to those already known of previous operations. It appears that Capt. Tarterton had found in the house of the Governor of Prome, at Meeaday, above that city, documents showing that an intended attack upon our troops at Rangoon had been frustrated by the sudden appearance of the steamers up the river.

The last accounts report that the Burmese had established a very strong stockade, some miles from Prome, inland. A correspondent of the Englishman thus calculates the designs and the strength of the enemy:—

“We receive accounts daily, which appear to be trustworthy, of the increasing strength of the Burmese at Prome, and of the great extent of the stockade, or rather breastwork, they are raising. It is beyond the fire of steamers, and commands the town and landing-place. They are reported to have received eleven guns from Sheo-gain, and to have an additional two more, which were left by the navy when they landed, and took possession of the rest of the guns last month. There are said to be from 10,000 to 15,000 men at Prome; 7,000 at Pegue, with 4,000 Cassay horse, and outposts at distances between Pegue and Rangoon; 10,000 at Sheo-gain, and a large force at Beling, near Martaban. Ava is filled with troops and a considerable number of guns. So that great preparations are making for our reception, and even for attacking us, which it is their intention (so they say) to do immediately the rains abate.”

From the little garrison holding Bassein, nothing had been heard. At Martaban, the night attacks, by which the detachment there had been kept in constant alarm, had been brought to a termination, to the happy relief of the troops, by the instrumentality of one of the heavy guns of the Zemobia, a 68-pounder, which, after considerable labour, had been mounted on the hill commanding the town. This formidable piece of artillery was manned and worked by a party of seamen from the frigate, under the command of a lieutenant; and since its elevation the enemy had not ventured to show themselves near the camp.

The cry for “annexation” still continues, on the part of the Indian press generally; we are aware of but a single exception, and we have elsewhere placed the anti-annexation views of the Madras Athenæum in juxtaposition with the pro-annexation arguments of the Friend of India. The Englishman qualifies its opinion as to the necessity of an “immediate annexation of Pegu” with the remark, “but not before we are able to afford protection to those we would govern; annexation without complete occupation of the country would only entail misery in a tenfold degree upon its overpressed inhabitants.”

An objection is raised by the annexationists, namely, “If we exact a penalty from the king of Ava, and he cannot pay money, how are we to dispose of the territory given in lieu of it?” This objection may, we think, be met by calling to mind the state of the relations between Burmah and Siam, which are generally but little known. The two nations are virtually at war with each other; there are certain border provinces on the north, Chiang Mai is one of them, the title to which is matter of dispute between them, being claimed by the Siamese, though subject to the Burmese. In most of their contests in late years, the former have been the victors. During the latter part of the last century, the Siamese were in the habit of invading Burmah, and when the latter sent an army into Siam, in order to dethrone the king, Phya Tak, as an usurper, the Burmese army suffered a total overthrow. If they are unable to contend with so unwarlike and even timid a people as the Siamese,—who, we believe, maintain no disciplined army, but make up one, when exigency requires, from field labourers,—they should be easily subdued by a British force. Why should not the forfeited territory be transferred to Siam, which is desirous to cultivate friendly relations with us, and would be thereby made a very useful ally?

Rumours of war are again heard from the north-western frontier, where there is promise of another cold season campaign. A force had been sent out against the arch-brigand Saadut Khan, but, according to the latest accounts, it had found no enemy worthy of the name. The Delhi Gazette, of the 1st September, announces that “Immediately on the ‘alarm’ being given, the head-quarters of the 15th Irregular Cavalry, under Lieut. Smith, of the 16th Irregulars, 3 guns of Waller's troop of horse artillery, under Lieut. Blunt, and four companies of the 29th N.I. under Captain Whish, marched towards the scene of action, but nothing was done, as no enemy appeared in sight, and those who are accustomed to these little excursions seem to think that the alarm was taken at a few thieves who were hovering about, endeavouring to steal some cattle. The cavalry went on to Shubqudr, where they were halted, and the artillery and infantry were ordered to remain on the Peshawar side of the Cabul river. No fighting is expected at present, but it is pretty certain that as the cold weather comes on, there will be the usual amount of petty disturbances; and probably some of more importance than those that have hitherto marked the progress of events on the north-west frontier."

Letters from Peshawur, to the 22nd August, mention that Ajoon Khan made a descent on Joora, a village about two miles west of Tungee, with some 100 men, and succeeded in carrying off 100 head of cattle; four of the villagers being killed in the affray.

The Peshawur correspondent of the Messenger of the 27th August reports that "the Momunds had renewed their incursions on the Mitchnee lands, gathering in great force, and threatening a descent. Yesterday (the 18th of August), the 15th Irregular Cavalry were ordered out; and this morning Lieut. Blunt's troop, with two guns, besides four companies of the 29th Native Infantry, marched towards the scene of commotion, whilst at this moment H.M.'s 53rd regiment are ordered to hold themselves in readiness to move at a moment's warning."

The two native states, that of the Nizam and the kingdom of Oude, were in their usual condition of disorder. The Englishman states, on the authority of a correspondent, that there has been a great fight in Berar, between the Nizam's forces and those of a native noble, in which eighty men were killed. About 900 Rohillas were employed; and it was, in fact, a pitched battle on a small scale, which in any European country would have created an immense sensation. In a native state the occurrence is of far too ordinary a description to merit more than a line or two of notice. From Lucknow we are told, that, of the revenue, sixty to sixty-five lakhs only had been received this year; of these, two-thirds consist of papers and receipts of the commandants in the districts, for payment of their troops, and of chuckledars acknowledging having received revenue from zamindars for the ensuing year. Thus the revenue received is not real, but nominal. "No fighting is now going on," says a correspondent; "there never is, except when the crops are being cut: it is then only that human heads are mowed away along with the corn."

The Patna plot, which we noticed in our last Summary, turns out to be a religious movement on the part of the followers of Syed Ahmed, the Wahabee reformer, who raised so formidable an insurrection against the Sikhs, in their trans-Indus territory, and was killed in action in 1831.* His disciples, now numbering not more than 500, do not believe that he is dead, but await his return to lead them on to victory over the unbelievers, at a village named Sittana, on the Indus, midway between Torbela and Umb. Desirous of strengthening themselves in number, they invite reinforcements from among the faithful in Hindostan, but, as it would seem, with only little success. It is supposed to be some of their invitations that have been intercepted. The Lahore Chronicle states that the arms said to have been smuggled across the Punjab, on their account, amount to "twenty or thirty old swords, a rusty matchlock or two, and perhaps an odd pistol." This would make the plot a very insignificant affair. A correspondent of the Englishman, however, thinks there is more in it.

* Hist. of the Punjab, vol. ii. p. 81.

"I am doubtful," he says, "if the Government is aware that a secret society of Mahomedans, extending over the whole of British India, has been in existence for many years, the motive of which is to protect each other, and destroy the English, if any attempt is made against their religion, or any general injustice done to the children of the faith. I presume the resumption laws are considered as a general injustice. The society is so extensive that it is a hundred to one the Governor-General's khamsamah is one of the associates. I have long known the existence of this society, and have conversed with members of it. I was surprised when told that my Persian teacher was a member, and on asking him he admitted it, but said they were exhorted not to act while the Government does justice."

The Benares tumult had subsided. "All has been hushed up, as regards the little insurrection we had," says a letter from that city; "the two hundred and seventy Mahajuns, that were lodged in the Benares gaol, have been let off under proper and good security; but, since, twenty Mahajuns, who were the most obstreperous, but had hid themselves, have been apprehended and safely lodged in the gaol. Orders have come in from the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut of the N. W. Provinces to the Commissioner of the Benares Division to investigate the case, and see what is the real cause of this grievance."

The Commander-in-Chief, when last heard of, was on his way to Chensee, in Tibet.

BENGAL. BURMAH.

The following is an extract from a letter dated Rangoon, the 25th August:—

"I cannot say this place improves upon acquaintance; it rains every day, and when it does rain it pours. Every article of dress, boots, boxes, &c. soon becomes damp, and as the sun makes his appearance only at intervals of some days, there is no getting the things dried. This weather we are likely to have till the end of October, so that, as far as regards comforts, there is not much to hope for, for some time to come.

"Nothing has occurred here since I last wrote to you, and we pass our leisure hours in examining the country, &c. The Dagon Pagoda is a fine massive edifice, well worth seeing; but I should prefer, for my part, to have the gold and silver images which are within. There it stands, 'a monument of British valour,' as the old general calls it. On the terrace of the pagoda are several wooden buildings, showing some really fine specimens of carvings. The approaches to the terrace are striking, and would look well in a picture. Flights of steps, with a covering nicely carved and painted, with pillars on each side. On the steps of these gateways the Queen's corps lived after the capture of Rangoon, till barracks could be built. Our walks here are, of course, confined, the greatest extent being to the beach, which is about 2½ miles off. We can go to Kemendine, which is very nearly the same distance; but the road is just now impassable. The stockade does the Burmese great credit; it is of great extent, well built, and strong, and, if well defended, it would be very difficult for besiegers to make an entrance. It is some distance from the great pagoda, and surrounds the principal part of the town. I am glad to say that our men are in tolerably good health, there being no more than fifty in the hospital."—Hurkaru, Sept. 2.

RANGOON, AUG. 13.—"After a seven weeks' absence up at Promé, the Mahanuddy has returned. She has been playing the very deuce with the Burmese up there. She has brought down somewhere about a thousand boats, which were placed in her charge. These boats are, or were, laden with rice, cutch, and salt. She brings intelligence that while the Burmese troops about Promé are nowhere to be met with, both land and water are dreadfully infested with bands of Burmese bandits, who, not satisfied with the booty they get from their countrymen, have been experimenting upon our vessels and people, but hitherto with indifferent success. They go about on the water ten to fifteen boats in company, all well manned, and every man armed to the teeth. Two of the For's boats in charge of young middies were set upon by some twenty-five of these Burmese boats. The blue jackets had rather a tough affair of it against such long odds, the struggle lasting some seven hours, as I hear. The Burmese assailants were, however, put to flight at last, and it is singular that none of the For's were the worse for it in life or limb. The Mahanuddy, on her downward course, received a few complimentary jingals, but she squared accounts, with interest, in no time. On a previous occasion the Burmese boats already alluded to had the temerity to make an attack upon her, but she got amongst them and paddled about their ears, and very soon consigned most of them to the lowest depths of the river. The banditti had to swim for it, but no sooner they got to shore than a more horrible fate awaited them. They were seized by the villagers, bound hand and foot, and mercilessly thrashed till every bone was broken, and death only released them from the terrible infliction.

"It is said that the Burmese peasantry have settled it amongst themselves that the present conquests of the British in Burmah are favoured by Providence. They say that the several creeks about Prome, and especially the one through which the steamers made the detour to get up to the rear of the defences that had been there erected, lay dry and unnavigable for the last twenty-five years, and that the gods, to assist the British in deposing the Burmese tyrants and delivering the Burmese people from their ruthless oppressors, had opened the flood-gates of the heavens and poured down rain to fill these channels and render them passable for our vessels. Moreover, every spot favourable for the construction of stockades and defences has in the same way been inundated to defeat the ends of the despotic rulers of the country. Under this feeling it will be readily believed that the Burmese populace came flocking in, eager for our protection, doing everything in their power to facilitate our movements, and keeping our vessels constantly supplied with intelligence of the movements of the king and his troops. The Lord of the Elephant and Umbrella is said to be putting his best golden foot forward in preparing to give us battle. He is endeavouring to get together a large force, but the great difficulty he has to contend with is that nearly as fast as he can collect men he loses them, his recruits being pretty equally balanced by the number of deserters. It is stated that he has succeeded in transporting some formidable ordnance to Prome, but as it has not yet been captured, it may be presumed that our blue jackets have not yet found out where it is.

"August 17.—I have not known since the beginning of June what a sunshiny day is—it is all rain, rain. It is to continue the same to the end of September, so say the weather-wise in these parts. With so much rain and such a low swampy place as Rangoon undoubtedly is, how can it be free from sickness in this time of the year? But from all accounts Prome is a most healthy place, no doubt owing to its elevation and hilliness. While at Rangoon there has been an unceasing, merciless down pour; at Prome the showers have been only occasional; besides there, let it rain much or little, the ground is drained by nature. The population at Prome is also greater, being a commercial town of the Burmese, where trade and manufactures were carried on to a considerable extent. It is the Manchester of Burmah—the chief place for the manufacture of silk and cotton piece goods, especially the Burmese variegated silk plaids. Among the natural products of Prome, peas, potatoes, onions, asparagus, and vegetable marrows hold a prominent place. There is also to be had a plentiful supply of naphtha.

"I have just heard a story of Capt. Latter having made a narrow escape from having his throat cut by some half a dozen vindictive Burmese. They stole into his house, and one of the fellows got into Latter's bed, and coolly bestriding the magistrate, who was lying on his back, held his throat with a firm grip with one hand and was going to operate with the other, which was armed with a dow, when luckily the guard, taking alarm, rushed in and spoilt the whole affair, which promised such excellent materials for a real tragedy. The imported constable, Neville, got information, and caught five Burmese, who, he says, belonged to the gang of cut-throats.

"August 21.—Two boats have come in, with the captain, crew, and lady passenger of the Mazeppa, which has been totally wrecked on the Barague sands. The lady passenger mentioned is Mrs. Andrew, the wife of the commander of the transport Futlle Rozack. The accident to the Mazeppa happened in the gunner's watch, at 6 a.m. of the 14th. She struck, and went to pieces almost immediately after, and no one could save more than the clothing each had on. No lives, however, were lost. They were eight days in their boats coming to Rangoon. On the way they are said to have received great and humane assistance from some Burmese, who, it may be added, have been rewarded here.

"August 22.—A boat has come in, bringing intelligence of the complete success of Captain Tarleton in demolishing all the Burmese defences and strongholds in his course. The gallant captain is now on his way to Bassein, still keeping up his work of destruction. From Bassein he is expected here in the Pluto. The Nemesis is gone Prome-ward with Captain Shadwell, who is to have charge of the gallant flotilla. The Phlegethon has been playing the deuce with Prince Moung-chow-to, who is at Prome with a few thousand men, and is most persevering and energetic in his exertions to construct stockades, but no sooner part of one shows itself anywhere than bang, bang go the Phlegethon's guns, and all Prince Moung-chow-to's work is blown away a great deal faster than it was put up. But the prince won't give it up, and the Phlegethon won't give it up, and so they are both at it hammer and tongs.

"August 23.—The Enterprise has arrived, and taken every one by surprise. She experienced very bad weather in her journey hither, and had to rough it. The Enterprise has been ordered to relieve the Moozuffer and the Sphinx, sent to Madras. There is a report current that Lord Dalhousie will again visit Rangoon in November."—Ibid.

Our advices from Rangoon since our last despatch are as follows:—

"August 13.—Donabew was not burnt by Burmese soldiers, but by the inhabitants themselves, who did so to spite the governor that had been appointed over them by Capt. Tarlton, and who had rendered himself obnoxious to them.

"It seems that the inhabitants came to Capt. Tarlton, begging he would nominate for them a governor in the absence, it is presumed, of the Burmese governor appointed by the Court of Ava, who had bolted. Capt. Tarlton, thinking the fairest method of selection would be (by votes, determined to adopt it—the result, of course, was, that the man with most money (as in a certain civilized country of Europe sometimes happens) gained the day; he made himself disagreeable to the people, and to rid themselves of him, though how cannot be clearly seen, they set fire to their own town about his ears. The Burmese dacoits have a wholesome dread of our steamers, the smoke of which keeps the river banks for six miles on either side clear of them. Indeed it is only in the wake of a steamer that any of these unfortunate Peguers dare shew themselves on the river. The town of Rangoon is most rapidly extending; the houses now stretch in almost an unbroken line from the old field hospital, or where the troops first landed, to Kemendine; houses too of a larger description are being built, numbers of new shops are daily to be seen. As a precaution against fire, one man in every tenth house is compelled to keep awake, and to signify his being so, by striking two or three times every quarter of an hour two bamboos against each other; every house must be provided with a long hooked bamboo, with which the roof may be at once pulled off in case of its catching fire; also a long pole with a square piece of matting secured at the end, to act as a flapper or extinguisher to fire. These precautionary measures have been found to be absolutely necessary, as it has been ascertained from spies, that the Burmese will burn down the town if they can,—just now, when from the quantity of rain that constantly falls, the roofs are damp, there is little danger; but nothing is more probable than an attempt to burn the place after the rains; that is a favourite trick of the Burmese,—nothing they like better than burning a place to spite their enemies. The town is being surveyed and the ground about. This looks business-like, and as if we intended to do things in a ship-shape and orderly manner. Let only the word for annexation be passed, and Rangoon will be in a year one of the most flourishing towns of the east. Maulmein will be almost emptied—the Burmese prefer the climate of Rangoon, and will come over here bodily, when they have besides the great advantage of being on the bank of the great river that communicates direct with Ava, and where vessels from all parts of the world can come and buy their exports and produce. One or two merchants have come here both from Calcutta and Maulmein, to buy the prize timber, of which they have seen the advertisements in the papers, but the prize-agents won't sell it—the Commodore requires it all for the ships. It is fully expected that there will be a famine in this country next year, or scarcity of rice almost amounting to it, as the people have been prevented sowing this year, by the predatory bands going about, and the generally disturbed state of the country.

"August 14.—Below Prome, where the battery was established on a commanding rock, and where, by the information received from a villager, our steamers dodged the Burmese cannon, the stream is so rapid that it took the Proserpine an hour and a quarter in passing the battery, the distance from which luckily prevented its guns reaching the steamer. It appears that in coming back, the steamers found that the water had fallen several feet since going up, and that the passage through the right channel, up which they had come, was impracticable; it was necessary therefore to go right under this formidable battery above them on a rock,—a roof and high boarding of planks was constructed over the Proserpine paddlebox and all to protect the crew from the shower of bullets and shot that were expected,—their astonishment was great on nearing the place to find Bundoola crossing over with his army to intercept them, that gentleman supposing the steamers would return by the passage they had come through; so near a thing was it, that Mr. B.'s coat was found in his boat, he not having time to put it on.

"August 18.—The Commodore sent up instructions to Prome the other day that all boats laden with rice or any article of food were to be brought down to Rangoon. The apparent motive of this seems to have been to prevent supplies being sent to any Burmese troops that might be above Prome. The rice, when it reached this place, however, instead of being made over to the prize agents as prize property, was to have been sent to Maulmein, where, it is supposed, it would find a better market. The latter part of the instructions have not been carried out, Commander Shadwell at once perceiving the impropriety of such a proceeding. An attempt to take the life of Captain Latter has been, it is supposed, discovered. Intelligence of the plot was gained at Bassein by one of Capt. L.'s assistants, and a boatload of most desperate-looking fellows, tattooed from top to toe, have been captured; and Capt. Latter is regarded by the Burmese, from his knowledge of the language, and his rather severe disposition to the natives, as the grand instigator of hostilities towards them. Some seventy or eighty Burmese soldiers landed a few nights ago at Pazendown, and attacked the house of a Peguer of rank: he luckily had a good stand of arms in his house, and repelled the attack. The attacking party having the daring to have torches, offered a good mark, and several of them being wounded, the rest decamped.

"On the arrival of the first troops, the Bengal brigade will advance in steamers to Prome, for the good reason that there would not be room here for all the troops that are coming; so that in three weeks hence some of us ought to be moving. The General and Commodore are going up in the Fire Queen together through the Paulang creek into the Irrawaddy in a few days. The Fire Queen will remain there, and the troops will be conveyed hence to her in the small steamers. The passage through the Paulang is the only difficult part of the voyage to Prome: once in the Irrawaddy, and there are found seven fathoms of water.

"The town of Rangoon (it may seem unnecessary again to allude to it) is increasing to an astonishing extent. Those who can give an opinion say that 80,000 is certainly not above the amount of its native population; it is wonderful how well everybody behaves. The European soldiers conduct themselves admirably; they are to be seen walking about in uniform in a quiet, orderly manner all over the place. The writer has only seen one drunken soldier in Rangoon.

"News from Capt. Tarleton has been received. He had been at Meeaday, above Prome, and had found in the house of the governor documents showing that an intended attack on Rangoon was frustrated by the sudden appearance of our steamers up the river. The late governor of Dalla is anxious to have a negotiation with the general, but is afraid to come into Rangoon, as he has an idea he may swing for it. The governor of Dalla, however, was particularly civil to our people before the war.

"Negotiation now, however, is entirely out of the question. Lower Burmah will be annexed, and nothing shall prevent it. Only let the little river steamers come round, and some Bengal troops, and then matters will look up—at present the state of things may be pronounced as slow.

"August 24.—The Enterprise was sent down in the hurry: she was to convey the orders for an advance to Prome—of this there is no doubt. No troops to move from this till reinforcements arrive from Madras: they may certainly be expected in a fortnight. The Sphinx and Mozuffer are off; the Enterprise is stationed at Kemendine; her position commands the Paulang creek, and effectually prevents any armies coming down that way to surprise us. All is quiet and well here. The rains are getting rather severe; the roads are canals.

"August 28.—Capt. Tarleton, of the Fox, returned yesterday to Rangoon, having been relieved by Capt. Shadwell, of the Sphinx, from the command of the steam-flotilla up the river. He states that a paper was found at Meeaday, purporting to be a copy of a report to the King of Ava, in which it is stated, that at the capture of Rangoon 1,240 Europeans were killed; and that our alarm is so great that we have 1,000 sentries round our camp at night—a very moderate exaggeration this, considering the general tendency of the Burmese character."—Englishman, Sept. 6.

"Up to this the last moment before the closing of the mail nothing is known definitely of the movements of the force. The first party that goes up is to occupy Akoktoun, the island in the river; the next batch of 2,000 go to Prome. Orders for annexation, it is firmly believed, have been sent down, but no one knows positively. A wonderful veil of mystery is now thrown over all matters here. What the policy can be in keeping a secret what corps are to be the first to go, it is not easy to conceive."—Ibid. Sept. 8.

ANNEXATION.

An article in the Times, of the 30th of June, concludes with these remarks:—"Instead of rupees," that is, in the case of the Punjab, "we have annexed territory, and this territory is not as yet remunerative to the revenue. What then is to be done if the king of Ava either refuses or withholds the payment of compensation, seeing that we have already confiscated the most convenient and promising districts of his dominions, and that the permanent occupation of Rangoon would involve our own penalty rather than his? The result of these inquiries would, we think, conclusively prove that war cannot be undertaken at a profit to either party, even by powers of such relative strength as England and Burmah. We must almost inevitably fight a losing game, and our best triumph will consist in getting back to Calcutta with as little loss of time, as the honour of the army, and the credit of the empire will allow." In these remarks we think there lurk three fallacies. First, the territories in the Punjab, which we have annexed to our dominions, have proved perfectly "remunerative to the revenue." Notwithstanding the abolition of many vexatious taxes, and the relinquishment of no small portion of the revenue which Runjeet Singh raised, those newly-acquired provinces already yield an income which not only covers all the military expense of occupying them, and the cost of the civil administration, but adds to our imperial resources. Secondly, we have not already confiscated the most convenient and promising districts of the Burmese empire, and the permanent occupation of Rangoon would inflict no penalty whatever on us. Arracan and Tenasserim provinces are, by universal acknowledgement, the most unpromising districts which we could have selected out of the Burmese empire; the one was a swamp, the other a desert, and it was deeply regretted at the time that we did not annex Pegu instead of Moulmein and the districts connected with it; and this proceeding was noted down as another exemplification of the invariable English folly of throwing away the advantages of victory when we came to conclude a treaty of peace. Had we kept possession of the lower provinces of Burmah, in 1826, and thus crippled the resources of the Court of Ava, we should in all probability have escaped the expenses of the present war. Yet, we have turned the swamps of Arracan into the granary of the Bay, and in the desert of Moulmein, we have erected a settlement little inferior in public spirit to Singapore itself. We left all the most promising and fertile districts of the Burmese empire, and fixed on the most barren and unproductive. The natural advantages enjoyed by the provinces of that empire are but imperfectly known. In Pegu, there exists, as in Bengal, a belt of Soonderbund jungle on the sea board, but on emerging from it, we come on rich plains, watered with the most fertilizing streams, and interspersed with hills which diversify the scenery, and render the Delta of the Irrawaddy so much more salubrious than that of the Ganges. Though it has been reduced almost to a wilderness, through the insane despotism of the Burmese Government, which is perhaps the most wanton and the most exhausting in the world, that valley is one of the noblest and most beautiful in the east, and affords scope for commerce, industry, and enterprise, superior to anything we possess in our own eastern dominions. The inhabitants, who are exempt from the degrading distinctions of caste, and who possess that manliness of character which is so often found in conjunction with the generous treatment of women, and their appearance on all occasions in public, are a highly improvable race. Pegu is supposed to contain between two and three millions of inhabitants, and the climate and soil are such as to render it a fertile source of plenty and wealth. The valley of the Irrawaddy will stand a comparison for soil and productions with any in the east. We write on the information of those who have traversed it in every direction. The forests, which produce teak and other timber, cutch, lac, and oil, are scarcely surpassed in riches by any in the world. Farther up the country, the field for industrial and commercial enterprise is equally expansive and alluring. The Irrawaddy, which is the great artery of the country, would open to us a mercantile intercourse with fifteen or twenty millions of people, and enable any spirited nation which commanded it to pour its manufactures into the western provinces of China. We do not, however, write this with an eye to Mr. Bright's and Mr. Gibson's vote for annexation. At Boman, which is only thirty miles from the province of Yunnan, the most westerly portion of China, the bazars are filled with grapes, apples, walnuts, chestnuts, and most of the fruits of England and America, and the productions of that rich district comprise silk, cotton, indigo, sugar, wheat, all of a very superior quality, while the mines are stated to yield iron, lead, silver, and even gold. The tea-plant is indigenous through all that hilly country; and the climate is in the highest degree salubrious and cheerful. We are not, of course, going to propose the extension of our conquests to the borders of China, but it is impossible to avoid a passing reflection on the miracles of improvement which brother Jonathan would introduce into this promising country in the course of a dozen years, if it were to fall into his possession, and on the rapidity with which he would go a-head, and cover the rivers with steamers, and the land with rail-roads, and plant a complete network of electric telegraphs through the country. Lastly, the Times says, "our best triumph will consist in getting back to Calcutta, with as little loss of time as the honour of the army and the credit of the empire will allow." The time may come when this sentence will be read with the same smile of surprise, with which we turn to the celebrated despatch from the Court of Directors, of the 3rd of April, 1805, in which, after having devoted thirty-six closely printed quarto pages to a general denunciation of all the measures of Lord Wellesley's magnificent administration, they appear to sum up the measure of his delinquencies by alluding, with a deep sigh, to the "vast and extensive territories" he had added to the British dominions, and state that they could not take a view of the situation in which he had placed them, "without being seriously impressed with the wisdom and necessity of that solemn declaration of the legislature, 'that to pursue schemes of conquest and extension of dominion in India are measures repugnant to the wish, the honour, and the policy of the nation.'" Those vast and extensive territories, the possession of which the Court of Directors of that day so deeply deprecated, are,—the provinces now comprised in the Agra presidency, which are governed by Mr. Thomason, and yield five millions sterling a year, and are filled with a happy, industrious, and thriving population, and are considered to furnish the model of Indian governments! So much for human foresight. But surely we are not to allow Pegu to slip through our fingers. Annexation is inevitable. The Burmese might have prevented it by a timely submission to our just and reasonable demands. But they have driven us into it. They have treated our overtures with insolence and contempt. They have dared us to attack them in their capital, and thither we now bend our steps. To withdraw our armies at the present time from Burmah, and retire to Calcutta, re infecta, would expose us to the derision of Asia, destroy the prestige of our power, which is always half our strength, place our two Burmese provinces in constant jeopardy, and give rise to a hundred hostile aspirations throughout India, which the sense of our indomitable energy and irresistible strength at present effectually represses. Neither is this acquisition to be deprecated. Even in our hands those provinces will become the seat of industry and commerce. The inhabitants invite us to take them under our protection, and we shall require no troops to keep down internal commotion. We shall have to retain a force on the frontier to restrain the insolence of the Burmese, unless, indeed, we should determine to leave the British ensign floating on the ramparts of Amerapoor. We have long been accustomed to the administration of Burmese provinces. We have officers familiar with the language, habits, and feelings of the people, ready at once to enter upon the government of these provinces, and to deepen the respect and attachment which they feel towards the British name. Annexation is inevitable. It will be a blessing to the people; it will be an advantage to our own growing empire; but even if this were not the case, annexation is inevitable.—Friend of India, Aug. 26.

We have had occasion before to question the Friend's capacity to discover more of the will of Heaven than his less positive contemporaries; but no one parts willingly with even an imaginary privilege, and we are not surprised therefore to find our Serampore contemporary again wielding the lituus, and parcelling out the future according to the divine decrees. In his last issue he mounts to the seventh heaven of sublime meditation, and sees not only that the whole path of British conquest in India, through treachery, intrigue, and bloodshed, has been graciously drawn by the finger of Heaven, but that the index of the supreme counsel now points unmistakeably to the appropriation of Pegu.

Protest against this mischievous style of writing, is in this country of little avail. The majority of the Indian press are staunch advocates of "annexation." Territorial aggrandisement is the only possible issue to every possible war. An able and respected contemporary at Bombay takes up the note struck at Serampore, and rapturously declares that, "irresistible as the waves of the ocean roll on the tide of European conquest in the East, it seems to be the high mission of England to subjugate to her away every heathen land. There is no middle course left for her to pursue, the finger of destiny points to conquest and kingdoms, and dynasties crumble away before her victorious armies." It is not our intention to reiterate our objection to this absurd argument; in a former issue we endeavoured to exhibit its worthlessness. It is after all a very stale one, as the readers of Fielding may remember. Jonathan Wild held very devoutly that he was called "providentially" to the leadership of the band of gentlemen, who under his orders disburdened society of their watches and purses. But we would now test the soundness of other props, on which the advocates of spoliation rest their cause, that we have a notion will prove on examination not more trustworthy than the one of divine appointment.

But not merely are Providence and sound policy on the side of annexation, humanity also pleads on that side. "The whole population of the country,—a thing unprecedented in Asia,—have thrown themselves upon our protection, and virtually annexed themselves to our dominion, and there could be no inconsistency or folly greater than that of abandoning them to the tender mercies of their task-masters."—with more to the same tune. The reader will be better able to estimate the value of this argument if he will substitute for "the whole population of the country," the poultry and vegetable merchants of Rangoon and Bassein, with whom alone, at present, beyond an occasional stray coolie or two, have we yet come into contact. Except to the prophetic eye that looks out of the watch-tower at Serampore, the wishes of "the whole population of the country" are as much a secret as the wishes of the people of Timbuctoo. We have no doubt, that the clowns who troop in with their fowls, eggs, and butter, delighted at the novel impetus given to trade by the presence of so many strangers, are quite willing that it should always be harvest time; or, at any rate, are fully alive to the necessity of recommending the sale of their wares by a little judicious flattery. But to pretend to find in their ignorant and interested encomiums the deliberate wishes of the whole nation of Pegu, is no less disingenuous than absurd.

But suppose we grant that the preference of a section of the population for the rule of a foreign power, is to justify the interference of that power, what objection shall be offered to the instant occupation of the greater part of the Northern Circars by his Highness the Nizam? It is a notorious fact that thousands of British subjects have emigrated into the Hyderabad territory, from the districts of Guntoor and Masulipatam, through inability to appreciate the superior blessings of Saxon government. They have thus openly thrown themselves upon the protection of the Nizam, and annexed themselves to his dominion: is the Friend of India willing that his highness shall accept the omen, and proceed to declare Masulipatam part and parcel of the Hyderabad dominions? We should like to know what the voice of Europe would have pronounced the annexation of the Papal States to France, had the Gallic government chosen to interpret the wishes of the Romans according to the rule laid down by the Friend of India? There are other countries beside Pegu that groan under "galling oppression." What shall we say to Tuscany for instance? Will a few huzzas for England or France by a Florence mob be quietly acquiesced in by continental states, as an adequate justification for interference, and the rescue of the prey from the tyranny of Austria by process of absorption.

The idea of the Taliens and Karens clinging to the British standard, "eager for the benefits of British institutions," is an enchanting picture! We would give something for the opportunity of catechizing a few of these sons of the jungles and swamp on their views of the British government. The blessings of undulterated British institutions as they loom—to quote Mr. Disraeli's figure—in the distant future to the people of Pegu, we fear were somewhat of a hazy cast; their native splendours must be shorn not only by the distance of time but by the distance of place, there being no trace of them discoverable at any rate in the adjoining empire of Hindostan. Seriously, which is the greater, the impudence that could deliberately offer a statement like this to the acceptance of the public, or the credulity that could swallow it? The Taliens know as much about the benefits of British institutions as they do about "chops and tomato sauce."

Such are the reasons put forward why we should annex Pegu to the British empire in India; and such, as it seems to us, is their rottenness.—Madras Athenaeum, Aug. 28.

MR. HENRY TORRENS.

At the monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society, held on the 1st of September, the president (Sir James Colville) addressed the members as follows:—"I need hardly remind you that, since our last meeting, the society has sustained a great loss by the death of one of its most distinguished and accomplished members, Mr. Henry Torrens. On the morning of the day on which we last met, I fully expected to have the pleasure of bringing him hither with me in the evening. You are all probably aware that in the course of that very day he was brought to my house dangerously ill, and that in less than a fortnight he was numbered with the dead.

"I am conscious that there are several here present whose earlier and more intimate acquaintance with Mr. Torrens, whose longer connection with this society, make them more competent than I can, both to speak fully of his brilliant and versatile talents, and of the particular services which, in the period of upwards of fifteen years during which he was a member of it, he rendered to the Asiatic Society of Bengal; yet I cannot forget that even I had for nearly seven years the happiness of possessing his friendship and of occasionally enjoying his conversation. Since his demise it has been my painful duty to look over some of his note books and unfinished MSS., and I can truly say that that inspection has strengthened the impression which I previously entertained of the wide and diversified range of his knowledge, and of the restless activity of his mind. Again, there is no reason why I should not speak of his labours on behalf of this society; of them each of us may say 'monumenta manent;' and so long as the pages of our journal, and the collections accumulated in our museum, shall endure, 'monumenta manebunt.'

"Mr. Torrens, as many of you know, came to this country at an age somewhat more advanced than that at which the members of his distinguished service generally begin their career. He had completed a classical education at the University of Oxford; he had afterwards mixed more largely than most of his standing in general society. He possessed several of the languages of modern Europe. He was more than commonly conversant with the literature of Europe, yet it must be admitted, that in spite of these manifold distractions he took kindly to the land of his adoption. In truth the East had many and peculiar charms for his lively fancy and active spirit. Its languages (particularly Arabic and the kindred tongues), its antiquities, its history, its traditions derived from ages when history melts into fable, the origin and distribution of its races, were all subjects of deep and constant interest to him. It is not for me to assign a precise value to his labour as an orientalist. Those, however, if such there be, who would look at his works of this kind with a critical eye, and contrast them with the production of more profound and laborious scholars, would do well to recollect that they were the fruits of hours snatched from the claims of official life, and that these various studies were combined with the cultivation of general literature, with researches into military history, to the study of which he was attracted by the memory of his distinguished father, nay, more, with devotion's duty paid at the shrines of the lighter muses, and with excellence in more than one of the graceful arts which contribute so much to the enjoyment of social life.

"But it is not merely as one of its most accomplished members that Mr. Torrens claims from the society the tribute of its regret. For nearly six years he served it as honorary secretary. Now in every numerous body there must be differences of opinion, and these differences will beget opposition, and it may be that some of those who now hear me may have heretofore objected to this or that detail of Mr. Torrens' administration. I think, however, that all who look but candidly upon that portion of the society's history will admit, that if there were any faults in his administration, they were the faults of a generous temper, which in aiming at great ends does not very nicely calculate the means, and that in all he did he was animated by a sincere and zealous desire to maintain and extend the reputation and usefulness of this society.

"I am sure that none will dissent from the terms of the resolution which I have now the honour to propose, which are:—

"That this meeting desires to record its sense of the loss which the Asiatic Society of Bengal has sustained by the death of Henry Whitlock Torrens, Esq., B.C.S., who was for upwards of fifteen years an accomplished and distinguished member of the society, and whose eminent services when holding the office of honorary secretary were, on his retirement from that office, in November, 1846, especially acknowledged in the resolution then recorded by the society."

The resolution, having been seconded by Mr. J. R. Colvin, was carried unanimously.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Calcutta on August 27th, per Oriental.

THE HOT-SPRINGS IN KURRUCKPOOR HILLS.—Capt. Sherwill, in a journal of a visit to the Kurruckpoor hills, south of Monghyr, communicated to the Asiatic Society, gives the following account of the hot-springs near the source of the Mun river:—"To the north of the village of Bheembandh, at the foot of the hornstone hill Dumduma, we came upon a region of hot springs; hot water appeared to be spouting from the ground in every direction; the principal springs, of which there are eight or ten, had a uniform temperature of 145°, all rising within a space of about three hundred yards square. Whilst our party was engaged bathing in the stream containing the united waters of all the hot springs, and which falls into the Mun, I made the following observations. At the source of the Bheembandh hot-well, at the foot of the Mohadewa hill, the water was 147° Fahrenheit. In this temperature nothing appeared to grow or live. At 145°, growing under the water, I found a green slimy moss in full vigour, adhering to the hornstone rocks. From 130° to 125°, shrubs, trees, grass, and ferns grew indiscriminately on the edge of the water, into which they had pushed their roots. At 114° I found large shoals of a very small and active silvery fish, apparently enjoying their hot life, but, upon being driven up the stream into a higher temperature, they showed great distress; at 117° they darted about wildly; at 119° they died instantly, for at this temperature they turned on their backs, their air-bladders bursting a few seconds afterwards. At 120° I found the larvae of the libellula, or dragon-fly, as active as these slow creeping creatures ever appear to be, apparently enjoying the high temperature, previous to undergoing their final metamorphosis. Frogs were swimming about in 114°; and I found a huge black scorpion and numerous frogs dead in 130°. In 120° I saw a large lizard, called by the natives bakumase, rush across the stream, as if in great agony; he had been scared from the jungle by my servant; with a desperate struggle he got across the stream, which was about ten feet broad and a few inches deep. Across numerous hot streams are, of course, many foot-paths used by the cultivators round about Bheembandh, but nowhere at the point of crossing did I find the water above 120°, and even that temperature made the men and women hurry across the stream, when fording from bank to bank. To our European skins, the heat of 120° was intolerable; nor could any of the party walk across any of the fords at that temperature without being severely scalded, though not blistered. Luxuriant crops of rice are raised by the aid of the hot streams, large fields being fed by the water, but at a reduced temperature, by leading it in devious courses to the cultivated land. The united waters of all these hot springs are conveyed away by the small stream called the Mun, which, after a passage through a narrow and densely-wooded and bamboo-fringed valley, flows through Pergunnah Sukhwabadee to the Ganges, sixteen miles below Monghyr."

GOVERNMENT SERVANTS AND TRADING COMPANIES.—The question of the re-election of Government servants to the direction of any trading company is entirely set to rest; the secretary of Government having replied to a letter addressed to him by the secretary of the Agra and U. S. Bank in a favourable manner. Any servant of Government who was a director of a bank when the order appeared in the Gazette may be re-elected, and the law is to be held as only prospective, for no servant of Government can in future take part in the direction or management of any trading company of which he was not a director on the 14th of May last; the continuation in office by re-election not being considered "a fresh acceptance of office." We think this very fair, and we have no doubt that it will render any arrangements that are to be made for the future management of the banks in existence comparatively easy, whilst it will afford time to put these arrangements on a much more satisfactory and firmer footing than could have been expected had the law been enforced as it was at first supposed it would be.—Delhi Gaz., Aug. 11.

THE LATE MR. H. TORRENS.—The Englishman yesterday chronicled a report that Mr. Henry Torrens died of no ordinary disease, but from poison. He goes on to intimate a suspicion that the poison may have been administered while Mr. Torrens was on his way to Calcutta in a steamer belonging to the Nawab Nazim. From what we have heard on the subject, the rumour appears to be entirely without foundation. Mr. Torrens, we are told, was attacked by an epileptic fit some three weeks before he left Moorshedabad; but to all appearance recovered completely from its effects. Again, however, on his arrival in Calcutta, he had another seizure of similar character, and from this, too, he seemed to have entirely recovered before the mortal illness began. These attacks were doubtless the manifestations of disease which was at work on the brain and nervous system, and which is attributable to the gradual effect of twenty-five years' constant residence in this country and the wearing activity of a mind ever at work. There is no need to suppose foul play where the catastrophe may be so easily traced to natural causes; and indeed it appears to us impossible that, under the circumstances stated, the idea of poison can be reasonably entertained. —Hurkaru, Aug. 20.

THE DELHI ENGRAVER.—A private letter from London to a mercantile gentleman of Calcutta mentions that her Majesty and his Royal Highness Prince Albert, while accepting the various articles tendered to them by several Indian contributors to the Exhibition, have declined the two signet rings engraved and presented by the celebrated artist of Delhi. Their reasons for refusal are not mentioned.

OPIMUM GAMBLING.—The high rates to which the gambling speculations of the bazaar have lately driven up the price of opium have at last become injurious to the regular dealers, and the Hurkaru reports that they have presented a memorial to Government on the subject. They suggest that if the revenue board would consent to some alteration of the present regulations, much of this speculation might be prevented. At present it is the custom that a deposit of Rs. 1,000 per chest should be paid within six days, and the remainder within the fortnight. The dealers, however, are anxious that half the purchase money should be paid at once, and the remainder within the week, thus compelling the speculators to incur a large immediate outlay. The proposal is, in fact, a request that Government will consent to forego the advantages accruing from unnaturally high prices, and we scarcely think it will be sanctioned. The "speculations," or "gambling transactions," or "bets," of the bazaar are so enormous, that no restrictions upon deposits would suffice to check them, and the Government would scarcely be justified in adopting a measure which, even if successful, would involve a loss of some lakhs of rupees a year. The bazaar transactions are precisely the same in principle as the fund speculations of the London Exchange, with this difference, that they bring in a very considerable accession to the revenue.

THE MOHAMMEDAN CONSPIRACY.—The Lahore Chronicle declares that the Mohammedan conspiracy spoken of by the Mofussilite is nothing but a plot of some fanatical Wahabees, who have settled themselves on the right bank of the Indus, at a village named Sitana. These fanatics, about 400 in number, are anxiously awaiting the re-appearance of their Syud, who was killed some fifteen years ago, and they have frequently called on their co-religionists in Upper India to join them in a religious war, but hitherto without any great success. The Achonzada of Swat has summoned them to assist him, but they prefer to wait; and as their designs are well known to the Government, and they have not corrupted a single Mohammedan sepoy, they may be allowed to pray in peace for the destruction of the Feringhees. A correspondent of the Englishman "of long experience" states, that there exists a secret society of Mohammedans extending over the whole of British India. Its members are firmly banded together to protect each other, and destroy the English, if any attempt is made against their religion.

THE SCREW STEAM COMPANY'S fine ship, Queen of the South, arrived on the 1st inst. in somewhat less than seventy-two days from England, including about thirteen days of detention at the different intermediate ports. The general impression is that she will not, with all the attractions which she offers, be much patronized, unless the rates of passage-money are very considerably reduced. The average speed of the Queen of the South, on her first voyage, seems to have been about eight knots an hour. —Hurkaru, Sept. 4.

A GUARD OF THE 38TH N.I. has got into a scrape. Some villagers in the Tipperah district hung about the sepoys while they were cooking their dinner. As they did not disperse, a row was the consequence, and the sepoys at last, in self-defence, resorted to their muskets, and four villagers were wounded.

THE BENARES RIOT.—An up-country correspondent speaks in somewhat disrespectful terms of the late popular ferment at Benares:—"A puddle in a storm, a puppy dog in a passion, are hardly more ridiculous than the late rebellion at Benares, subdued by the indomitable energy of the Commissioner. I do not mean to imply that this high functionary has anything of the appearance or nature of the canine species about him, but simply to hint that a mountain has been made out of a mole-hill, that the disturbances at Benares were contemptible in the extreme, and that a mighty fuss has been made about a mere trifle." —Hurkaru, Sept. 6.

THE LIBEL CASE, Smith v. Lang, resulted in a verdict for defendant, on the plea of justification.

THE NEW APPOINTMENT of Auditor-General of commissariat expenditure, salary Rs. 1,600, seems to lie between Colonel Sage and Major James Ramsay.

THE GREAT CONSPIRACY CASE, in which Baboo Mutty Loll Seal and others were put upon their trial, has ended in a verdict of acquittal. The proceedings continued through five days. General opinion sanctions the decision of the special jury. The results of the whole series of litigation, which this trial concludes for the present, are, however, very unsatisfactory. The point on which the case turned has virtually been four times decided in the Supreme Court. Two juries have pronounced Joygopaul Chatterjea innocent of the perjury alleged against him; and as often he has been declared guilty thereof. The feeling of the public is, that the law has been made the weapon of individual hostility on both sides without any advantage gained to public justice from the contest. The Hurkaru states that "two of the most learned counsel on either side had determined to fire a shot at each other on the conclusion of the trial; but their intentions having become known, they were taken into custody on a warrant from the chief magistrate."

ENFORCEMENT OF JUDGMENTS.—By an Act, passed by the Governor-General of India in Council, on the 27th August, 1852 (No. XXXIII. of 1852), entitled, "An Act to facilitate the enforcement of judgments in places beyond the jurisdiction of the courts pronouncing the same;" every party who shall have obtained a judgment in any Court of Her Majesty, or of the East-India Company, in any part of the territories under the government of the East-India Company, or in any Court established by the authority of the Governor-General of India in Council in the territory of any foreign prince or state, and who shall be unable to enforce or obtain satisfaction of the same by execution within the jurisdiction of such Court, may enforce or obtain execution of the same in any part of the said territories under the government of the East-India Company, in the manner set forth in the Act.

LALLA JOTEPERSAUD left Calcutta about two months and a half ago, for the purpose of settling those disputes with his nephew which threatened to throw the whole of the sums due by government to the contractor into the hands of the receiver of the Supreme Court. As for the Lalla's claims, they are almost as far from an adjustment as ever. He has received from government about sixteen lakhs of rupees, and as that sum will keep himself and friends comfortable for some time, neither party seems to be anxious for an immediate settlement. —Hurkaru, Aug. 23.

RAMCHURN RAI, the man who killed a thief, while defending his uncle's property, has received a free pardon from the Governor-General.

RAILWAY ASSAULTS.—The case of the "Queen v. Robert Ewing, Henry Rushton, Lewis Bimbra, and Robert Burroughs," indicted for assault and false imprisonment, was decided in the Supreme Court, August 29. The defendants, while employed on the rail near Hooghly, about five months ago, in consequence of some obstruction (a native refusing to sell his house), in a violent manner took the law into their own hands, beat policemen and villagers, and destroyed property. Robert Ewing was sentenced to three months', and Henry Rushton and Lewis Bimbra to a fortnight's imprisonment, in the common gaol. Robert Burroughs was pronounced not guilty. The Chief Justice gave a very proper lecture to the defendants upon the danger and illegality of their conduct.

ANOTHER CONVERT.—On Wednesday evening last, a native convert was baptized at the Free Church, by the Rev. W. S. Mackay. His name is Koilas Chandro Kundu. He has been a pupil in the institution since 1843, and is a young man of extremely good abilities. He is at present a student in the college department. Some time ago he was anxious to receive baptism, but was dissuaded from it by his mother. He left Calcutta, and was engaged as a teacher of a native school at Ramper Bauleah. His convictions followed him, and he was compelled to come back to Calcutta, and cast in his lot with the Christian church. A considerable number of native young men and others were present at the baptism. —Calcutta Christ. Advocate, Sept. 4.

THE LATE CSOMA DE KÖROS.—An Hungarian gentleman, Mr. Bersenczey, has arrived here, and intends to follow up the researches of Csoma de Köros respecting the connection between the Hungarian and the Tibetan language. He seeks the patronage and pecuniary assistance of the Asiatic Society, partly on the ground of a legacy having been left to the society by the late Csoma de Köros. —Hurkaru, Aug. 23. Certain paragraphs alluding to an application made by an Hungarian colonel, now in Calcutta, to the Asiatic Society, for support in his researches to establish the identity of the Hungarian and Tibetan languages, on the ground of the general support that the society gives to scientific researches, and specially on the strength of a legacy left to it by the late Csoma de Köros, and which the society is said to have received, have of late gone the round of the papers; and is moreover asserted that an application has been made to the administrator-general to disgorge, as it is phrased, any surplus of the above-mentioned legacy remaining in his hands. We are enabled to state, upon the best authority, that the Asiatic Society has never received a single rupee from the estate of the late Csoma de Kőrös, although it was, indeed, constituted, in a very simple will, his sole legatee. An objection was taken by Sir T. Turton to the signature, as rendering the will informal, and the whole of the proceeds of the estate still remain in the hands of the administrator-general. Some years ago an application was made, through the Austrian embassy in London, by the relatives of the late Csoma de Kőrös, for the proceeds in question; but as in those days the rule was to create difficulties where none existed, we believe that an objection was raised as to the sufficiency of proof, and the funds still remain in the office of the administrator-general, where they seem likely to rest. — Englishman, Aug. 25.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—According to the Friend of India, there is to be an electric line from Calcutta to Agra, Delhi, and Lahore, with branches to Mirzapore, Lucknow, and Simla. From Agra another line is to run from Bombay, and thence to Madras via Hyderabad. It is all to be completed and in operation in November, 1854. Dr. O'Shaughnessy finds that he can reduce the expense to Rs. 405 per mile, or 127,000*l.* for 3,000 miles, including all charges.—The Englishman tells us that Dr. O'Shaughnessy's electric needles have been compared with some in London, and found to be decidedly superior.

THE AMELIA, a small brig, bound to Labuan, has been wrecked near Singapore. Many lives were lost, including three English miners, who were passengers on board.

COL. WARREN'S appeal to the Chief Justice for the recovery of his daughter has been rejected. She is living with her married sister, in preference to living with her father and her mother-in-law. The difference is merely one of incompatibility of temper, and the young lady will soon be of an age to be her own mistress. — Hurkaru.

VOLUNTEERING OF SEPOYS.—A letter from Allahabad says: "Some three weeks or a month ago, a grand Nautch was given by the officers of the 10th N.I. to the sepoy of the regiment, for having volunteered their services for the Burmese expedition; it appears, however, that the men could not have been unanimous in this respect, as several of them have deserted, now that the regiment is on the eve of moving. So much for the stability of the native character."

DR. UMPHELBY, of H.M.'s 80th regiment, now in the fort, is to be tried by court martial for not having adopted some means to obtain reparation or the insult of a kick from a Mr. A. P. Pennefather, a clerk in the office of the Administrator-General. The question of satisfaction for an insult is still the unresolved problem of civilized society. What would the Commander-in-Chief have had the Doctor do? Was he to fight with either pistol or fist, with a person in an inferior grade of society? An officer insulted is in a pretty predicament. He knows not which way to turn; he may be ruined for life, let him take which course he may. He is ordered not to fight, and disgraced if he doesn't. If he kills his man, he is prosecuted for murder. If he is a true Christian, his duty as a Christian and his honour as a soldier are in direct opposition. The Commander-in-Chief would immortalize himself if he would only instruct officers how to act under insult without the breach of any duty towards man or God, or any infraction of the laws of common sense. — Hurkaru. The Englishman gives the following particulars of the case:—"About two months ago, Mr. Umphelby and Mr. Pennefather either went to, or met at, a public billiard-table, which has of late been unfortunately notorious as the seat and source of disreputable quarrels: when quitting, the latter individual entered into a quarrel with a third party, in which Mr. Umphelby tried to interfere, we believe pacifically, drawing Mr. Pennefather's anger on himself, and after some interchange of harsh words, Mr. Pennefather kicked Mr. Umphelby. This officer shrunk from a disgraceful personal conflict in the open streets, and therefore did not return the blow, intending to seek the advice of a friend as to his future course; and, unfortunately for his reputation and himself, that advice was not obtained until three days had expired, when an apology was demanded from, and tendered by, Mr. Pennefather. The commanding officer of the 80th did not consider this satisfactory, a long arrest and a court of inquiry have been the result, whilst the severer ordeal of a court-martial is still pending over Mr. Umphelby, whose repugnance to the practice of duelling may be sincere and well founded, and whose delay in taking steps to avenge his honour, resulted, we believe, more from ignorance of the nature of the course he ought to follow, than any unworthy disinclination to pursue it."

CONVERTS' WIVES.—The Benares Recorder says he has been told by many respectable and influential natives, "that the inhabitants of the holy Kashi have a vague impression that a Christian Brahman of that place is on the eve of forcing his Brahman wife, with the help of the judge of Benares, to leave her family and live with him, and that this universal impression has had much to do with the late outbreak." The precedent, upon which it is assumed that the Benares judge is preparing to act, is that set by Sir William Burton; and the Recorder exhorts Lord Dalhousie to prevent the threatened injustice by "passing without delay a clear and definite enactment on this all-important subject, to let all whom it may concern know that though a convert from one religion to another shall not lose his inheritance, his wife is different from his oxen and asses; that she has a will and conscience of her own; and that no law shall constrain her to live with her changed husband, except she declare in open court that such is her own will and pleasure." We are well aware that the Supreme Court have on more than one occasion ignored the authority of the Hindoo parent over an apostatizing son of even boyish age, and they might interfere in the same way to protect the apostate wife from liability to ill-usage; but in what they have done and might do in this respect the law is set at naught, and a handle is given to the natives to complain that not even are English judges superior to prejudice, when that prejudice is one of their own religion. We agree with the Recorder. A change of the law is required, if for no other reason than to preserve the dignity of our courts. — Citizen, Aug. 27.

THE MILITARY FUND.—The Morning Chronicle states that the Directors of the Bengal Military Fund have decided to choose their new Secretary from the army, provided they can procure a properly qualified person.

LIEUT. TOTTENHAM.—The court martial on Lieut. Tottenham, 7th light cavalry, closed proceedings on the 19th ult. The defence and rejoinder are described as most voluminous. There is a general impression abroad at Peshawur that the prisoner will get off with a reprimand. — Delhi Gazette, Sept. 1.

THE DEAD ALIVE.—A Noekolah correspondent of the Englishman tells a story which reminds us of an incident in the Revelations of Panch Cowrie Khan. A man was tried for the wilful murder of a washerman. He was convicted, and the futwa of the law officer recommended capital punishment. The judge, however, Mr. Metcalfe, in referring the case to the higher court, recommended transportation for life. But on the evening of the trial, the man, supposed to have been murdered was brought into the station alive.

MURDERS IN THE TRANS-INDUS DISTRICTS.—As the Lahore Chronicle tries to make out that we have exaggerated, with regard to the number of murders committed within our Trans-Indus Provinces, we have taken the trouble to look back and reperuse some of the letters of our numerous correspondents. From these we gather that about twenty-five or twenty-six murders were committed during the months of November, December, January, February, and March last, in the Kohat district alone; and that from twelve to fifteen have occurred since. We include the murders in the Kothul pass in the above enumeration. We have also stumbled upon an item, which we most unaccountably overlooked at the time we received the communication, to the effect that several of the murders above alluded to were committed in the hopes of overawing the authorities into releasing a notorious villain named Jyemul, the son of the head Mullik of Bahadur Khel, and who has been convicted of upwards of half a dozen murders; yet the Board have not yet mustered courage sufficient to carry out the sentence of death, which was passed upon him several months ago! With regard to the district of Peshawur, we find the murders to exceed in number those perpetrated in the former district within the same period; but many of these have been from time to time brought to the notice of the public in our columns. But in all our communications we find no mention made of the perpetrators of these atrocious deeds ever meeting with their deserts, so that we still think we were called upon to bring this fact before the public, and to urge the authorities to make some exertions for the apprehension of the criminals. — Delhi Gaz., Sept. 1.

COURTS OF REQUEST.—A regiment at Cawnpore, and a very fine and well-conducted regiment, received intimation that its services would be required in Burmah, and was desired to prepare for its move. This soon became noised throughout cantonments, and suits were preferred by dealers in the Suddur Bazaar, before the next native Court of Requests, against upwards of a hundred of the Sepoys, the amounts claimed reaching in many cases to forty and even fifty rupees. The Court had no discretion, and nearly all the claims being proved, it was compelled to award the respective amounts sued for, to be deducted by monthly instalments of one half the Sepoys' entire pay, until the whole were discharged. Now these men are on the eve of departure for foreign service; they go with but half their pay to meet greatly increased expenses necessarily incidental to a march, and after discharging the half mounting deductions, and other regimental calls, are to subsist on the balance, which will range from eight annas to a rupee.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 1.

THE CHILD SUCKLED BY A WOLF.—A Lucknow correspondent of the Engishman furnishes the following confirmation of the extraordinary narrative inserted in a preceding Mail (p. 512):—"I have seen in the Delhi Gazette a very wonderful account of a boy's having been suckled by a wolf, and afterwards restored to its parents. At the risk of being considered over-credulous, I must avow my entire belief in it. I have heard the same and similar stories from such very credible witnesses, officers high in the service and holding important political employments, and native gentlemen of the most undoubted respectability, that I cannot do otherwise than put faith in the statement, that wolves have been known to rear up children. There is, I am told, such a boy at Lucknow at the present moment, though I have never seen him. I have been promised, however, a sight of him shortly."

THE WANABEE MOVEMENT, it would seem, had affected Delhi; for last week several houses, and among them those of Hosein Buksh, the Punjabee merchant, were strictly searched by the magisterial authorities, and all the papers and correspondence that could be found were secured, and are now, it is said, undergoing examination. The matter seems to have caused no little excitement in the city, and we find it prominently noticed by our native contemporary, the Oordoo Ukhbar, of last Sunday. After giving his version of the search, he reads the malecontents, if there are really any such, the following lesson:—"We are astonished at the wisecrackers who have harboured even a thought of opposing such wise and powerful rulers—rulers to whom the Almighty has given the art of government, and wisdom, and power. In truth, to oppose such rulers, is to oppose God. It is to invite death. But a short time ago, the powerful Sikhs, who conquered hundreds of cities like Peshawur; who feared no mortals; who were both wise and brave; all of them were caught like so many foxes. How, then, have a parcel of helpless weavers imagined that they could oppose the invincible armies of such a government, and what ingratitude is it when our rulers evince administrative talents and justice, forbearance and regard for the poor, such as the oldest among us never heard of! We to this day see under native governments that the guilty and innocent, the wise and fools, are alike killed and ruined. We ought to esteem such rulers the greatest blessing, otherwise we are ungrateful to God. Now, if Mahommedans complain that there are a great many infidels on the earth, let them remember that our rulers are of the number of those who believe in the Book. Let our Mahommedan brethren join them and fight with the Burmese and Chinese, if they want to have a religious war, for are not those people infidels? But the fact is, that it is no religious war. The thing is got up by interested and artful persons, fools whose destruction is inevitable." The above is taken from a Mahommedan paper, with a Mahommedan editor.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 1.

ODDS.—The following is from Lucknow, dated 19th August:—"The 61st and 55th regiments N.I. are to remain here another couple of years. The former corps has received its order to stay, but the latter regiment likewise will not march; at least there is very little doubt about the matter. The Sikh (Loodianah) regiment will leave this about the 25th inst. by boat—down the Goomtee. There is no news regarding the court. The same recklessness that has always characterised the Durbar prevails now even to a greater degree than before. Of the revenue, 60 to 65 lakhs only have been received this year; of these, two-thirds consist of papers and receipts of the commandants in the districts, for payment of their troops and of Chucklids acknowledging having received revenue from Zemindars for the ensuing year. Thus the revenue received is not real but nominal. No fighting is now going on in any part of the district. There never is, except when the crops are being cut. It is then only that human heads are mowed away along with the corn. There was a great festival yesterday in honour of the birth of a son to the king by one of his concubines. The king's jealousy had on a former occasion been aroused, but the evil demon is entirely set at rest in the royal breast. He is not a little proud at having another prince, and in the fulness of his joy ordered, what he can little afford to do, a lac of rupees to be distributed as a gift among all his servants. A salute of a hundred guns last week announced the auspicious event."—Engishman, Aug. 27.

MONEY continues plentiful and procurable on easy terms, viz. from 5 to 8 per cent. per annum, according to the nature of the security.—Ibid. Sept. 7.

IMPUDENT FRAUD.—The following, from a correspondent near the Oude frontier, seems to be the interpretation of an oriental apologue which we published a few months since:—"Some months back there was a story current here, relative to a fraud which had been practised upon the minister at Lucknow. This gentleman was anxious to get rid of Col. Sleeman, whom he found a great thorn in his side and an unpleasant check upon the practices by which he was seeking to enrich himself. It was whispered to the minister that there was a civilian whose relatives had sufficient influence at the court of Queen Victoria to obtain the dismissal of the resident, and the minister, supposing that the Queen was as absolute as his own master, and had only to say the word and the colonel would be removed, agreed to pay four lacs of rupees if he could obtain this object, provided the bribe could be conveyed to the commissioner, so that there should be no fear of the matter getting wind. This was arranged as follows:—The amount was written off to the credit of a certain chuckledar in his accounts with the treasury, and he promised to convey the money to a friend, the son of an ex-minister of Lucknow, resident at the same station with the Commissioner, and on terms of intimacy with that gentleman, to whom he was to hand over the consideration. It was reported to the minister, that all had been done according to agreement, and he sat down in the full assurance that in due course of time the resident would be sent to the right about. But time rolled away, and Colonel Sleeman still continued at his post. The minister began to smell a rat. The chuckledar was called upon to restore the money, as the period within which the resident was to be removed or the money returned had expired. The chuckledar proceeded to the ex-minister's son and demanded repayment. He declared that the commissioner had received the amount, and went to him frequently under the pretence of getting a refund, thus bringing into disrepute among the natives the character of one of the most honourable men in the Company's civil service, to say which is calling him highly honourable among the honourable. Doubtless the commissioner has not seen a rupee. He has been the scapegoat for the sins of two villains, who have shared the spoil. Equally little doubt is there that the minister has paid four lacs for nothing. Within the last few days the chuckledar has left the Newabi, and come to his home in the Company's territories, with six lacs of rupees in his pocket. Another chuckledar is said to have bolted with between eight and nine lacs."—Hurkaru.

THE LATE DYCE SOMBRE'S WILL.—John Company is determined to have a hard fight for the "paper" left by the late Mr. Dyce Sombre, and which, we believe, is in the hands of the Governor-General's agents. Whether the information which is now being collected, will have the effect of establishing the claim of Government to that portion of the property, is problematical; but it will, at any rate, be a case of great interest to the legal profession, inasmuch as the ground upon which the claim of Government is to be based, will prove quite a new feature in the reasons and arguments hitherto adduced in court for substantiating disputed claims to testamentary bequests. We have not heard whether the matter is to come before the Indian tribunal or to be referred to the courts in England, but we hear that the Company's attorney is at present engaged in preparing certain papers relating to the subject mentioned.—Hurkaru, Sept. 6.

NATIVE PROCESSIONS.—Extreme uneasiness having been felt by the natives of the metropolis on account of their processions being prohibited, they have after all deemed it prudent to lay before Government a petition representing the utter perplexity caused by the passing of the prohibitory Act, and praying for the liberal consideration of Government as to the removal of the same.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

PRIVATE QUEENY—TRANSPORTED CONVICTS.

The following remarks by the Commander-in-Chief in India on the trial of Private Thomas Queeney, of the 1st European Bengal Fusiliers, who has been sentenced to transportation for life by a general court-martial assembled at Meerut on the 30th of July, 1852, are republished for the information of her Majesty's regiments; and his Excellency desires that they be read at the head of every regiment on parade, subsequently at the head of every troop, company, and detachment of troops of the royal service in India:—

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 14, 1852.—This is the fourth case of soldiers of this distinguished regiment who have been sentenced to transportation within the last six weeks. His Excellency has reason to fear that this disgrace to his regiment and to the army, Thomas Queeney, was actuated in his outrageous conduct by a desire to get himself transported. If the Court were of this opinion, it would have been well had they refrained from meeting his wishes, and sentenced him to punishment of another nature. The sentence of transportation shall, however, now be carried out to its full extent; and at Norfolk Island, the place of the prisoner's destination, he will soon discover the vast difference between the life of a well-conducted soldier in India and that of a convict subjected to the severe discipline and hard labour of the prisons of the penal settlement.

The Commander-in-Chief has been given to understand, that the soldiery of this army have received from the ill-intentioned an incorrect description of the life of military prisoners sentenced to transportation, and imagine it is one of comparative ease and comfort, and preferable in many respects to that of a soldier in India. His Excellency cannot perhaps do more to dissipate this erroneous idea than to make known the following extract from the instructions given by the Secretary of State in the colonial department to the Lieutenant-Governor of Van Diemen's Land, regarding the treatment of convicts, and which will have to be carried out in the case of the convict Queeney:—

"Arrived at Norfolk Island, the convict will be employed at hard labour. No authority except that of the Queen herself will be competent to abridge the time of his detention there. On the other hand, the misconduct of the convict in Norfolk Island may have the effect of prolonging his detention there indefinitely. Even good conduct on the part of the convict cannot abridge the duration of this part of the sentence."

The removal of the convict Queeney from Norfolk Island to another locality, where, however, he will have to work as a felon at hard labour, can only be obtained by a long course of continued and unvarying good conduct on his part, such as would have secured him, had he remained in the army, certain promotion in his profession and the means of retiring eventually to his native country. He is now debarred by the sentence of the Court from the hope of ever seeing his country again.

The above observations will show that the life of the convict is one of disgrace and toil. Let the evil-disposed soldiers therefore be warned by the fate to which this man, Queeney, has subjected himself;—a fate to which death would be preferred by every honourable soldier.

COURT-MARTIAL.

ENS. WILLIAM LIONEL RAWSON LUMSDAINE, 6TH N.I.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Aug. 19, 1852.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Cawnpore on Monday, July 26, 1852, Ens. W. L. R. Lumsdaine, 6th N.I., was arraigned on the following charge:—

For scandalous, infamous conduct, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Allyghur, on or about Feb. 26, 1852, endorsed to Punnah Loll, chowdry of the regt., and delivered to Rung Loll, acting chowdry of the left wing of the regt. and agent to Punnah Loll, for the purpose of getting negotiated, and which was negotiated accordingly, a bill of exchange or order for money, dated Meerut, Feb. 20, 1852, for Rs. 150, drawn on the secretary to the Delhi bank, and payable at sight to him, Ens. Lumsdaine, or to his order, and which said bill of exchange or order for money, purported to have been signed by Lieut. L. Munro, 43rd N.L.I., he, Ens. THE INDIA GOVERNMENT QUESTION.

In our other columns will be found articles from the local press on the question of a proposed commission of inquiry into the condition of India proposed to be set on foot by the editor of the Athenæum. The project, so far as it has been expounded by its originator, is to issue throughout the districts of this presidency printed sets of questions on the several points involved in the industrial, educational, and political well-being of the twenty-two millions ruled over by the Council of Fort St. George. Every subject that is likely to engage the attention of the Imperial Legislature during the charter investigations will be submitted for the opinions of the men who can throw light on them from personal experience. The returns to these queries will be afterwards collated, condensed, and arranged, for the use of the committees of both Houses of Parliament and the public at large. Friends to the project have been invited to assist in giving it effect, by distributing the blank papers in every direction where they are likely to be of service, and communications have been invited from all quarters able and willing to furnish the facts which can be the only effectual weapons in the approaching campaign. The editor of the Athenæum has been moved to take this step, one which, though not the best imaginable, seems to be the best practicable, by the knowledge that there is an "influential party in Parliament who are impressed with the belief that India might be governed much better than it is at present, but they want facts to support their opinions.—Overland Athenæum, Sept. 13.

Despairing of any movement among the benighted, in order to present the grievances of this presidency to Parliament, the office of the Athenæum proposes to issue "a series of papers containing queries on the various points to be submitted to the Imperial Legislature; the returns will be examined and classed for the use of the committees of both Houses and the public at large." The idea is not a bad one; but we doubt if the Athenæum office is an authority sufficient to gain friends to the project, or to impart an impulse to the lethargic habits of the benighted public: if the Chamber of Commerce were to take up such a plan, upon a broad basis, forming a committee composed of all castes, there might be some, though not very strong hopes, that useful information might be collected; and as their body is recognised by the government, they might find members of the parliamentary committees who would perhaps turn the information to account: but a single individual, or office, without a good subscription-fund to smooth the way, would find it uphill work, and little likely to promise success. It took lacs of rupees to rescind the corn-laws, and it will take crores before India will obtain from Parliament the redress of which she stands in need. As a prostrate suppliant she will receive the beggar's dole; perhaps a copper, perhaps hard words and blows; but if she wants more, she must show that she has power. Money is power, and when she brings this to bear, she will obtain her rights, whatever they may be, in proportion as that power is exercised. She may form her powerless associations, and draft out her absurd plans for a new government at home and abroad; but unless she can become unanimous, persevering, and free of cash, she will never be, nor deserve to be, in a better condition than the dogs under the table who eat of the children's crumbs.—Crescent, Sept. 8.

THE CLERGY IN INDIA.

We can hardly wonder at the fact that the Hindus, instead of stirring to get redress for substantial grievances, confine their views to the repeal of the lex loci, and running similar tilts at similar windmills, when an enlightened journalist gravely recommends them to give a prominent place in their memorial to the injustice of subsidizing the Protestant clergy. The Crescent (Hindu paper), speaking of a rumoured intention to increase the number of chaplains, says, "We must dispute the propriety of their salaries and allowances being wrrenched from the horny fist of the toiling Hindu ryots: if the sojourners at this or that station feel their want of a chaplain, they ought to pay the price of his appropriation, as they do their house-rent; or if unable to do that from their own means entirely, then let their co-religionists, who desire the maintenance and extension of the popular creed, make up the deficiency, as is the custom among British Christians, who eschew the teaching of the state clergy. It is abominable that these latter should still have to pay tithes and church taxes to support a form of religion from which they have seceded; but it is a thousand times more abominable, that the people of Hindustan should be fleeced, in order to support the foreign propagators of a foreign creed, who, not content with pouching the plunder, make use of it to destroy the religion of those from whom it is plundered."

Our contemporary has surely forgotten that he is bound to accept the British dominion as a whole, or not at all. A chaplain is considered necessary for each military station, just as a member of council is thought needful at the presidency, or as bayonets, rum, and pipeclay are thought needful for the equipment of the army. The Hindu is taxed for the maintenance of British supremacy; taxed to buy champagne for the Commander-in-Chief; taxed to support breakfasts at Government-house, and leather-bottomed chairs at Leadenhall-street. Is there anything more abhorrent to the Hindu mind, in finding rupees for the parson than cows for the soldier? In the latter case he pays to maintain a never-ending assault upon one of the most universal and cherished Hindu prejudices,—in the other, he learns, by rumour only, that an Englishman who expounds as well as reads the Bible,—who wears a black coat and professes to save souls instead of destroying bodies, is supported out of the revenues of the country. The question may be simply disposed of in a syllogism as follows:—

India is properly taxed to support a government by Englishmen:

Clergymen are necessary to the said government:

Therefore, India is properly taxed to support clergymen.

It costs as much to keep up two members of council as would suffice for thirty clergymen. We advise the Hindus to assail the larger grievance, and leave Vishnu and Kallee to take care of themselves.—Athenæum, Sept. 2.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Madras August 23rd, per Oriental.

THE MADRAS FUSILIERS embarked on Tuesday, for Rangoon, and we regret to say that their conduct did not show well in comparison with that of H.M.'s 51st, or the horse-artillery. Their excesses kept the town in a perfect state of alarm the night before the vessels sailed, and we should not wonder if a heavy list of casualties is sent to the Adjutant-General's office before long. Men who waded through the surf up to their knees, and then went on board to lie down in their wet clothes, and struggle through the consequences of intoxication produced by the vilest compounds, are not likely to hold out against exposure and a burning sun. If the authorities tacitly sanctioned such a state of things, the license is to be condemned; if they were powerless to prevent it, the weakness is to be deplored.—Athenæum, Sept. 9. The Spectator thus echoes the Athenæum's censures on the conduct of the 1st Madras Fusiliers while in camp at Madras:—"Not only are the above remarks well founded, but they might have gone much further, if the reports that have reached us are at all to be credited; for not only during the night before they sailed, but almost every night since their arrival, did this alarm prevail, and not only in Black Town, but through Chintadrapettah, Triplicane, Royapettah, and other districts. We understand that not alone were the liquor-shops and houses of ill-fame broken into, but several private houses, and their inmates grossly outraged. On Monday, we are told that but forty-nine passes were sanctioned and granted, with a view to keep the men in their tents, but that at roll-call, or very shortly after, the whole regiment, except ninety odd men, was absent, and that the presence of some thirty of these was only secured by their being lashed to the tent-pole! Such a state of indiscipline we never heard of before, and trust we never shall again."

BURMESE BELL.—The barque Delfance is bringing to Madras a large bell, taken when Rangoon was captured by the British force. It is upwards of three tons in weight, and was taken by the Madras Artillery. It is intended, after public exhibition at Madras, to be conveyed to the Mount and hang up there as a trophy.—Athenæum, Sept. 6.

KHADIR KHAN.—The proceedings in the case of the trooper Khadir Khan, recently tried for the murder of Lieut. Johnstone, have been sent back for revision. The Commander-in-Chief, after perusing them, ordered the guard over the prisoner to be strengthened, and sent the papers on to the Governor in Council, who in turn handed them over to the Advocate-General.—Athenæum, Aug. 28.

MAJOR FOTHERGILL.—The Athenæum announces the death at Cuddalore, on the 26th August, of Major C. C. Fothergill, of the 1st N. V. B., and formerly of the 40th M. N. I., aged seventy-two years. This gallant old soldier entered the service in 1804; served under Sir J. Doveton in the Deccan war, and was present at the battle of Seetabuldee in 1817, for which he wore a medal.

THE RAJAH OF TRAVANCORE.—The United Service Gazette supplies the following additional illustration of the enlightened spirit and princely liberality of the Rajah of Travancore:—"Truly indeed does the Rajah of Travancore furnish an extraordinary contrast to the generosity of eastern princes. Not satisfied with his present Observatory, the Rajah, at the suggestion of his new astronomer, Mr. John Allan Brown, has determined on erecting an additional one, for which a site has been selected on the Agastyar Mullai, about 6,200 feet above the level of the sea, and has sanctioned the outlay of the sum required as per estimate, for its erection, thereby increasing his already great claims as a benefactor to science."

CONVERTS.—The town of Masulipatam has been thrown into a state of violent commotion in consequence of the administration of the rite of baptism to two native youths under instruction in the Rev. Mr. Noble's school. One of these young men was a Brahmin, and the other a Vellalen, and both were taken under Mr. Noble's care on the 29th July; on the 30th they broke caste, and the Brahmin took out and delivered up his Brahminical thread; on the 31st they removed their * * or tuft of hair on their heads, and were to have been baptized on the 1st instant, which was Sunday; but in consequence of the commotion being so great, and an attack from the people anticipated, the converts were obliged to be baptized on the preceding night. The Brahmin's name was Vencatratnam, and received at his baptism the name of Ruthnum; that of the Vellalen was Nagabojanum, and received at his baptism the name of Bojanum.

THE LONG-EXPECTED SCREW STEAMER the "Queen of the South" arrived in Madras Roads on the 28th ult., having left Table Bay on the 1st August, the Mauritius on the 15th, and Point de Galle on the 27th. The new steamer attracted much attention, and the general verdict is a favourable one. The fittings, arrangement, the various means and appliances for the comfort of passengers, of this splendid ship, are universally extolled. Two things only are lacking to render the Cape service an effectual rival to the P. and O. Company—the reduction of the passage rates within reasonable limits, and the introduction of a "liquor law," which should make the individual purse responsible for the individual potations.—Athenæum, Sept. 13.

SEVERE ABUSES and mismanagement in the Black Town male and female orphanage, have been disclosed by the president of that institution, the Rev. Henry Taylor. These orphan schools have been for years liberally supported by the Madras public, who from year to year have been assured by official testimonials and directorial reports of their admirable efficiency. The pleasing belief that their charity was well bestowed in making the orphan happy, and competent, to enter when the period arrived, on the battle of life, Mr. Taylor's published statements have dissipated, and the community are bent on having an inquiry. The affair, as might be expected, has raised a parochial storm; the management and their friends seeking to evade the chaplain's allegations by retorting on him the charge of overbearing insolence of demeanour, and a design to build up in the asylums a system of priestly autocracy.—Ibid.

MR. MEAD, editor of the Madras Athenæum, is likely to gain very substantial benefit from the native gentlemen, whose cause he has advocated with such success in England. In one case Mr. Mead gets two lakhs of rupees, and in the other one lakh, besides having his expenses to England and back liberally defrayed.—Delhi Gaz.

THE MADRAS BANK.—The Court of Directors, it is said, has declined to withdraw the Bank's charter, as was recommended by the Madras Government, but has recommended legal proceedings against the secretary of the Bank.

BOMBAY.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 8th arrived at Bombay on September 5th, per Auchland.

NATIVE MERCHANTS.—The Bombay papers notice the failure of one of the great native merchants of the island, Khemchund Moteechund, for nearly twelve lacs of rupees. It is said, however, that he will in all probability be able to pay sixteen annas in the rupee. According to the Bombay Gazette, Khemchund Moteechund received from his father sixteen years ago, some thirty-five lacs of rupees, with an injunction to abandon trade. The advice, however, was disregarded, and "Khemchund's servants traded for him, while he himself enacted the devotee in the temples erected by the family." The last sentence gives us the secret of the decay of many native houses.

A GRIEVANCE.—The Bombay natives, according to the Gazette, have at last hit upon an original grievance and a very original mode of remedying it. "The natives intend to move that the interest upon all public debts in no case be allowed to exceed four per cent. and to suggest that the necessary funds be raised by the reduction of the salaries of all civil servants to a scale approximate to those under other colonial governments."

MR. LAURIE.—A correspondent of the Poonah Observer states, that Mr. Laurie, the young man who, after losing his commission in the Bombay army, apostatized to the Mussulman faith, has gone on pilgrimage to Mecca.

MORTALITY DURING AUGUST.—We have been favoured with the return of mortality in the town and islands of Bombay and Colaba, for the month of August just passed, and from this we perceive that the total number of deaths during the month was 1032, or on an average 33·290 daily. Sixty-three casualties occurred from cholera and small-pox during the period reported on, whereas in July the number of epidemics was 161. Thirteen deaths are reported from accidents or violence during the past month. The highest number of deaths on any given day was 49, the lowest 22. The European community have lost in all 20 from natural causes; Indo-Britons, 2; Native Christians and Jews, 45 natural, 6 cholera, and 1 violent; Mahomedans, 189 natural, 16 cholera, and 4 violent; Parsees, 48 natural, and 1 violent; Hindoos, 650 natural, 41 cholera, and 6 violent; unknown cases, 2 natural, and 1 violent. Total, 956 deaths from natural causes, 63 from cholera, and 13 from violence or accidents. It will be seen from the above, that 71 deaths less occurred in August than in July, while the mortality from epidemics has been lower by nearly 100.—Times, Sept. 2.

STEAM FLOTILLA ON THE IRAWADDY.—We are assured on excellent authority, that the Governor-General has determined on establishing at once a steam flotilla on the Irrawaddy, and that Captain Campbell, I. N., will most likely be its first commander. The fact,—for we have no doubt that it is such,—is suggestive: we are back at our old policy again,—it is the interests of commerce for which alone we are solicitous, and doubtless we will throw open the commerce of Burmah to the ships of all nations before New-year's day. A moderate slice of territory, such as just lies convenient to our hand, will suffice us for the present, but the Governor-General is far too long-sighted not to perceive that, with the whole river navigation, the whole maritime towns and seaboard of the country, in our hands, the country itself must be ours so soon as we desire it. With the base of the peninsula from the 12th to the 22nd parallel in our possession, the south-west portion to the Straits must follow. Barbarian governments can never long keep faith or rest in peace: we have but to bide our time, when honest and lawful grounds will be furnished us of annexing all we desire.—Ibid., Sept. 3.

THE TOBACCO DEALERS.—The acting collector of customs has called upon all the tobacco shopkeepers at the presidency to furnish him with a daily statement of their sales, and of the stock they may have in hand. This they have with one consent refused to do, and have resisted the demand as oppressive and unnecessary. Such returns they have heretofore sent in monthly to the collector, and this they consider to be quite sufficient for all reasonable purposes. They have, therefore, prepared and submitted to Government a memorial signed by upwards of a hundred of their body, complaining of this new vexation. In the meanwhile they have unanimously agreed to refrain from selling a particle of tobacco until they obtain satisfaction. In consequence of this determination, not a shop was to be seen open yesterday, in any part of the island—from Colaba to Mahim.—Gazette, Sept. 2. The stoppage of the bank of Bombay, or shutting up of the Government treasury, could scarcely have created a greater sensation than the universal closing of the snuff and tobacco shops yesterday! Smokers and snuffers not expecting any such calamity as this, and who did not, like Dugald Dalgetty, make any preparations for a siege, were completely taken aback at finding themselves thus compelled, like Falstaff, to live cleanly when they so little expected to require to act on these matters on compulsion. Should the existing state of things endure, we warn the governor to have his body-guard doubled as he approaches Bombay, or verily and to a surety he will find an onslaught on his Havannahs it may not be easy to repel or resent; tobacco and garja, and other such-like narcotics, pay so much customs' duty per maund: the plan hitherto has been to take stock of the dealers once a month, and see that the quantity on hand, and that set down as sold, correspond with that on which duty had been originally paid. It having been strongly suspected that smuggling on a large scale prevailed, and that extensive frauds were committed on the revenue, and that a vast deal more was disposed of than ever was entered in the excise book,—it was resolved to have stock taken every day—a return being made in the evening of the day's sales, and this checked next morning by the Customs-house officer weighing and examining the quantity on hand. Ignorant of the extent of smuggling surmised, or the proofs existing of its prevalence, we are not in a position to speak as to the necessity of strong measures at all: it is very obvious that such a method of check as that referred to is not only subject to very great abuse, but must be source of infinite annoyance and vexation—vexation and annoyance such as can only be warranted by extreme necessity. It is, on the other hand, equally apparent that the systematic and determined breakers of the law, if such there be at present, have no right whatever to complain of any amount of vexation that may be imposed on them to deter them from dishonesty; and the only mischief is, that big rogues and small, young rogues and old, or those who are no rogues at all—if any of the latter in reality exist,—are equally punished.—Times, Sept. 2.

THE GOVERNMENT AT JUDDAH appears to have been placed in abeyance by the Arabs. The Pasha's forces were routed and destroyed by the insurgents, and he himself escaped from the carnage, only to die of fatigue in his flight. The H.C.'s sloop Elphinstone was, it is said, to be sent to the disturbed neighbourhood to protect British interests.

NATIVE LIBRARIES.—The Bombay Gazette mention that in the native town of that Presidency, there are no less than five libraries, all intended for, and supported by, natives. A "Bombay Native Library" has now been started, which offers the loan of books at the lowest possible rates, and has already three hundred volumes on its shelves.

THE DUTY ON SALT IMPORTED from Arabia into South Canara and Malabar has been reduced from three rupees to twelve annas per maund; a reduction of 75 per cent.

THE NATIVES of Bombay are getting up an association for the purpose of ascertaining the wants of the people, and of taking measures to represent them to the British Parliament during the charter discussion.

MR. LIDDELL.—A case came on recently before Mr. Henry Liddell, judge and session judge of the Concan, for convicting in which, it is reported, the judges of the Sudder Adawlut have recommended his removal from his present office. According to the account which has reached us, a girl named Sallee confessed to having pushed another girl, with the intent of casting her over a precipice, but the victim merely slid down a slope for a short distance, when the body rested; seeing this, Sallee went down and pushed her again; this push put her over the precipice, and instantaneous death resulted. These details are too meagre to bring us to any safe conclusion, and we shall therefore look with some anxiety for the case at the Sudder. A great deal depends upon the age of the convict.—Gazette, Sept. 2.

CEYLON.

The Legislative Council has not been idle, especially in the direction of law reform. Ordinances effecting great changes in the law of evidence and the mode of procedure before the courts are, some of them law, and some before the council. There has been some warm debate, and in one case a protest, directed chiefly against the interference of the Secretary of State in a matter peculiarly one of local detail, and therefore peculiarly the subject of local legislation. The provision attached to the new customs ordinance, substituting wharfage rates for port dues, has not only been objected to on its own merits, but the avowed object of Government, to obtain an increase of revenue thereby, has led to a discussion on the state of the finances. The result seems to be, that we shall have enough to do to "make both ends meet," leaving us unprepared for such contingencies as that which "looms in the future," of being required to spend £50,000 in making the harbour of Galle capable of receiving the vast additional number of steamers and coalers which will soon resort to it—or, in failure of sufficient accommodation, to Trincomalee. We are certainly bound to use every effort to prevent the loss to Ceylon of any of those advantages which ought to attach to her as the centre of steam navigation in the east.

A good deal of sensation has been created in local circles by the receipt in the colony of despatches from the Secretary of State, rendering compulsory the retirement of Archdeacon Bailey, and administering a rebuke to the Rev. Principal of the Colombo Academy, both arising out of the spirit in which the reverend gentlemen have conducted a controversy with the governor and the bishop. Attempts have been made to represent the archdeacon as a martyr to his anti-Buddhist zeal. Were this the general impression, more sympathy would be entertained for the aged clergyman than has been manifested. The truth is, that "incompatibility of temper" rendered it impossible that the archdeacon and the bishop, however much they may agree in their ecclesiastical sentiments, should remain in their respective positions.

The governor continues to show that he is in earnest on the subject of the vernaculars. His excellency has published a minute embodying his idea of a medical college for Ceylon, calculated we fear on too high a scale for this latitude. His excellency proposes a principal on 500L a year; two professors on 250L and two on 150L a year each. The students to receive regular diplomas. What seems to be wanting in Ceylon, as well as in India, is a class of men, not so raised above the level of the natives as to lose their confidence, but imbued with the principles of correct medical science. We are sending away the last of our largest coffee crop as yet. It is now certain that the total export will not fall short of 400,000 cwts.—Colombo Obs., Sept. 15.

The Ceylon Times states, that an attempt which has been made to grow sugar in the island on Lord Elphinstone's estate of Paradua has been very successful, the sugar produced being an unusually fine specimen of muscovado. The planters are watching the result of the experiment with the deepest interest, as they are fully alive to the necessity of introducing some new cultivation into the island. All former experiments to cultivate the cane have failed from the ruinous expense of imported labour, but it is hoped that, in the present instance, careful management and economy may enable the estate to yield a profitable return.

CHINA.

THE INSURRECTION.—The news from China of most interest to the general reader is that, we apprehend, relating to the long continued insurrection. At latest advices, the aspect of affairs in the disturbed districts was rather favourable to the Imperialists—the road between Canton and Kwei-lin-foo being reported clear of robber gangs—trade, in consequence, taking a favourable turn. But intelligence from the more remote province of Honan, where Tien-teh and the great body of insurgents are said to be, is slow in arrival; and we know little or nothing of what has been done there since the capture of the district city, Kong-fa. The troops, some three or four thousand of them, for conveyance of which boats were sent, reached Canton about ten days ago, and the Deputy Governor Yih is expected shortly. It is said that the principal cause of Imperialist success on the water was an accident, a sudden shift of wind having driven back on the rebel fleet a number of fire rafts, despatched for destruction of the Tartar navy. Some time ago, it was reported, it will be remembered, that the renowned Keshen had hung himself, at the command of the Emperor, who sent him a piece of silk with which to perform the operation. But the report was open to a doubt; and we now find that, instead of being hanged, he has been transported to Keo-lin; the Po-ching-aze of the province over which the ex-commissioner presided sharing his sentence. Referring to successes gained by the imperial arms, and to the subjection of some of the insurgents, it is also stated, in a late Peking Gazette, that, in all parts of the empire, the people are unruly and rebellious. In another gazette, there is an account of the decapitation of the notorious rebel chief "Tien-teh;" but there is too good reason for believing that they have not got hold of the right man yet. The old royal family, the Mings, are residing very quietly in the province of Kiangai, distinguished from surrounding clans by a stern refusal to accept any kind of office under the Tartar dynasty.—Friend of China, Aug. 24.

On the return of an official messenger, he gave us the following news, viz., that the Red-head rebels on the water made an attack on the Ping-nan city on the 20th day of the 4th month. The Tartar troops had no interest in resisting. The walls of the city were beaten down, and a great number of shops and houses were burnt, the people were frightened and offered a sum of 50,000 taels of silver for peace; which having got, the rebels went and anchored on Yen-taz-shih.—Ibid.

LOCAL NEWS.—The present has been a quiet month with us so far, and we have little to tell of more than will be found in extracts from bi-weekly issues. His Excellency the Acting Governor has been rather unwell, and obliged to proceed to Macao for a change of air, but has returned in slightly improved health. Some correspondence has taken place between the British and Chinese ministers, regarding the use, in Chinese official proclamations, of the objectionable term E, signifying "barbarian," which, Dr. Bowring pointed out, has been repeatedly repudiated by his predecessors, whenever used as the general designation for foreigners. The reply of the Acting Governor of Canton is amusing:

"Seu Kwangtsing, member of the 1st class of the 4th order of hereditary nobility, H. I. Majesty's High Commissioner, President of the Board of War, Governor-General of the two Kwang provinces; Pihkwel, H. I. Majesty's Vice-President of the Board of War, Governor of Honan, retained (at Canton) in charge of the seals—in reply to Dr. Bowring, Her Britannic Majesty's Plenipotentiary and Superintendent of Trade.

"They received the Plenipotentiary's letter on the 6th instant (22nd July, 1852), and made themselves acquainted with its contents. The Commissioner is at present in supreme direction of the army in Kwang-se. The Governor is truly ashamed to confess his illiteracy and ignorance, never having applied himself to study, nor given his permanent attention to classics, histories, or dictionaries, so that, up to this moment, he has been altogether unaware that the character E bears the offensive and annoying signification ascribed to it in the Plenipotentiary's letter. That such is the case, he now learns for the first time. It only remains for him for the future to command all the local authorities, when penning proclamations or official documents of any kind, to do away with the character E, where its employment may be thought necessary, and to substitute some other term in its place.

"The Governor writes this reply in the hope that Her Majesty's Plenipotentiary is now in the enjoyment of unmingled happiness and felicity.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The intelligence from this colony is very unsatisfactory; no progress seems to have been made towards a termination of the war on the frontier.

An affair had taken place with the Caffres, at Mundell's Krantz, between Fuller's Hoek and Bush Necks, on the 25th July. Colonel Buller had received intimation that a numerous body was there, and he marched about 1,000 men, consisting of the 90th Rifles, Rifle Brigade, Cape Mounted Rifles, and artillery, with four field pieces, towards the place. On nearing the kloof, the advanced guard came on three Caffres, whom they supposed to be look-out men. They shot two, the other fled over the krantz. Further on, they came to a hut wherein there were six more of the enemy, with whom they also dealt very summarily. Very soon after, the division came up to where the Caffres were, and commenced a very destructive fire on them. To entice them out of the kloof, the troops were then ordered to retire. This retrograde movement had the desired effect, for the enemy followed the troops very closely, until they found themselves between the fire of the guns and that of the troops. The guns, unlimbered and brought to action, commenced the destruction of the mountain warriors, whose loss is supposed to be upwards of 100 killed, whilst on our side there are only two men of the Rifle Brigade and one of the Cape Mounted Rifles slightly wounded.

Rumours state that Sandilli's people had crossed the Kei, and that Sandilli has sent orders to Macomo to abandon his position in the Waterkloof and follow him. This is somewhat confirmed by some prisoners lately taken, who stated that Macomo intended to break up his camp at the full of the moon, but it seems he means to take a good supply with him, as they carried off all the stock from Post Relief, but after four hours' hard riding and fighting, all was recovered except two horses. They made a subsequent attack at Reitsfontein, taking away all the horses before the party there could turn out, who could only protect their sheep, and recapture a part of the cattle.

The report of the Commissioners sent to the spot, at the foot of the back of Table Mountain, called the "Silver Mine," supposed to contain coal, had reported that in a stream, "several small pieces of coal were found, but not to any extent; and it appeared to be the general opinion that nothing satisfactory can be ascertained until the sides of the ravine and the course of the river are cleared of the burnt wood. At the bottom of the same kloof, it was stated that coal had been found on the surface of the ground, and several pieces were picked up by different parties. Some men dug in different parts to the depth of five or six feet without, however, any favourable result. A labourer, who has been a resident on the farm for many years, says he has often picked up large pieces of coal whilst digging."

PERSIA.

Intelligence has been received at Constantinople, that an attempt was made to assassinate the Shah of Persia by shooting him with a pistol when he was on a hunting party. The Shah was wounded in the shoulder by three slugs, which were extracted, and he had nearly recovered. Four men approached the monarch, under pretence of presenting a petition, which he refused to accept. Two of the fellows then seized the horse's bridle, while their companions fired two double-barrelled pistols at the Shah, who, although wounded in the thigh and mouth, was still able to quit his saddle, and keep off his assailants until his suite came up. Two of the assassins were literally hewn to pieces; the others, who were taken alive, declared that they had no accomplices, but that belonging to the Babis, they had determined to avenge the death of their chief by murdering the Shah. One Hajee Suleiman Khan, accused as the instigator of the crime, was seized; his body drilled with a knife in parts which would not at the moment cause death; pieces of lighted candles were then introduced into the holes, and, thus illuminated, he was carried in procession through the bazaar, and finally conveyed to the town gates, and there cleft in twain. The Kurret-il-Ain, better known as the Fair Prophetess of Kazoehn, who, since the late religious outbreak, had been kept a close prisoner at the capital, has been executed with some dozen others. Later accounts state that the Koords and other mountain tribes were in open insurrection, consequent upon a report that the Shah had fallen under the hand of the assassin.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

A narrative of a Mission of Inquiry to the Jewish Synagogue at Kai-fung-foo, in Ho-nan, to ascertain the condition of the colony of Jews settled in China several centuries ago, has been published at Shang-hae. It is written by the two Chinese employed in the mission; one of them, named Kiu-Tien-sang, had been long in the service of Dr. Medhurst; the other, named Tsiang-Yung-chi, is also a native Chinese Christian. The narrative, which is highly curious and interesting, is preceded by an introduction by the Bishop of Victoria.

They left Shang-hae on the 15th November, 1850, and in twenty-five days, reached Kai-fung-foo, or Pien-liang-ching (600 miles from Shang-hae), on the 9th December. They soon obtained a direction to the synagogue of the Tiau-kin-kiau, as the Jews are called, which was in ruins. Within the precincts of the temple were some small apartments inhabited by Jews. They said, "We are very few; our teacher is dead; our temple is in ruins, and we are almost starved." It appeared that they had been without a Rabbi for fifty years, and none of them could read Hebrew.

The two Chinese describe the synagogue (which is called in Chinese, Synagogue of the Israelites) as resembling one of their own temples, many inscriptions in Chinese characters being written about it. It faces the east. At the first entrance there were two figures of lions in stone, on pedestals. In the space within the gate dwelt some Jews, under a mat and straw roof. On each side was a small gate, one of which was choked up with mud. Over the second entrance was written, in Chinese characters, "Venerate Heaven." This inclosure was also inhabited by Jews. On the right was a stone tablet, on which ancient and modern Chinese characters were engraved. The pai-fang, or ornamental gateway, 15 feet high, roofed with green tiles, had a round white marble table in front of it, upon which the word "Happiness" was inscribed, and below, "The mind holding communion with Heaven," all in Chinese. On each side of the pai-fang were brick pavilions, some of them in ruins, and on the back was written, "Reverently accord with the expansive Heavens." Below, on the ground, stone vases and tripods were placed. In the third court, there was a marble balustrade, with steps, ascending which the temple appeared, with two stone lions in front. It stands upon a low terrace, 15 feet by 40. The door was closed, but, after some demur, the visitors were allowed to enter and examine the sacred place. The interior consists of three apartments before and three behind, thrown into one large hall. The roof is covered with green tiles, and divided, showing the four corners of the two ranges of apartments. The first series has long, varnished windows; the back is surrounded with walls on three sides. The two make a hall 80 feet by 50. Directly behind the front door stood a bench, about 6 feet from which was a long stand for candles, similar to those usually placed before idols in Chinese temples; and in connection therewith was a table, on which was placed an earthenware incense-vessel, having a wooden candlestick at each end. In the centre of the great hall is a kind of pulpit raised about a foot on a wooden floor, in which, when the rabbi sat, a large red satin umbrella was held over him. Behind it there was another table, bearing two candlesticks and an earthenware incense-vessel. The "emperor's tablet," with the usual formula, "May the Manchu dynasty reign ten thousand years," was placed on a large table in a shrine, and above it was the following inscription in Hebrew: "Hear, O Israel! Jehovah our God is one Jehovah: Blessed be the name of his glorious kingdom for ever and ever." Next to this was the imperial tablet for the Ming dynasty, with a small table bearing two candlesticks and an incense-vessel before it. On each side of this tablet was a tripod, and behind it a cell, in which are deposited twelve tubes containing the sacred writings, and over the front of the door, or ornamental frame, was written, in Hebrew letters, "Ineffable is his name, for Jehovah is the God of gods." In front of the cell, a high tripod stood on each side; and to the right and left of the principal cell are two other cells, bearing the same inscription, in Hebrew, as that above the emperor's tablet, surmounted by two gilt circles, in one of which is written (in Hebrew letters) "Kamon," in the other "Shemesh,"—the names of two angels. In front of the left hand cell is a table, with a stone tablet, bearing in Chinese, "The Hall of the Excellent Religion," with an incense-tripod before it. Before the right hand cell is a stone tablet upon a table, with this inscription, in Hebrew: "Who is he that is above all outgoings? Even Jehovah, Jehovah the Most High. The sacred incense, which the elders only offer up at the Feast of Weeks, on the second day of the month Sivan —" Before Tien-sang had finished copying this inscription, a man drove him out of the temple, telling him to take care what he was doing, and shut the door. He then addressed the other Jews, saying that the two men had been sent by English missionaries, and that they must not be admitted any more.

The envoys then had recourse to one of the Jews, whom they requested to procure for them a copy of all the inscriptions, and offered to purchase the Hebrew books and the rolls of the Law. The man said he could not get the rolls, but he could give them some of the small books, and he produced one. They asked him what his religion was called. He replied, that it formerly had the name of Tiau-chuh-kiau, or Indian religion; but the priests had changed it to Tien-kin-kiau, or the religion of those who pluck out the sinew (because they take out the sinew of every animal they eat), in consequence of the Jews getting into a tumult with the Chinese. He further told them that the priest, when going to perform service, wears a blue head-dress and blue shoes; that the congregation must not enter with their shoes on, nor the women with their heads covered; and that both men and women wash their bodies (for which purpose baths are provided on each side of the temple) before they enter the holy place. They are not allowed to intermarry with heathens or Mohammedans, nor to have more than one wife, nor to eat pork, nor to associate with Mohammedans; and they are required to keep the Sabbath holy, which is our Saturday. Besides the rabbi, there are two officers, the sinew extractor and propagator of doctrines. On the 24th of the eighth month they hold a festival, in which they exhibit the sacred writings. In worship they bow towards the west, and they use the word Tien, "Heaven," when calling upon God.

Two long inscriptions, found on tablets in the ruined pavilions in the pai-fang, are translated in the work. One is as follows:—

"The Record of the Temple erected in honour of Eternal Reason and the Sacred Writings.

"It has been said that the sacred writings are for the purpose of embodying Eternal Reason, and that Eternal Reason is for the purpose of communicating the sacred writings. What is Eternal Reason? The principle which is in daily use and constant practice; and which has been generally followed out by men of ancient and modern times. It is present in everything, and the same in all seasons; in fact, there is no place in which Eternal Reason does not reside. But Eternal Reason without the sacred writings cannot be preserved; and the sacred writings without Eternal Reason cannot be carried out into action; for men get into confusion, and do not know whither they are going, until they are carried away by foolish schemes and strange devices; hence the doctrines of the sages have been handed down in the six classics, in order to convey the knowledge to future generations, and to extend its benefits to the most distant period.

"With respect to the Israelitish religion, we find, on inquiry, that its first ancestor, Adam, came originally from India, and that during the Chau state the sacred writings were in existence. The sacred writings embodying Eternal Reason consist of fifty-three sections. The principles therein contained are very abstruse, and the Eternal Reason therein revealed is very mysterious, being treated with the same veneration as Heaven. The founder of this religion is Abraham, who is considered the first teacher of it. Then came Moses, who established the law, and handed down the sacred writings. After his time, during the Hân dynasty (from B.C. 200 to A.D. 226), this religion entered China. In A.D. 1164, a synagogue was built at Pien. In A.D. 1296, the old temple was rebuilt, as a place in which the sacred writings might be deposited with veneration.

"Those who practise this religion are to be found in other places besides Pien; but wherever they are met with, throughout the whole world, they all, without exception, honour the sacred writings, and venerate Eternal Reason. The characters in which the sacred writings are penned, differ, indeed, from those employed in the books of the learned in China; but if we trace their principles up to their origin, we shall find that they are originally none other than the Eternal Reason, which is commonly followed by mankind. Hence it is that, when Eternal Reason is followed by rulers and subjects, rulers will be respectful, and subjects faithful; when Eternal Reason is followed by parents and children, parents will be kind, and children filial; when Eternal Reason is followed by elder and younger brothers, the former will be friendly, and the latter reverential; when Eternal Reason is followed by husbands and wives, husbands will be harmonious, and wives obedient; when Eternal Reason is followed by friends and companions, then they will severally become faithful and sincere. In Eternal Reason, there is nothing greater than benevolence and rectitude, and, in following it out, men naturally display the feeling of compassion and a sense of shame; in Eternal Reason there is nothing greater than propriety and wisdom, and, in following it out, men naturally exhibit the feeling of respect and a sense of rectitude. When Eternal Reason is followed in fasting and abstinence, men necessarily feel reverential and awe-struck; when Eternal Reason is followed out in sacrificing to ancestors, men necessarily feel filial and sincere; when Eternal Reason is followed in Divine worship, men bless and praise high Heaven, the Producer and Nourisher of the myriad of things, while in their demeanour and carriage they consider sincerity and respect as the one thing needful. With respect to widows and orphans, the poor and the destitute, together with the sick and maimed, the deaf and the dumb, these must all be relieved and assisted, that they may not utterly fail. When poor men wish to marry and have not the means, or when such wish to inter a relative and are not able to accomplish it, the necessary expenses for such must be duly provided. Only let those who are mourning for their friends carefully avoid rich viands and intoxicating liquors, and those who are conducting funeral ceremonies not be emulous of external pomp. Let them, in the first place, avoid complying with superstitious customs; and in the second place, not make molten or graven images, but in everything follow the ceremonies that have been introduced from India. Let there be no false weights and measures employed in trade, with the view of defrauding others.

"Looking around us on the professors of this religion, we find that there are some who strive for literary honours, aiming to exalt their parents and distinguish themselves; there are some who engage in government employ, both at court and in the provinces, seeking to serve their prince and benefit the people; while some defend the country and resist the enemy, thus displaying their patriotism by their faithful conduct; there are others, again, who in private stations cultivate personal virtue, and diffuse their influence over a whole region; others there are who plough the waste lands, sustaining their share of the public burdens; and others who attend to mechanical arts, doing their part towards supporting the state; or who follow mercantile pursuits, and thus gather in profit from every quarter: but all of them should venerate the command of Heaven, obey the royal laws, attend to the five constant virtues, observe the duties of the human relations, reverently follow the customs of their ancestors, be filial towards their parents, respectful to their superiors, harmonious among their neighbours, and friendly with their associates, teaching their children and descendants; thus laying up a store of good works, while they repress trifling animosities, in order to complete great affairs; the main idea of all the prohibitions and commands consists in attending to those things. This, in fact, is the great object set forth in the sacred writings, and the daily and constant duties inculcated by Eternal Reason. Thus the command of Heaven, influencing virtuous nature, is by this means carried out to perfection; the religion which inculcates obedience to Eternal Reason is by this means entered upon; and the virtues of benevolence, rectitude, propriety, and wisdom, are by this means maintained. Those, however, who attempt to represent Him by images, or to depict him in pictures, do but vainly occupy themselves with empty ceremonies, alarming and stupefying men's eyes and ears, indulging in the speculations of false religionists, and showing themselves unworthy of imitation. But those who honour and obey the sacred writings know the origin of all things; and that Eternal Reason and the sacred writings mutually sustain each other in stating from whence men sprang. From the beginning of the world our first father Adam handed the doctrine down to Abraham, Abraham handed it down to Isaac, Isaac handed it down to Jacob, Jacob handed it down to the twelve patriarchs, and the twelve patriarchs handed it down to Moses; Moses handed it down to Aaron, Aaron handed it down to Joshua, and Joshua handed it down to Ezra, by whom the doctrines of the holy religion were first sent abroad, and the letters of the Jewish nation first made plain. All those who profess this religion aim at the practice of goodness, and avoid the commission of vice, morning and evening performing their devotions, and with a sincere mind cultivating personal virtues. They practise fasting and abstinence on the prescribed days, and bring eating and drinking under proper regulations. They make the sacred writings their study and their rule, obeying and believing them in every particular; then may they expect that the blessing of Heaven will abundantly, and the favour of Providence be unfailingly conferred; every individual obtaining the credit of virtuous conduct, and every family experiencing the happiness of Divine protection. In this way, perhaps, our professors will not fail of carrying out the religion handed down by their ancestors, nor will they neglect the ceremonies which they are bound to observe.

"We have engraved this on a tablet, placed in the synagogue, to be handed down to distant ages, that future generations may carefully consider it.

"This tablet was erected by the families Yen, Li, Káu, Cháu, Kin, I', and Cháng, at the rebuilding of the synagogue, in the first month of autumn, in the 7th year of Ching-t'ih of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1511)."

The Chinese word, here translated "Eternal Reason," is taou, a term peculiar to the doctrines of the philosopher Laotse.

The other inscription is entitled, "Record of the rebuilding of the Temple of Truth and Purity." It sets forth the history of Abraham, the founder of the Israelitish religion, the nineteenth in descent from Pwan-ku, or Adam; it touches upon some points of the Hebrew history, and gives a vague summary of the Jewish doctrines. It contains the following historical notices:—

"Thus our religious system has been handed down, and communicated from one to another. It came originally from India. Those who introduced it, in obedience to the Divine commands, were seventy clans, viz. those of Yen, Li, Ngái, Káu, Muh, Cháu, Kin, Chau, Chang, Shih, Hwáng, Nieh, Tso, Pih, &c. These brought as tribute some western cloth. The emperor of the Sung dynasty (probably the Northern Sung, which flourished A.D. 519) said, 'Since they have come to our Central Land, and reverently observe the customs of their ancestors, let them hand down their doctrines at Pien-liáng.' In the year A.D. 1166, Lieh Ching and Wú Sz'-ta superintended this religion, and Yen Tú-lah built the synagogue. In the year A.D. 1280, Wú Sz'-ta rebuilt the ancient temple of Truth and Purity, which was situated in the Tú-shí-ts' Street, on the south-east side; on each side the area of the temple extended 350 feet.

"When the first emperor of the Ming dynasty (A.D. 1390) established his throne, and pacified the people of the empire, all those who came under the civilizing influence of our country were presented with ground, on which they might dwell quietly, and profess their religion without molestation, in order to manifest a feeling of sympathizing benevolence, which views all alike. But as this temple required some one to look after its concerns, there were appointed for that purpose Li Ching, Li Shih, Yen Ping-tó, Ngái King, Chau, Ngán, Li Káng, &c., who were themselves upright and intelligent men, and able to admonish others, having attained the title of mullah. So that, up to this time, the sacred vestments, ceremonies and music, are all maintained according to the prescribed pattern, and every word and action is conformed to the ancient rule; every man, therefore, keeps the laws, and knows how to reverence Heaven and respect the patriarchs, being faithful to the prince and filial to parents, all in consequence of the efforts of these teachers.

"Yen Ching, who was skilled in medicine, in the year A.D. 1417 received the imperial commands, communicated through Chau-fú Ting-wáng, to present incense in the temple of Truth and Purity, which was then repaired; about the same time, also, there was received the imperial tablet of the Ming dynasty, to be erected in the temple. In the year A.D. 1422, the above-named officer reported that he had executed some trust reposed in him; whereupon the emperor changed his surname to Chau, and conferred upon him an embroidered garment, and a title of dignity, elevating him to be a magistrate in Cheh-kiáng province. In the year A.D. 1446, Li Yung and some others rebuilt the three rooms in front of the synagogue. It appears that, in the year A.D. 1452, the Yellow River had inundated the synagogue, but the foundations were still preserved; whereupon Ngái King and others petitioned to be allowed to restore it to its original form, and, through the chief magistrate of the prefecture, received an order from the treasurer of Honán province, granting that it might be done in conformity with the old form of the temple of Truth and Purity, that had existed in the time of Chí-yuen (A.D. 1290); whereupon Li Yung provided the funds, and the whole was made quite new.

"During the reign of Ching-hwa (A.D. 1470), Káu Kien provided the funds for repairing the three rooms at the back of the synagogue. He also deposited therein three volumes of the sacred writings. Such is the history of the front and back rooms of the synagogue. During the reign of T'ien-shun (A.D. 1450), Shih Pin, Káu Kien, and Chang Hiuen, had brought from the professors of this religion at Ningpo one volume of the sacred writings; while Cháu Ying-ching, of Ningpo, sent another volume of the Divine word, which was presented to the synagogue at Pien-liáng. His younger brother, Ying, also provided funds, and in the second year of Hung-chí (A.D. 1489) strengthened the foundations of the synagogue. Ying, with myself, Chung, intrusted to Cháu Tsun the setting up of the present tablet; Yen Tú-láh had already fixed the foundation of the building, and commenced the work, towards the completion of which all the families contributed; and thus provided the sacred implements and furniture connected with the cells for depositing the sacred writings, causing the whole synagogue to be painted and ornamented, and put in a state of complete repair."

The messengers brought back to Shang-hae eight MSS., apparently of considerable antiquity, containing portions of the Old Testament, and parts of an ancient Hebrew Liturgy. They are written on thin paper, bound in silk, and bear internal marks of foreign origin. The Hebrew writing, which is in an antique character, with points, appears to have been executed by means of a style.

Measures were immediately taken for despatching them again to Kai-fung-foo, in order to procure some of the rolls of the Law, and for bringing to Shang-hae two or three of the Israelites. In a second visit, it appears, they succeeded in both objects. Some difficulty was at first experienced when they proposed to the assembled Jews to take away their sacred books, some assenting and others opposing. After a fortnight spent in discussions and deliberations,—the two messengers urging that, as the Jews did not understand Hebrew, and consequently could not read their own laws, it would be better to have them expounded by those who could,—it was agreed at a full meeting (attended by several hundreds) that six rolls, one of which, the oldest, was in a decayed condition, should be delivered up at a certain price, and two of the Jews consented to accompany the messengers to Shang-hae, where they now are.

Each of the rolls contains a complete copy of the Pentateuch, some more ancient than the others. They are written, without points or marks for division, upon white sheep-skins, cut and sewed together, from 20 to 30 yards in length, and rolled on sticks.

The two Jews who came to Shang-hae are named Chau Wan-kwei and Chau Kin-ching; one about 45, the other 30. The elder has a rather Jewish cast of countenance. Both dress like Chinese. They have engaged eagerly in the study of Hebrew.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

SATURDAY, October 16, 1852.

As the period approaches when the Parliamentary inquiry, commenced last session, into the operation of what is popularly called the East-India Charter Act, must be resumed, it is natural to ask what information has been obtained. The Lords' Committee divided the subject into eight heads, and they have partially investigated only one of them,—the largest and most important; namely, "The Authorities and Agencies for administering the Government of India at Home and in India respectively." The general tendency of the evidence taken upon this head, the Report says, "is favourable to the present system of administering the affairs of India." It is true, that the witnesses examined by their lordships are (with the single exception of Mr. Cameron, if he be really an exception) servants of the East-India Company; but they are men of intelligence and eminent ability, and their opinions are given, not in the dry form of an examination at Nisi Prius, but accompanied by copious reasons and arguments, which appear to have been sifted by the astuteness of some shrewd cross-examiner. We will cursorily notice, in this and future articles, some of the points to which the inquiry into this branch of the subject was directed, with reference to improvements of the existing system.

One of the most material of these points related to the constitution of the governments of Madras and Bombay,—whether it was desirable to continue their existing form, or to give them that of the government of Agra,—that is, to place each under a lieutenant-governor, without a council, subject to the control of the Governor-General of India in Council.

Mr. Melvill, the Company's secretary, urges that at Madras and Bombay the civil and military elements of government are combined, and it is, therefore, important that the head of the army should be associated with the civil authorities, and that its chief should have a seat in the government. There are separate services and separate courts at these presidencies, which is not the case at Agra; and this would be an objection to assimilating the governments, even if the armies were united under one administration. Financially, he is of opinion that there would be no great advantage in the change.

Sir Herbert Maddock, who has been deputy governor of Bengal, and president of the Council of India, considers that the advantages attending the retention of councils at Madras and Bombay are, that the civil members, who are the most experienced and most efficient officers in the presidency, are able to bring the result of their knowledge and experience to the aid of the governor, most commonly a gentleman from England, whose studies and pursuits had not afforded him those advantages. The lieutenant-governors of Agra have not been appointed from England, but have been selected to fill the situation by the Governor-General in Council from members of the civil service of long experience. If councils were dispensed with at Madras and Bombay, Sir Herbert thinks it would be expedient, as well as just and proper, that members of the civil services of those presidencies should be selected (as well as those of Bengal and Agra) to fill situations in the Council of the Government of India; and this would doubtless tend to increase the efficiency of that Council, especially in its legislative and administrative capacities.

Mr. W. W. Bird, who has been several times deputy governor of Bengal, and was once temporarily governor-general of India, thinks it would be difficult now to discontinue the two separate governments and staffs of Madras and Bombay. The question, he admits, depends upon a variety of considerations; but, upon the whole, in his opinion, the continuance of the present system is necessary.

Mr. F. Millett, an eminent member of the Bengal civil service, can see no difficulty in dispensing with councils at Madras and Bombay but in the army: "If the governor were a military officer, versed in civil affairs," he says, "I should see no difficulty; but where there is a military department, with only a civil governor, I see a difficulty." But he does not perceive any difficulty, supposing there were no councils at the minor presidencies, in the commanders-in-chief there conducting the military establishments. With the exception of this difficulty,—with regard to the administration of the army,—he thinks that to assimilate the governments of Madras and Bombay to the government of Agra "would be perfectly feasible and might be advantageous."

Sir George R. Clerk, who has been lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces and governor of Bombay,—and is therefore well able to speak from experience upon this point,—thinks that Agra should remain as it is, a lieutenant-governorship, without a council, and that the councils at Madras and Bombay should be maintained. The reasons assigned by Sir George for the latter opinion require and deserve to be stated somewhat fully.

He does not know any other means by which, "without a council, subjects could be so amply discussed and made known to the proper quarters. The government of the North-West Provinces is under the immediate control of the Governor-General, who is a good deal in the upper country, and can exert over it as much control as he pleases; whereas, on account of their distance from the seat of the Supreme Government, and other causes, he could not exercise the same superintendence over the governments of Bombay and Madras. Moreover, these governments dispense the patronage of the whole civil administration (except appointments to council), which is not the case in the Agra government, and which could not be withdrawn without rendering them inefficient. The territories under the presidencies of Madras and Bombay are so unlike Bengal, or the Upper Provinces, as to make it very desirable, on that account, to have a council at each of the former. When governor of Bombay, Sir George admits that he might, on some occasions, have felt a council rather a personal impediment, and obstruction to what he considered the due despatch of public business; still, on reflection, he has often thought it advisable that important questions should in such governments be subject to full discussion, in the presence of two or three persons, as a check to sudden impulses operating injuriously on ill-matured measures. Supposing, however, Bombay and Madras were made lieutenant-governorships, he does not conceive it to be necessary that the armies should be more combined than they now are.

The next witness who is examined upon this point is Mr. T. C. Robertson, of the Bengal civil service, and lieutenant-governor at Agra from January, 1840, until March, 1843. He is opposed to the abolition of councils at the two minor presidencies which have separate armies, upon that ground. He does not think an army could be well controlled without a council, in which the commander-in-chief should have a seat; and in such a case it is desirable that the government should not have the appearance of being that of a single individual. Upon the whole, he thinks it would be preferable to continue the governments at the minor presidencies with councils and separate armies, rather than to abolish the councils and amalgamate the armies; the last, he thinks, could not very well be done, especially in the case of Madras and Bengal.

Mr. Lestock Reid, of the Bombay civil service, temporarily governor of that presidency in 1846-7, although he thinks great advantage would be derived to Bombay if one civil officer from its service had a seat in the Supreme Council, would still continue the council at the presidency, which he holds to be quite essential, whether the governor have Indian experience, or be a nobleman or gentleman from England, unconnected with India. In the former case, he would often require to be checked. He does not think the cases of Bombay and Madras are at all analogous to those of Agra and Bengal: "At Agra, the governor is merely a commissioner, though dignified with the name of lieutenant-governor; he has no army or navy to control, and no distinct civil service; he has no political duties, and has, moreover, no Queen's Supreme Court, and no large commercial public, European as well as native, at the seat of his government."

Mr. John M. McLeod, a member of the Madras civil service, and a secretary to the government at that presidency for several years, in pointing out the defects of the existing system of legislation in India, mentions, as one mode of improving it, the addition to the Council of India, as at present constituted, of a civil servant from Madras and another from Bombay. But "I shrink," he says, "from suggesting it, because I think it might lead to another change,"—meaning, the abolition of the councils at the minor presidencies,—“which would produce evils infinitely greater than those which are at present experienced from the defectiveness of the existing legislation in India.” Incidentally,—for he was not examined directly upon this point,—he states that such a measure would be objectionable, because it would lead to a lowering of the authority of the presidency governments, which he thinks it is of the utmost importance to maintain.

Mr. R. K. Pringle, a late secretary to the council at Bombay, thinks that, with an able and active governor, his powers of government would be exercised more efficiently without a council; but as this cannot be always depended upon, the aid of a council is salutary, and the record of opinions, in cases of difference, affords the controlling authorities better means of judging of the merits of questions.

The last witness examined upon this question is Mr. James Stuart Mill, assistant to the Examiner of Indian Correspondence; and he appears to be very much of Mr. Pringle's opinion, that the necessity of councils depends upon the men selected for governors. The Agra system, he says, has worked extremely well; but the expediency of continuing the system depends upon the possibility of providing a succession of such men as Mr. Thomason, the present lieutenant-governor of the North-West Provinces. "Unless this can be provided," he thinks, "it would be desirable that all the subordinate governments should have councils."

The result of this evidence appears clearly to favour the continuance of the existing plan of councils at the minor presidencies. If we exclude from the objections to a change the element of the army,—which appears to present no insuperable difficulty,—enough remains in the reasons assigned by Sir George Clerk alone to overturn the solitary qualified opinion of Mr. Millett, who thinks that, if the difficulty respecting the army were got rid of, the assimilation of the governments of Madras and Bombay to the Agra model "might be advantageous."

Where the risks are so many, and the ultimate good so uncertain, prudence should forbid a change, especially if, as Mr. Melvill tells us, it will yield little or no pecuniary profit.

SINCE the attempt made, in the year 1792, to burn down the House of Commons by the instrumentality of an old pair of corduroy breeches, there has been no project, within our recollection, in which the means and the end were apparently so incongruous as that just announced by Capt. Warner, to put an end to the Caffre War, and "obtain a firm and lasting peace," by employing his "long range." In the former case, as we are assured by contemporary authority,* the material was actually in a state of dangerous heat, so that the first stage in the process had been nearly perfected; but in Capt. Warner's, the breeches have not yet been even warmed. However, his proposition seems undoubtedly to be a fair one, namely, that of "no cure, no pay,"—terms which impostors instinctively abhor.

Capt. Warner states that, in March, 1851, he offered to go out to Caffraria, with his inventions, quell the war, and place the colony in a state of perfect security, and all this without fee or reward, which he left to the liberality of the Government after he had effected the object. This offer, fair, plausible, and disinterested, was, he says, declined by Earl Grey, who, it must be admitted, had some excuse for so doing, inasmuch as he was at that very time assured by Sir Harry Smith that he was about "to exterminate those most barbarous and treacherous savages," and "finish the war in such a way as to render it unlikely that the Caffres will ever again repeat the attempt." Somehow or other, it has happened that the war has lasted nearly two years, and the savages, so far from being exterminated, seem to be more numerous and active than ever; as, therefore, the range of Sir Harry Smith was not long enough, we do not see why the longer range of Capt. Warner should not be tried (especially as we have a new Colonial Secretary, not bound by the views of his predecessor), if his conditions are reasonable. Let us see what they are.

He offers to meet Mr. Adderley (the agent for the colony), Lord Combermere, and Sir Harry Smith himself, and "so explain his mode of operations, and the means by which he should have effected his object, that he stakes his reputation and character if he did not convince all three that, within two months after his arrival at the seat of war, the enemy would have been so subdued that we should never again have heard of any attacks either from Sandilli or any other chief."

This offer sounds to us as rather unsatisfactory and equivocal. In terms, it amounts to no more than an undertaking to demonstrate what might have been done a year and a half ago, at the time his offer was made to Lord Grey. It promises nothing in presenti or in futuro. For anything that appears to the contrary, circumstances may have since occurred to render Capt. Warner's inventions unavailable, and all the satisfaction we could have is that of knowing the great advantages we have lost through the eupineness of our late Colonial Secretary. In the case of the corduroy small-clothes, had they not been discovered, in a state of incipient ignition, in the ceiling of the cabinet, any person,—even the Speaker of the House of Commons himself,—might have "staked his reputation and character" that it would have set St. Stephen's Chapel in a blaze.

What Capt. Warner should do is, to repeat in distinct terms now the offer he made in 1851, namely, that he will go to the scene of war on the frontier of the Cape colony, and by his inventions subdue the Caffres, disable them from ever attacking the colony again, and obtain a firm and lasting peace, without asking fee or reward unless and until the object should have been accomplished. We are quite sure that, in such an event, the public would rejoice to pay, and would greatly gain by paying, whatever should be the sum asked by Capt. Warner,—even though it amounted to three months' cost of the war; and we can see no valid reason why such an offer should not be accepted.

THE death of the Duke of Wellington has stimulated researches into his early history, and the present generation will probably be surprised to find how much of the civil as well as military renown of that illustrious personage was acquired in India when he was from thirty to thirty-four years of age, and only a lieutenant-colonel of a regiment of foot. A little work, entitled The Military History of the Duke of Wellington in India, has brought his services in that country into prominent relief, and we defy any one to read this record of his actions, words, and even thoughts,—for his private letters there quoted reveal the sentiments that were passing through his mind,—without admiration. It discovers, too, how soon the character of the Duke was formed. His correspondence and official papers of that date breathe the same tone of dignity, firmness, and decision, and display the same breadth of views combined with minute attention to details, as his later compositions, which are not more lucid in their style.

The military actions of the Duke in India, great as they were,—for the destruction of the freebooter Dhoondiah Waugh, and the splendid victories of Assaye and Argaum, have not been outshone, but maintain a high place in the annals of Indian warfare,—are, perhaps, the least of his glories there. His civil services,—his administration of Mysore, his judicious plans in Wynaad and Malabar, his pacification of the Deccan, and the diplomatic skill he displayed in the difficult negotiations with the Mahratta chieftains,—entitle him to be held in grateful recollection by the rulers of British India. The work we have referred to gives the following brief summary of the most striking parts of the Duke's Indian career:—

"His administration of the Mysore country, after its conquest, secured the peaceable possession of a vast territory, which his sword had contributed to win; the suppression of the freebooters protected the new acquisitions from an evil of which he was the first to perceive the mischievous consequences; his rapid movement upon Poonah removed to a distance one of the most powerful of the Mahratta chieftains; his name as well as his talents exercised a salutary control over the base and treacherous Peishwa; whilst his exploits in the Deccan war, his two great victories over a numerous and well-disciplined enemy,—one of these triumphs being due to his own personal valour and conduct,—and the diplomatic skill which foiled Mahratta artifice, and perfected in the cabinet the work he had so successfully commenced in the field, laid a foundation for the British rule in India which was the surer from its being rooted rather in the hearts and affections than in the fears of the people."

It is to be hoped, and may, we think, be expected, that the hint thrown out at the last meeting of the Proprietors of East-India Stock, by Capt. McGregor, will not be lost sight of, and that we shall soon see the statue of the hero of Assaye filling its appropriate niche in the hall of that Court.

THE BURMESE WAR.

The following extract from a minute of the Governor-General of India, concurred in by the other members of the Board, dated 23rd March, 1852, specifies the conditions which were to be tendered to the Burmese Government:—

"It is necessary to furnish Lieutenant-General Godwin with general instructions for his guidance.

"Having regard to the advantage of uniting all authority upon such occasions in one person, and having confidence in the ability, judgment, and experience which General Godwin will bring to the duties with which he is to be intrusted, I would propose that the whole political authority connected with the expedition should be vested in him, as the officer commanding the troops in the field.

"The instructions of the Governor-General in Council, while they leave General Godwin unfettered in all details of military operations, should clearly indicate the general objects of the Government, and should, as far as possible, provide for every contingency which may arise in connection with the present expedition.

"The Government has declared that it directed the assembling of this force, in the hope that a powerful blow, struck promptly now, might reduce the Burmese to reason, obtain compliance with our demands, and avert war upon a more extended scale at the end of the coming monsoon. To this end, the speedy termination of hostilities, all the efforts of the force should now be directed; while, in any negotiations that may be opened, no demands of unnecessary severity or extent should be advanced by us, which would tend to avert a settlement, and thus to defeat the object of our present movement.

"General Godwin, having been put in possession of this leading principle in the views of the Government of India, should be informed that the ultimatum of the Government, some time since transmitted to the king of Ava, was to the following effect:—

"1st. Your Majesty, disavowing the acts of the present governor of Rangoon, shall, by the hands of your ministers, express regret that Captain Fishbourne and the British officers who accompanied him, were exposed to insult at the hand of your servant at Rangoon, on the 6th of January last.

"2nd. In satisfaction of the claims of the two captains who suffered exactions from the late governor of Rangoon, in compensation for the loss of property which British merchants may have suffered in the burning of that city by the acts of the present governor, and in consideration of the expenses of preparation for war, your Majesty will agree to pay, and will pay at once, ten lacs of rupees to the Government of India.

"3rd. Your Majesty will direct that an accredited agent, to be appointed in conformity with the 7th Article of Yandaboo, and to reside at Rangoon, shall be received by your Majesty's servants there, and shall at all times be treated with the respect due to the representative of the British Government.

"4th. Your Majesty will direct the removal of the present governor of Rangoon, whose conduct renders it impossible that the Government of India should consent to any official intercourse with him."

"Upon arriving at the rendezvous, and before moving to Rangoon, General Godwin should ascertain, by an ordinary flag of truce, whether any letter from the court of Ava to the Government of India is forthcoming. If there should be such a letter, Gen. Godwin should be authorized to examine its contents. If the letter should accede to the demands of the British Government, and if effect should at once be given to it by the king's officers, hostilities will be stayed. In that case, General Godwin will intimate to the Burmese officers, that it is his intention to proceed to Rangoon for the purpose of receiving the fulfilment of the terms. If this shall be duly accomplished, General Godwin will finally arrange a meeting with the chief officer of the king of Ava at Rangoon, for the purpose of formally placing in charge of his functions, the officer who shall be appointed to act at Rangoon as the agent of this government. The forms of such meetings should be arranged previously, and a record made of them; it being understood that they are to be the recognised forms of reception of the British agent for the future.

"When all this has been done, and not before, the king's ship should be restored to its place, and former friendly relations will be renewed.

"If the letter from the court of Ava should not, distinctly and at once, concede all the demands, but should express an intention of doing so, General Godwin should construe it in a fair and liberal spirit. If he shall consider that it is the real intention of the court of Ava to meet our demands as soon as it is practicable for them to do so, he is authorized to suspend hostilities. But if General Godwin should see good cause to believe that the court of Ava is attempting to practise the same evasive policy of which General Godwin has himself had experience, and is seeking merely to gain time against us, General Godwin should proceed to act in concert with the officer commanding the naval forces. If, again, there should be no letter from the court of Ava, or if it should directly refuse, or manifestly evade our demands, General Godwin in like manner will proceed to act.

"It has been the earnest desire of the Government of India, from the commencement of these differences with the court of Ava, to avert, if possible, another war. I have already said that the object of despatching promptly the present force is to seize the last chance of preventing the necessity for sending a large army hereafter. It is, in my judgment, equally the policy and the duty of the Government of India to adhere to that principle, in every one of its acts, in this untoward affair.

"Our demands have been based on a resolution to obtain full compensation for the injuries inflicted on British subjects, and reimbursement of the expenses to which the state has been put by the proceedings of the Burmese Government. The sum of ten lacs was not set down arbitrarily, but was the result of calculation, so far as it could be made.

"More time will have elapsed before a reconciliation can be effected, and the heavy current expenses must be provided for. Moreover, if hostilities be commenced, if actions be fought, the charges of the Government will be greatly increased. I therefore beg leave to suggest, that as the conditions of peace offered immediately after the capture of these places, we should demand:—

"1st. The payment of 15 lacs of rupees. Such a payment would not be beyond the means of the Burmese Government, and it will most certainly not to do more than afford the compensation and reimbursement to which we are entitled.

"2nd. To obviate any attempt at evasion, by delay, and to meet the strict justice of the case, an additional payment should be demanded of 3 lacs for every month which may elapse after the 1st of May, until satisfaction of our demands is afforded.

"3rd. Until these payments are made, the British troops shall remain in undisturbed possession of such captured places as they may choose to retain.

"4th. If these conditions are not complied with, the Government of India will take such measures as it may think necessary and right.

"I conceive that these conditions afford the best and safest solution of the difficulties of our present position.

"With regard to the 1st and 2nd, I have already said that the demand is just, and within the means of the Burmese Government. The 3rd condition enables us either to retain possession of the whole we may have captured, or, without disadvantage or discredit, to retire from Rangoon, if it should appear desirable to do so. The general terms of the 4th condition leave it open to the Government to adopt whatever course it may prefer, after the monsoon shall have passed, or the season for operations shall again approach."

THE CHARTERED BANK OF INDIA.—A new joint stock company, to be called the Chartered Bank of India, Australia, and China, has issued its prospectus. The proposed capital is 1,000,000*l.*, of which 500,000*l.* is to be paid up. The board consists entirely of persons of respectability and experience, and the main object of the undertaking is to provide facilities for the trade between India and Australia, which have long been needed, and the demand for which will be rapidly increased by the gold discoveries. In the first instance, branches are to be formed in Australia, India, Singapore, and China; and in addition to the opening for a new institution of this kind, caused by the prospects of Australia, it is pointed out that there has been no adequate increase of banking capital since the failure of the India firms in 1847, while the discontinuance by the East-India Company of the practice of making advances on produce likewise throws additional business on the existing establishments. Under these circumstances the enterprise may be regarded favourably; but inasmuch as it seems impossible for one concern to be founded for the purpose of supplying an admitted want without numerous imitators forthwith starting up, it is necessary to repeat the warning lately suggested, regarding the readiness for creating new banks, and to express a hope that the public will not allow any success that may attend the present one to lead them into the belief that they may with safety be indefinitely multiplied.—Times, Oct. 9.

COTTON FROM THE EAST.—We cannot see any chance of a sufficiency of cotton from the United States, should the increased consumption continue to advance at anything like the pace it has in 1852. Whence, then, are we to get our supply, without we find some other source than this? We shall be told to look to India. But neither under the present system, nor by the proposition afloat of preparing cotton in small quantities by cottage gins, nor by Government interference, can we succeed. It is solely by individual enterprise that it can be eventually accomplished. Let the capitalist open an establishment in the cotton districts of India, introduce Whitney's saw-gin, which has stood the test up to the present time in the States; purchase his cotton from the natives and clean it, pack it, &c., upon the wholesale American principle; then should it be overtaken on its transit to the ports by monsoons or other causes, its being buried in the sand would be attended with far less damage than on the present system; and until this is accomplished, we need not look for either quality or quantity from India. Will Australia supply us with cotton? We think not; nor would it be policy for us to encourage it. She is now becoming one of our strongholds for wool, and with her slender population it would be very unwise for her to attempt the cultivation of two articles of such extensive consumption as cotton and wool. Better progress with the one advantageously than fail in an attempt to produce both at present. In future years, when she is strengthened both as regards population and intelligence, she may then, and doubtless will, become a most extensive producing country, both as regards the raw manufacturing materials and food; but until then, we need not look here for cotton.—Manchester Courier.

WEST AFRICAN COTTON.—Mr. Thomas Clegg, of Manchester, has received advices of the arrival of five more bales of cotton from the western coast of Africa, weighing rather more than 1,000lbs., and making Mr. Clegg's total receipts of this cotton during the present season amount to upwards of 10,000lbs. Some three or four years ago, learning that there was plenty of cotton growing wild near the colony of Sierra Leone and the Church Missionary station of Abeokuta, and that as it bloomed and ripened it dropped to the ground and rotted, he communicated with the officials of the Church Missionary Society in London, and through them sent 100k to the place named, with instructions that it was to be expended by the missionaries in setting the natives to gather and clean the indigenous produce, and to forward it as quickly as possible to England. At the same time they were directed to lay before the chiefs the advantageous opening which presented itself for the employment of their people, and how much better it would be to do that than to pursue their horrid traffic in slaves. The inducements held out proved sufficient to attract attention, and in the year before last a few hundred pounds were collected. Since then Mr. Clegg has received above 10,000lbs., and at present everything points to great results at no distant period. Mr. Clegg has spun a quantity of the cotton himself, and has given some to four firms, with the request that they will experiment upon it and favour him with a report. In staple it is equal to Egyptian or good New Orleans, used in spinning fine yarns for the Nottingham and Leicester trade. The price of cotton suited for such fine numbers has more than doubled within a comparatively brief period, and what was selling at 9½d. a pound is now fetching 20d., and has been for some time, so that this supply will come in most seasonably to meet the scarcity of suitable sorts which the price indicates.—Manchester Examiner.

One of the last acts of the Duke of Wellington (then Sir Arthur Wellesley) before he quitted India, was to provide for Salabut Khan (the son of Dhoondiah Waugh, the freebooter), whom he had taken under his protection, and maintained out of his own funds, since the death of the youth's father. He now left him a sum of money, placed him under the guardianship of the court at Seringapatam, and recommended Purneah, the excellent dewan (or minister) of the Rajah of Mysore, to take him, should he prove worthy, into the rajah's service.—Military History of the Duke of Wellington in India.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 15th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8

* * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

"No emigrant should venture to sea without

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE for SEA-SICKNESS.
Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The brushes being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2s. EACH.

Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back?
Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium," or Handleless Hair-Brush.

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches.

Almost despairing that he should ever be cured, he determined on giving Holloway's Ointment and Pills a trial, and by a little perseverance with them, he is now completely restored to health, and strongly recommends these medicines to others so afflicted. SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE latest accounts from Rangoon, which reach to the 12th of September, announce that active operations were about to recommence, Major-General Godwin having, on the 6th, issued an order for the embarkation for Prome of the first column of the army, under Brigadier Reignolds, consisting of H. M.'s 18th Royal Irish; H. M.'s 80th regiment; 35th regiment Madras N. I.; a company 4th batt. Madras Artillery, completed to 100 gunners, with a bullock battery, and 2 8-inch iron howitzers, and a detail of sappers and miners. This column was to have embarked on board the steamers on the 18th or 20th. The General was to accompany this force, and on its arrival at Prome, if all remained quiet for a few days, he intended to bring down all the steamers and take up H. M.'s 51st foot; 40th regiment Bengal N. I.; 9th regiment Madras N. I.; 2nd company 5th batt. Bengal Artillery, with No. 3 light field (horse) battery, and a detachment of sappers and miners, under Brigadier Elliott. This second column would probably leave Rangoon about the 11th October.

The troops are said to be in the highest health and spirits; not a single officer was on the sick list. The enemy, reported to be strongly stationed, out of reach of the steamers, eight or ten miles from Prome, would be attacked by the united force, while the troops on board the flotilla would push on and take the city. It was supposed that about a fortnight would be occupied in the move from Rangoon to Prome. The fighting was not thought likely to detain them long on the way, and steam would remove the difficulties and dangers of advance. The Burmese commander, who had burnt down Prome, it is said, could only muster about 7,000 of all arms, and was almost destitute of artillery.

A large quantity (1,000 boats) of rice, on its way to the upper country, had been intercepted, and sent down the Irrawaddy to Rangoon and Moulmein, by our steam flotilla, which completely commanded the river to some distance above Prome. The total interruption of all intercourse between the Upper Provinces and those of the Delta which supply them with food, is said to have inflicted the greatest distress on the inhabitants. Rice in the capital is at famine price, and it is to be feared that great numbers must perish from starvation. The state of the Upper Provinces is represented as lamentable, the country being overrun by robbers. Some of these had been captured, and were sent on board a King's ship, to be worked hard, as a punishment. Their acts of cruelty are reported to have been almost incredible.

A report was prevalent at Rangoon that it was the intention of the military authorities to despatch a portion of the army from Martaban upon Beling, Shwey-gyne, and Toung-oo, through the Sitang valley, there being a general belief that a considerable Burmese force was collected at Shwey-gyne, and another at Toung-oo. The Friend of India questions the policy of this measure. "Independently of the certainty of disease," it observes—

"If a land expedition be sent to Shwey-gyne and Toung-oo from the side of Martaban, the progress of the campaign is likely to be indefinitely retarded by any such movement, as the General would scarcely think of advancing from Prome to Ava, before this detachment had reached Toung-oo, and whatever would tend to retard for a day the march of the army to Ava, is to be deprecated in the highest degree. We must take the capital in order to paralyze the Burmese cabinet, and to satisfy the people that there is nothing capable of resisting our arms. In all barbarous countries, the death of the General is the defeat of the army, and the fall of the capital is the conquest of the country. We cannot therefore advance too rapidly on Ava, because we cannot too soon bring the war to a close. The capture of Shwey-gyne and the dispersion of the troops assembled there, however, present no object of sufficient military importance to justify the risk of life which such an expedition would entail. All that we can desire is, to prevent the Burmese army coming down to molest our position at Rangoon, when a considerable portion of our force has been pushed on to Prome and the upper Irrawaddy. But if only one-half the number of troops of whom any exhibition from Martaban must necessarily consist, were stationed at Pegu,—which may be easily and safely reached,—the whole Burmese army at Shwey-gyne would be kept in complete check, and our position at Rangoon effectually protected."

A letter from Sandoway, published in the Englishman, communicates overland information regarding the Burmese and their movements, which the Rangoon correspondents are probably ignorant of. The writer says the enemy were awaiting with anxiety the next move of the British. Boondela, the Dalla Woon, and the Rangoon Woon, had established themselves in force in the neighbourhood of Prome; a party had encamped on the heights above the city, or rather its site, which entirely command it. Meay-day was to be defended by thirty guns, brought from Ava by the king's father-in-law, accompanied by a considerable force; but it is doubtful whether the Burmese will make a respectable stand anywhere, unless they are allowed time. He adds, that a letter was received from the Dalla Woon, proposing peace. Captain Tarleton offered him a passage to Rangoon, if fully authorized to treat; but the Woon wanted to ascertain, in the first place, whether the General was inclined to treat, and said he would prefer waiting where he was until he gained this information.

"Should the advance of the troops be long delayed, they will find every village in ashes, and experience considerable difficulty in the matter of supplies, as the Burmese will grow bolder, and imagine they can rob and pillage with impunity. Already they take advantage of the occasional absence of our steamers, to burn down the villages, and appropriate all the cattle and rice they contain. We hold the Irrawaddy against all comers with the greatest ease. The Dalla Woon and Boondela's son are not on terms with the Rangoon Woon, occupying, with their followers, separate camps, in the vicinity of each other. The latter is blamed by all as the cause of the war. They are evidently in a bad way, and anxious for peace; and, by all accounts, the Government at Ava would seek peace on any terms if it dared."

If it be true that the Governor-General has given the King of Ava a locus penitentiae, an opportunity to accept terms of peace, the offer will test the real feelings of the Burmese Court. It is said that the Marquess has offered to forbear further hostilities on the immediate payment of 330,000*l.* as indemnification to British subjects, and for the expenses of the war up to 30th September.

A prompt termination of this contest is of great importance to the finances of India. A despatch of the Court of Directors to the Governor-General of India in Council, dated the 3rd June last, states that the Burmese war of 1824-26 cost fifteen millions sterling, and augmented the debt of India thirteen millions and a half!

The Trans-Indus districts appeared to be tolerably quiet. A correspondent of the Delhi Advertiser, writing from Peshawur, September 10, states that the peace, which Colonel Mackeson patched up with the Hill tribes, is not likely to be of long continuance: and the Delhi Gazette, September 25, says, "We believe it is pretty certain now that there will be a hill campaign during the ensuing cold season, both the Governor-General and the Board of Administration having become fully aware of the absolute necessity of effectually rooting out the wild hordes that keep our north-west frontier in such a disturbed state."

The precarious health of the King of Delhi has long excited apprehension respecting the succession. The Delhi paper, however, states that the long-pending dispute regarding the succession had been finally put at rest, the Governor-General having formally recognised Mirza Futteh-ool-Moolk Bahadoor, the king's eldest surviving son, as the heir apparent to the pageant throne, though his present Majesty is averse to the selection, his predilections being in favour of a younger son. Accordingly, the day before the festival of the Eed (when the King of Delhi proceeds in state to the Eedgah, and goes through the ceremony of slaughtering a camel with his own hand), Prince Mirza Mahomed Futteh-ool-Moolk Shah Bahadoor was presented with a khilut, as acknowledged heir-apparent. His Highness will receive back-pay from 1849, in all amounting to about a lac and a half of rupees.

The Scinde News furnishes the following news from Afghanistan:—

"Our Afghanistan news down to the 15th July is to the effect that Golam Hyder Khan, governor of Ghuznie, is at the head of the troops of Dost Mahomed, numbering 15,000 men, and has reached the neighbourhood of Kelat-i-Ghilzie. On his approach, the whole of the tribes of that vast tract of territory hastened to pay their respects to him. The Candahar sirdars, who had taken that place, were in the greatest consternation, and had commenced to repair the fort and citadel of Candahar, on which they were expected shortly to fall back. It is also stated as a positive fact, that one of Kohundil Khan's sons, Meer Dil Khan, had separated from his father's interest, and gone over to the Dost's. It was a current rumour in the city of Cabul, that letters had reached Dost Mahomed from Mahomed Syed Khan, the son of Yar Mahomed, the late Wuzer of Herat, inviting him to send directions to his son Golam Hyder Khan, who is now in Ghilzie, to proceed to Herat, and he would make it over to him at once, as he was apprehensive that the king of Persia would most probably send an army against him and wrest the place from him. It was a current report also at Candahar, that there are two Europeans with Golam Hyder Khan now; they are not publicly known, but are said to be Englishmen for certain."

The Hyderabad correspondent of the Englishman, in a long letter, filled with the usual narratives of faction fights, plunder, and bloodshed, intimates that it is probable the minister Suraj-ool-Moolk will resign his post, on pretence that the Nizam has obstructed his efforts to dismiss his mercenaries. According to the writer, this complaint is totally unfounded, as Suraj-ool-Moolk has himself added 2,000 Arabs to the strength of the establishment, and recommenced the system of engaging Rohilla, though the men of that race have so frequently been proscribed. The Nizam, it is evident, either will not or cannot pay the contingent regularly, and some arrangement must shortly be made for its necessities. There is reason to believe, however, that this arrangement will not consist in a sequestration of territory.

The Commander-in-Chief left Simla for the interior and China on the 18th of September. His Excellency, who would not stay longer than for about six weeks, was accompanied in his trip by Lieut.-colonel Lugard, Captain Yates, Becher, and Douglas, and Doctor Peskett. Lady Gomm and Mrs. Septimus Becher are the only ladies of the party. Sir William Gomm had announced his intention to establish head-quarters at Umballa during the approaching cold season.

BENGAL. BURMAH.

The following is from Rangoon, dated 11th September:—

"4th Sept.—The troops will now be soon beginning to gather. The commodore continues to be very energetic in providing as many boats of all sizes and builds for the conveyance of troops and stores as he can.

"The Enterprise, which returned yesterday, found the passage up to Bassein anything but the easy affair it has been described. The chart of the river furnished to the commander was found to be very incorrect, as concerned the state of the soundings. The lead had to be kept going unremittingly, and with the greatest precautions the steamer bumped two or three times, and once got aground, but with no damage. The navigation is difficult, and the channel very uncertain for forty-five miles up the river—beyond that it is easy; the river getting deeper, but the bends in some places are so sudden as to require the very best steering to clear the bank in coming round. At Bassein itself the river is not more than 250 yards broad, and so deep that a vessel might easily come alongside. The bottom was found by the soundings to be gravelly and rocky chiefly. Captain Campbell took the Sesostris forty miles above Bassein, to a place where the former chief, with 3,000 men, was reported to be located. The latter gentleman, however, received timely warning by the smoke of the steamer, and at once withdrew his force inland out of the reach of guns. A Burmese officer of rank, under the said chief of Bassein, has held communication with our authorities there, and has intimated his friendly inclinations towards the British, in favour of whom, in the present doubtful state of affairs, he dares not declare his allegiance. He hesitates not, however, to collect supplies for our troops there, which latter are particular healthy—those only getting ill who expose themselves too much in exploring the numerous pagodas for gold and silver images, of which there has been found an immense number, so many that the finders melt them down for the sake of their weight of gold or silver. Some of the artillerymen here made a decent haul in that way,—one gunner having some time ago sent 400 rupees to be lodged in the Agra Bank, the result of his industry and good fortune in the 'digging.' Many of the poor pagodas find that the place that knew them once, knows them no more,—the Burmese could not have adopted a better method of stacking their bricks than in the erection of those pagodas. The number of bricks in a solid conical mass, with circumference of fifty feet, and altitude of forty, which is the average size, is immense. It is a comfort to think that no offence is given to the religious prejudices of the Burmese, in the demolition of these unsightly masses of masonry, as they never take any further trouble about a pagoda when once erected. Rather than spend money in keeping one in repair, they build a new one, which accounts for the multitude of them all over the country. Higher up the country the pagodas are hollow.

"The Sesostris comes shortly to Rangoon to tow the Pegue transport, laden with stores for the troops to that place. It is not very apparent what the object of holding Bassein as a garrison is. The presence of the Sesostris there is indispensable, to close that outlet of the Irrawaddy to all grain going up the country. The country in that vicinity is said to be peculiarly fertile.

"Another message, it is believed, has been forwarded by order of the Governor-General to Ava, giving the haughty monarch to the 30th of this month to deliberate, whether he will pay fifteen lakhs for the expenses of the war to the 1st of April, and indemnification of British subjects, and three lakhs per mensem up to the 1st October, altogether thirty-three lakhs. This very reasonable demand the court of Ava could with little difficulty comply with, and, were they not arrant fools, would jump at the last chance of rescuing their empire, which they had to save on a former occasion on much higher terms. It is a matter of great doubt, whether any of the Governor-General's letters or messages have ever reached the court, or at any rate the king. The Burmese have such an ugly custom of taking off the heads of individuals who bring unwelcome tidings, that it is very possible, nay highly probable, from what we know of the underhand work in suppressing letters, &c. in the last war, that no one has been bold enough to present the Governor-General's bill of demand to the 'lord of the white elephant' for payment.

"The Governorment has ordered the issuing of a pair of shoes to every non-commissioned officer and soldier, European and native. This is really a kind present, than which none could be more acceptable to the soldier. The constant tramping about in the muddy roads very soon rots the sewing of the best made English shoes, the leather of which remains unimpaired, though from the thread having become rotten that connects the upper and lower leathers, they are rendered useless for further wear. The few workers in leather are Chinese, and they prefer making new shoes to the job of re-sewing old ones; the number of Chinese shoemakers too, though fast increasing, is still limited.

"The general presented to the Governor-General while here, in the name of the troops, one of the handsomest of the bells found in the pagoda; this has reached Calcutta, and in acknowledgment thereof, Lord Dalhousie has written one of his peculiarly well-worded letters to General Godwin, in which he gracefully returns thanks for the compliment paid him by the army, for whose welfare he evinces so kindly an interest. Lord Ellenborough, in the zenith of his popularity with the army, could not have been more respected and admired than is our present Governor-General by the troops in Burmah.

"It may be, perhaps, true that at present the steamers are doing little good in hovering about Prome. But it must be borne in mind, that had steamers not gone up to Prome, the feasibility of our troops proceeding thither by water would have to this moment been problematical—whereas now the question has been solved. It would have been better perhaps if we could have come suddenly upon the Burmese of Prome, where we should have doubtless found strong defences on the river side out of which our gun-ships would have easily shelled them, and we should thus have given them a complete route, which now can only be given by an attack on their stockade in the jungle where they are fortifying themselves, some seven or eight miles from Prome; and this involves the exposure of our troops, and the difficulties of moving artillery over swampy ground, and where roads are not known. It would almost seem better that no steamers should have gone up at all to Prome than that they should have gone unprovided with the means of garrisoning the place. Had the first steamers that visited Prome under Captain Tarlton taken up 1,000 men, that place would have been from that time to this occupied by us, and in the interval supplies of all kinds, commissariat and ordnance stores, might have been carried thither, and the place thus have become a depôt—a kind of half-way house or resting-place on the road to Ava; and thus the carrying on of the war in the cold weather and advance to the capital would have been greatly facilitated and hastened.

"7th Sept.—The day before yesterday the Hastings, in tow of the Rattler, reached the shoal, bearing the name of the former, and there she is to remain till a full tide enables her with safety to go over it. Yesterday afternoon there was more artillery practice—the first experiment was the effect of bags of gunpowder placed at the foot of a part of the stockade, with sand bags on the top. Two hundred pounds of powder in bags were so placed from the outside. The match was lighted by an officer, who as soon as he had done so, went to the right-about, and ran as hard as he could, but fell flat on his face before he had gone many yards, so excited was he. He got up again, and ran as hard as he could, but again fell; he was, however, well out of the way when the explosion took place, which was seventy-five seconds after the lighting the match. The effect was most satisfactory, a complete breach being produced in the stockade, of which a part was selected where the timbers were particularly large. The practice then commenced with the 8-inch howitzers at 600 yards, loaded with shell, in which was left just enough exploding powder to blow out the fuse, and thus show the time of bursting. The practice was very good; the stockade, out of about twelve shots, being missed only three or perhaps four times. Not only was the elevation of the guns correct, but the fuses of the shells were blown out at the right moment exactly, in almost every instance. The battery on this occasion was under the superintendence of the Bengal Artillery, who however had an advantage not enjoyed by the Madras Artillery on the former occasion, of wooden platforms on which the gun-carriages were mounted; that, however, cannot altogether account for the very superior practice yesterday.

"The orders of yesterday settled all speculations as to the movements of the force. The general, in a curtly-worded order, expresses his intention to commence active operations on or about the 18th inst. The order runs thus:—'The major-general commanding proposes to resume active operations about the 18th inst. The following regiments will be held in readiness for embarkation on service on that date:—

"H.M.'s 18th R.I., H.M.'s 80th regt., 35th regt. Madras N.I., under Brig. Reynolds, C.B.

"These corps with a detachment of Madras artillery, and a field battery and two 8-inch howitzers, and a detail of engineers and sappers, will form the first division.' Then follow instructions as to baggage, doolies, &c., and directing weak and sickly men to be left here under the charge of an officer, who is also to look after the surplus baggage. 'In about three weeks after the departure of the first division, the major-general hopes to embark a second one, consisting of—

"H.M.'s 51st L.I., 40th regt. N.I., 9th M.N.I., under Brig. Elliott, K.H.; with a detachment of Bengal artillery, and a light field battery.

"It will be seen from the above, that the general has done his best to please all parties. As a Bengal N.I. corps (the 40th) was the only native regiment in the 'advance' in the taking of this place, it is but fair that a Madras corps should have its turn this time. The 35th, not yet having had the opportunity of distinguishing itself furnished to the other native corps employed in the capture of Rangoon and Bassein, is very properly selected. The three corps forming the second division are the other three corps employed in the capture of this place. Those that have been left out naturally grumble very much; but it is but just that the first come should be first served. It certainly seems strange breaking up the brigades.

"Yesterday the C. troop of Madras horse artillery, and headquarters of the 19th M.N.I. arrived in the transport Royal Stewart, towed by the Feroze. The horses have been landed, and look in very fair condition.

"8th Sept.—The Hastings got safely over her namesake to-day, and rides majestically at anchor a little below the Fox, who looks very small beside her. The Sesostris has just come from Bassein. She got on a rock in the Bassein river, when there were seven fathoms of waters on one side of her; she remained in this predicament for two days, but luckily, by taking every single thing out of her, she was lightened enough to be able to get her off. The wing of the 9th at Bassein is to be relieved by the 19th N.I.

"10th Sept.—More artillery practice again yesterday afternoon. The Bengal artillery again, with live shells this time, tried to do their worst to the stockade, with the same two 8-inch howitzers; the practice on this occasion was not so good as last. After about twenty rounds, the whole stockade was found to be very little injured. The question has now been solved, that it is useless to attempt to breach a stockade with howitzers at any rate, and it is to be hoped that the attempt to do so, under fire of the enemy, will never be made. The experiment was then tried of 100 lbs. of powder on the stockade. The powder, in two bags of 50 lbs. each, was placed, as before, on the outside at the foot of the stockade, with sand-bags on the top. A great displacement of the heavy timbers was produced by the explosion, and a very fair breach made; but still not quite large enough to admit many men at once. It has been accordingly determined that 150 lbs. is the proper quantity. It would not be a very difficult matter, under cover of night, to deposit three bags of powder, each being easily carried by one man, at the foot of a stockade. The effect produced by the bags of powder in a few seconds is greater than a week's blazing away of the guns could manage.

"A company of the 35th M.N.I., under the command of a captain, with two subalterns, and made up to 100 privates, was directed yesterday to proceed early this morning on board one of the steamers. They are to go up to an island below Prome, to protect those friendly to us there from the attacks of the dacoits and others who molest them. The Sesostris has had her masts taken out of her, and a good deal of ballast also; she can now float in ten feet water; she starts very soon for the Irrawaddy. More artillery horses were landed to-day, another ship having arrived from Madras.

"11th Sept.—A melancholy accident the night before last. Some young naval officers in a canoe, at about 8 o'clock in the evening, were attempting to go on board some ship, when the canoe either suddenly filled or was upset; however, all inside were precipitated somehow into the water, and all, with one exception, managed to get to land, after being carried some way down by the tide. The only one missing is Mr. McMurdo, mate of the Fox; and he, strange to say, seemed to be the one best prepared for a swim, as he alone had taken his pea-jacket off,—his body has not yet been found.

"The Sphinx and Mozuffer are hourly expected from Madras. This day week the 1st division starts for Prome. The steamers up the river are all coming down as fast as they can, to be in readiness to take the troops on board."—Englishman, Sept. 18.

Rangoon, Sept. 6.—A court of inquiry assembled this day in the Great Pagoda to investigate the affair of which Mr. McCalder is the hero, Major Cotton acting as president. According to subsequent accounts, the story of McCalder's exploits would seem to be somewhat different from what originally reached me. It appears that he had taken with him boots, fire-arms, ammunition, and men, under pretence of apprehending a robber chief, but in reality he harassed, ill-used, and plundered the villagers, till, exasperated with his proceedings, they attacked him in retaliation and self-defence. Some six or eight of McCalder's men were killed, a boat containing some thirty men was swamped, and he lost besides a musket belonging to Captain Burnet, of the Aga Bakhur, and two swivel guns, which he had taken the loan of for his expedition from one of the transports. McCalder endeavours to shift the blame somewhere between the shoulders of Commodore Lambert and Captain Latter, saying that the one had suggested the expedition, and the other had desired him to undertake it. Captain Latter has been before the committee, and it is said was very eloquent in making a speech in self-exoneration.

Talking of Captain Latter, I may state, that Lord Dalhousie is said to have put a check upon his rigorous proceedings in his capacity of magistrate, especially in regard to corporal punishment, in which he so much delighted. Of course, the natives, Bengalees, Burmese, &c., are rejoiced at it.

Macmurdo was a good swimmer, and kept ahead of his comrades, but suddenly they heard him call out, and heard him no more, nor could any trace be found of him. It is supposed he was drawn down by a shark. His body even has not been found, notwithstanding every search made for it.—Hurkaru, Sept. 18.

THE HEUMA OR SHENDOOS.

The immense tract of forest and mountains, intervening between the valley of the Irrawaddy in Burmah and the alluvion of Arracan, is inhabited by wild and partly independent hill tribes, whose intercourse is confined almost solely to themselves; the communications of each class being limited to the neighbouring one. Some of the more remote and wild sub-divisions of these people have not yet come within observation, and amongst these the Shendoos, though well known by name and repute in Arracan, have never yet been visited by the people of the plains, nor has a single specimen of this race been seen, I believe, either by Mugh or European in Arracan, until 1850, when two emissaries or spies from them met me at a hill village some distance up the Kolady river; and again this year, when two more, a chief and his follower, ventured as far as Akyab itself, and from these I collected the few details here given.

The Shendoos, or, as they style themselves, the "Heumá," are subdivided into several classes: my informant Lebbey, was the chief or "Abeu" of the one nearest to the Koons, by name "Bookee," consisting of 350 houses, all in one village. The others of his people or nation, he gave me a list of, describing each class as lying further and further to the N. E., but of the distances between each, I could gather no information—beyond that the last one on his list was as far from his village on the one side as Akyab on the other, and the last he stated himself to have been thirteen days in reaching.

The houses of the Heumá, he tells me, are made of timbers by the more opulent, and of bamboos by the poorer classes; thatched with grass, and all on raised platforms, a peculiarity common to the Mongolian races from eastward of the Hindu Koosh down to Borneo. They are rich in poultry and pigs, and cultivate the grains usually raised in jungly hills, such as maize, bajra, and hill rice (of this but little), also plantains, yams, kudooos, ginger, cotton, til, linseed, and sugar-cane (of which they make no use beyond eating it in its natural state). They prize dogs as food, and also all sorts of game (deer, wild pigs, &c.) and elephants, the flesh of which they are very fond of. With fish they are almost unacquainted, having indeed no other name for it than the Burmese one of Ngá. The elephants are generally shot with large heavy arrows, set in trap bows of immense size, the plan of which, by description, must be very similar to that of the bows set by our Bughmarrs in India. The Shendooos however set two, pointing inwards, both connected by the same line that pulls the trigger, so that the animal passing through or touching the line with his foot, receives an arrow into each side. This double dose is the more necessary, as the Shendooos appear quite unacquainted with the use of any venomous poison. Elephants' teeth form one of their principal articles of barter.

Commerce with this wild people is of course extremely limited; their imports are passed from village to village, few of the more civilized people of neighbouring countries caring to pass far into the interior of a race which they look on with such dread. Lebbey informed me, the people of his class took annually to the Koon frontier, elephants' tusks, gongs (which they get from the province of Yeo, in Burmah), bees'-wax, homespun plaids, and cotton turban cloths, which they exchange for salt, muskets, cloth, coral and bead necklaces, lead, powder, brass kutoras and thaleses, and brass rings. I was curious to know where they got the brass from which adorns their shields, but could get no information more lucid than that it came from a country one moon's journey to the N. or N.N.W., which was governed by a woman.

Their weapons are bows and arrows (small, and becoming fast superseded by muskets), short spears, and shields made of buffalo hide ornamented with brass plates and tufts of goats' hair dyed scarlet.

These people are polygamous, having from two to four wives each; the number being solely limited by the length of the purse. They purchase them from their parents with gongs, cloth, &c., the largest price being paid for the first wife, and less for those subsequently added to the household. They may marry two sisters at once, but not more, and unlike their southern neighbours, the Koomwees, are prohibited from taking to wife their step-mothers. Daughters are entirely excluded from succession to property; everything goes to the eldest son. If he be a minor, the uncle, or if there be none, some one next of kin, takes charge of the property, which, however, he is not called on to account for afterwards unless he choose! If the eldest son have married and settled in life at his father's death, he gets no property, and the whole of it is divided amongst his younger brethren. Should there be none, however, he succeeds to it. In no case is anything left to the widows; they are turned adrift, or left to the charity of the eldest son. They bury their dead, digging a hole in the ground to the depth of a man's height, which is paved with flag-stones and lined with boards; into this the corpse is placed, in a supine posture, head to the east, together with the deceased's weapons, gong, &c. The hole is then covered with strong sticks, plants, earth, and over all, a large stone. The body is kept two or three days in the house after death, but without any embalming or other preparation, so as to become often quite putrid before interment.

The Abcu, or head of the clan, dispenses justice. Theft is punished by the restoration of the property stolen and fine equal to its value. For murder, the punishment is, making over to the relatives of the slain a number of slaves, from two to seven, according to the wealth or importance of the deceased, and pigs in the same proportion. Should the offender not have slaves, he must give up property equivalent to them, or, in default, his own children. If he have neither slaves, other property, nor children, he is slain by the nearest of kin to the deceased with the weapon by which the murder was committed. But this is an event of such rare occurrence as to be, so to say, matter of legend. Drunken quarrels, attended with affray and wounding, are of frequent occurrence; but no murder had been committed within my informant's recollection.

Of the theological notions of the Shendooos I could gather but very meagre information. They regard the sun (Nye) and the moon (Khipá) as deities, and sacrifice pigs and cattle to them at the commencement of the rains. They have no divisions of time, except by seasons, distinguishing these by the different stages of agriculture proper to them, ploughing, sowing, reaping, clearing jungle, &c.

Labbey is a short, rather muscular man, with the well-developed thighs and calves of hill-people in general, and a pleasing expression of face, not so markedly Mongolian as the countenances of many of the Aracanese; but his follower had the broad flattened features to a much greater degree.—Paper by Capt. Tickell, in Journ. As. Soc. Bengal.

ANNEXATION.

Should the public authorities at home, which is scarcely credible, refuse to sanction the annexation of Burmah, they will exhibit the most contemptible truckling to popular prejudices and morbid sensibilities, of which the history of British India affords any example. This war was not of our seeking; on the contrary, on no occasion has a war been so distinctly and unequivocally forced on us by a barbarian government as the present Burmese war. On occupying the port of Rangoon, we found it a desert, and 80,000 men, women, and children flocked to it for our protection in a few months, and a city has grown up with a rapidity unheard of even in America. We found the whole population groaning under the tyranny which the Burmese had exercised for a century, and hailing us as their deliverers. If we abandon the country a second time, we incur the odium, if not the guilt, of delivering over three or four millions of people, who have placed implicit confidence in us, to the most ruthless oppression, and the most infamous cruelties which the mind can conceive, and we leave the coast open for the entrance of any other European power, which may be disposed to take advantage of our folly. That America will soon occupy the field we relinquish, we believe no one entertains any doubt. Our brethren across the Atlantic are anxious to establish their influence in the East; and we shall have been instrumental in showing them the most favourable opening for the insertion of the republican wedge. By this expedition we shall have drawn their attention to a country, governed by a worn-out oriental despotism, which would crumble to dust by the first vigorous shock of a European power, rich in every natural advantage, capable of indefinite improvement, and presenting the most ample field for the extension of the system of steamers, and railways, and telegraphs;—a country, moreover, of which the inhabitants are ready to welcome any power which will deliver them from the insupportable oppression under which they groan, but which our own squeamishness and the morbid dread of being thought ambitious, has prevented our occupying. Brother Jonathan will not boggle for a moment at the conquest and annexation of the whole territory, and he will be rather pleased than the reverse, to find his own Eastern territories abutting for many hundred miles upon the domains of England, in Assam, in Bengal, in Arracan, and the Tenneserim provinces. Burmah will afford him a fulcrum for acquiring the sovereignty of Siam, Cochin-China, Cambodia, and Laos, and possibly China, and in less than a century from this time, the two branches of the Anglo-Saxon family will be dividing Asia between them from the Khyber pass to the Sea of Ochotsk. And, dearly as we love our own country, we could scarcely regret the transfer of some one eastern country to the younger section of our race, that it might possess a field for trying its own experiments of improvement and civilization. Would the valley of the Irrawaddy in their hands be as backward as the valley of the Ganges, at the end of ninety-five years?—Friend of India, Sept. 16.

The question of annexation has again been discussed by the public journals, and there seems to be but one opinion in India; namely, that Pegu ought at all events to be retained. The inhabitants are a conquered people, always tyrannized over by their masters the Burmese, and certain, on their regaining possession, to be cruelly punished for the assistance they are rendering to our troops. They are anxious to be relieved from their oppressors, and are a people who would rapidly improve under the liberal and kind treatment which they would be sure to receive at our hands. The fear of being charged with inordinate ambition may induce the home authorities to object to this, the only rational course; but as it seems very unlikely that the court of Ava can be induced to treat, except by the presence of our forces in the capital, it is difficult to understand how the annexation of Pegu can be avoided, unless we are to give up all the fruits of victory, and pay the charges of war ourselves. The Burmese have deliberately told our government, that the solemn treaties formerly entered into are not binding on any but those who signed them, and that the heirs and successors of the monarch then reigning are at liberty to disregard them at their pleasure. With such people, the only valid argument is force, and as we cannot afford to be constantly at war, or preparing for war, that argument should be effectively used now.—Englishman, Sept. 20.

With the whole seaboard, seaports, and river mouths, in our possession, from Calcutta to Penang, our destiny is manifest—the rest of the peninsula will be ours in spite of ourselves before the century is out. As to the unproductiveness of the country, it may be stated that the Delta of the Irrawaddy seems about as little barren as that of the Ganges, and that from the mineral wells (petroleum) alone, near Rangoon, the Burmese Government draws some £100,000 a year—a small fraction certainly of the charges of a country, but not quite a trifle from the item of wells alone.—Bombay Times, Sept. 14.

CULTIVATION OF THE POPPY.—The Hurkaru, says:—"The cultivation of the poppy seems to be considerably increasing, for we have been informed that the quantities of opium expected from the several agencies are so great that Government is obliged to provide additional godowns for the drug in the export warehouse." Our contemporary perhaps has forgotten, that, two years ago, the Government, at the earnest request of the cultivators, took off the last restriction upon the quantity cultivated, and allowed them to devote any extent of land they pleased to the growth of the poppy. The effect of the measure will not be felt in the market immediately, but it must ultimately produce a very great increase in the number of chests at the monthly sales. This is an admirable exemplification of the accuracy of that statement of the British Indian Association, "that the cultivation of opium is a source of vexation to the cultivators, who are compelled to cultivate the poppy, and who are necessarily at a disadvantage and liable to oppression."—Friend of India.

CAPT. PHAYRE.—The Citizen notices that Captain A. Phayre, Commissioner of Arracan, has arrived in Calcutta, under express instructions from the Governor-General. There is scarcely an officer in the service of Government, who is so thoroughly and minutely familiar with the Burmese character as Captain Phayre, and should the Governor-General find himself able to annex Pegu before marching on Ava, it is not improbable that he may be selected to administer the country until the termination of the war enables the Government to introduce a more regular system.—Ibid.

FIRE PRODUCED BY AIR.—At the monthly meeting of the Asiatic Society on the 1st September, the following extract of a letter from Dr. Fayer, now at Rangoon, was read. It contains a singular exemplification of the manner in which the most curious scientific processes may be accidentally discovered:—"The instrument sent down to you as for containing poison is a very different thing. It is for making fire by compressing the air suddenly. A piece of cotton being stuck on the end of the piston, it is suddenly forced down and withdrawn at the same instant. The cotton comes out ignited. I have lit dozens of cheroots with that very one. It is wonderfully ingenious for a savage to have found out. I have seen a complicated brass instrument in lecture-rooms at home that did not do it a bit better."

THE 4TH SIKH REGIMENT.—The Englishman confirms a report that the Governor-General has determined that the 4th Sikh regiment, when proceeding on service, shall be fully officered. Twenty officers will therefore be drawn from the line, and the order limiting the number of absentees from each regiment will be suspended for a time.

THE LATE MR. G. H. JENKINS.—We announce, with sincere and unaffected regret—far apart from the usual form of newspaper announcement in these melancholy affairs—the demise of Mr. George Henry Jenkins, secretary of the Bengal Military Fund, who was followed to the grave yesterday evening by a large and highly respectable train of relatives and friends. Having, during his lifetime, consistently and invariably written of him in public character in the highest terms, which we could conscientiously and from experience do, we cannot be accused of inconsistency in now paying a last tribute to his memory, both as a public functionary, and as a private individual. He was an efficient, honourable, and most obliging secretary to the fund, which was soon to lose his services by his resignation, and has now prematurely been deprived of them by his death. In private life he was beloved and respected. As a fund secretary, we hope that the institution which he so faithfully and energetically served, and to whose incumbents and members he gave so much satisfaction, may be able soon to find "his like." As a private individual, he will not soon be forgotten in the society in which he moved, and where he was so generally respected and beloved. We are persuaded that in paying this tribute to Mr. Jenkins's memory, we only echo the sentiments of all those to whom he was either officially or privately known.—Morning Chronicle, Sept. 7.

THE INDIA GENERAL STEAM COMPANY.—The half yearly meeting of this company came off on the 13th of September, when the report, including the payment of a 6 per cent. dividend, was approved, and the meeting passed a vote of confidence in the present directors.

OPIMUM SALE.—The following is the result of the last opium sale:—

	Chests.	Average.	Proceeds.
Benares.....	1,920 ...	1,198 ...	23,01,175
Behar	880 ...	1,210 ...	10,65,500

The price of the Benares drug is still running up, the advance on the last sale being six rupees, but there is a decline on Patna of ten rupees a chest. Why, at this rate, and with the increased supply of the drug which is expected, the augmented profits from opium will go far to pay all the expenses of the Burmese war.—Friend of India.

NATIVE PROCESSIONS.—The natives of Calcutta feel very severely the police prohibition against processions, and it is really a rather delicate question to settle. There is no question that they are a serious public nuisance to the Europeans; but the comfort of Europeans only is not to be exclusively considered in legislating for the town. The Europeans are comparatively but a small part of the inhabitants of this city. And yet it is not in the nature of John Bull in the nineteenth century to encourage and perpetuate the barbarisms of ancient days, and an unenlightened people. It is, indeed, a strange thing in a British city in these times to hear the barbaric din of the tom-tom and behold the raggedness, and filth, and finery, and ostentatious wealth, and servile poverty which make up the savage compound of a native procession, and to observe the carriages of busy passengers stopped for hours, and the horses of others frightened with the flare of light in talc lanterns, or the monstrous images of gods elevated on platforms on the shoulders of their worshippers, and the hideous noise of musicians, who think all musical skill is dependent on strength of lungs or muscles. These things we, say, it seemeth not fit should be met with under a system of police regulated by civilized magistrates; and yet it is so great a hardship to the natives to be prevented from following customs that have been dear to them as a people from all antiquity, that we hardly know how they can fairly be compelled to suppress them in a city where they claim equal rights with all their fellow subjects of all religions.—Hurkaru, Sept. 20.

A RIGID HINDOO.—Among the cases tried on the 6th September, in the small cause court, was an action brought by Messrs. Wilson and Co. against Baboo Taraballub Chatterjee. The latter, it appears, had run up an account with the confectioners for beefsteaks, mutton-chops, beer and brandy, to the amount of Rs. 23. The Judge decreed for the plaintiff; and we have thus a rigid Hindoo ordering a lax Hindoo to pay his bills for food, the mere smell of which is enough to break the caste of both of them.

BRIDGE ACROSS THE JUMNA.—The Delhi Gazette mentions that Major Laughton and Captain Harris, of the Engineers, have been directed to send in estimates for a permanent bridge across the Jumna at Delhi. Foundations of solid rock are said to exist at Selimgurh, and on the other side of the river, while a bed of "kunkur" exists in the middle of the stream at a depth of 25 feet. The length of the bridge, however, between the abutments will be 2,500 feet. The Gazette calculates upon the bridge sufficing for the railway of the North West provinces; but it is impossible that this fact should be ascertained until the surrounding country has been surveyed for the purpose.

THE COMMISSARIAT DEPARTMENT.—The report of a commission appointed some time ago to inquire into the Commissariat Department, has, notwithstanding the wish of the Government to make a secret of it, found its way to the newspapers, which have largely extracted from and commented upon it. The commissioners, Mr. Charles Allen, C.S., and Major W. Anderson, Artillery, point out several defects, but describe them as being faults of the system rather than of the officers employed in carrying it out. They propose a number of reforms, the principal of which are, the separation of the Commissariat Department from the Military Board, making the Commissary-General accountable to Government direct, and the appointment of a well-qualified auditor.—Hurkaru.

MR. SUTHERLAND.—The Court of Directors have sanctioned the payment of a gratuity of Rs. 7,200 to Mr. Sutherland, late secretary to the marine department.

THE WEAVER CASTE.—The Hurkaru publishes a communicated article, curiously illustrative of the present condition of native society. The caste of the Bysacks, or weavers, as they are generally called, are said to have been divided for nearly thirty years into two great sections, who quarrelled on every possible occasion. The origin of the disagreement consisted in the fact, that one party had received a convict back into caste, in spite of the remonstrances of the other, but like most other theological disputes, the quarrel grew wider with time. At length some of the most influential members of the caste determined upon a reconciliation, and the reunion was finally consolidated at a great meeting of the heads of families. The excommunicated parties stood before the punchayat with their "chudders"—cloths—bound like halters about their necks, and their hands joined together, and fell at the feet of the leaders of the caste, when the removal of the ban was announced to them. It may perhaps not be generally known that the wealth, and therefore the importance, of the Weaver caste, dates only from the establishment of our own factories in the country; before that time they were as little distinguished as the blacksmith or the carpenter. Our trade consisted chiefly in piece goods, and the weavers therefore grew rich in our service. Many of those who began life at the loom, became large cloth merchants, and amassed large fortunes, and the Bysacks thus took their station among the mercantile aristocracy of Calcutta.—Friend of India.

MAHOMEDAN CONSERVATISM.—The Delhi Gazette publishes a translation of an article on the Mahomedan conspiracy, said to have been recently discovered at Meerut, from the Oordeo Ukhbar. The following sentence, coming as it does from the pen of the Mahomedan editor of a Mahomedan journal, is curious:—"We are astonished at the wisacres who have harboured even a thought of opposing such wise and powerful rulers, rulers to whom the Almighty has given the art of government and wisdom and power. In truth, to oppose such rulers is to oppose God. It is to invite death. Now, if Mahomedans complain that there are a great many infidels on the earth, let them remember that our rulers are of the number of those who believe in the Book. Let our Mahomedan brethren join them and fight with the Burmese and Chinese, if they want to have a religious war, for are not these people infidels? But the fact is, that it is no religious war. The thing is got up by interested and artful persons, fools whose destruction is inevitable."

THE STEAM-TUG "LION."—When the last mail left, fears were entertained for the safety of the steam-tug Lion, which had proceeded to the Sandheads with a ship in tow, and had not been heard of after a gale which occurred on the night of the 4th inst. These apprehensions have proved but too well-founded. Five native seamen were cast on shore at the mouth of the river near Balasore, and they are apparently the only survivors of the crew. The ill-fated vessel seems to have been overwhelmed by the sea, which she was ill adapted to encounter. Fragments of the wreck, and the remains of a body, supposed to be that of the unfortunate commander, Captain George Smith, have since been washed ashore about fifteen miles north-east of Balasore. The only Europeans on board were the captain and engineer, the mate having been left in town. The steam tug Rattler, which was also at the Sandheads during the storm, had a narrow escape from destruction, and was saved, it is believed, only by the exertions of six or eight young men of the civil service, passengers on board, who stuck to the pumps right gallantly when the native crew gave up in despair.—Hurkaru, Sept. 20.

CAPTAIN JAMES, of the Kotah contingency (husband of the celebrated Lola Montes, from whom he has never been divorced), is said to be dangerously ill.

THE RAILWAY.—The French authorities of Chandernagore have overreached themselves not a little in the negotiation respecting the sale of ground to the Railway Company. By asking too much, they have caused the rail to deviate a little from the direct line, avoiding Chandernagore altogether. The great advantages to the town of Chandernagore that would have resulted from the line being carried through it are now all lost, by a foolish zeal for a very temporary profit, utterly insignificant in the eyes of men who look beyond their nose. The rail would have increased the population and raised the price of land and houses to an extent that would have quite changed the character of the place and have very soon quadrupled the public revenue. But everything at the little French settlement is little. The authorities have not merely little salaries, but little notions.—Hurkaru, Sept. 7.

FLOODS AT UMBALLA.—A correspondent of the Lahore Chronicle sends a second account of the inundation at Umballa, from which it appears that about 1,500 houses have fallen in the city, and 2,000 more in the great Bazar, and it is feared that many lives have been lost, in the fall of the walls and buildings. Twenty-one inches of rain are said to have fallen in four days, and so completely has the ground been flooded, that the unfortunate natives who had buried their valuables in their gardens have lost all trace of the places of concealment. The 4th Sikhs, on their way hitherward, appear to have been in the midst of it, and to have behaved as if they were in their proper element. These truly gallant fellows carried the ladies in palkees on their heads through the torrents, and yoked themselves to the hackeries, plunging and shouting through a tide which no European would have liked to brave. "For five days," says the writer, "they have been drenched to the skin, and almost without food, there being none to be bought anywhere, and no place to cook, as the whole country was under water, and when after one awful day's march they arrived at their destination, a perfect Slough of Despond, though there was nothing to eat, they immediately stripped to their usual sports and wrestled with each other with as much buoyancy and spirit as if they had been on a dry parade ground." Wah! Khalsajee ka Futteh! This is the sort of stuff of which soldiers should be made.—Hurkaru, Sept. 9.

MR. DUNBAR has been elected Secretary to the Military Fund, in the room of the late Mr. Jenkins.

THE SUTTEE AT PACHETE.—The Englishman states that the affair of the Sutte at Pachete has not yet terminated, as the Governor-General has returned the proceedings to the superintendent of police, with a recommendation to institute a further inquiry.

THE 3RD SIKH REGIMENT.—Capt. Repton, the commanding officer of the 3rd Sikh local infantry, has denied the truth of the reports spread that 150 of his men had deserted since the date on which the regiment was reported to army head-quarters as having volunteered for service in Burmah: not a single desertion had taken place, and it is, therefore, evident that the 3rd Sikh locals were wilfully slandered.

NEW POWDER-WORKS are about to be constructed in the upper provinces of Bengal, under the superintendence of, and at such place as may be selected by, Major W. Anderson, c.b., gunpowder agent at Ishapore. The Englishman thinks Kurnaul will be the station chosen.

THE ADMINISTRATOR-GENERAL.—The Citizen informs us that the accusations of fraud made by the official assignee against the administrator-general have been pronounced groundless by the Governor-General in Council. Mr. Sandes, it is expected, will proceed with his action of libel in the Supreme Court against Mr. Cochrane.

SICKNESS is reported to be very prevalent in the 60th royal rifles at Jullundhur, they having, on the 11th Sept., had no fewer than 166 men in hospital. The health of the troops at Lahore had materially improved, but the 76th foot at Meer Meer had upwards of 140 men on the sick list.

CHOLERA AT UMBALLA.—We are sorry to learn from Umballa letters that cholera has been committing sad ravages in H.M.'s 75th regiment. The disease has not yet attacked any of the officers of the station; but we regret to state that ten or twelve men and four women have already fallen victims in the 75th regiment alone.—Delhi Gaz., Sept. 15. (The Gazette of the 25th reports the disorder to be on the decrease.)

THE GRAND TRUNK ROAD.—We understand that no less than four officers in charge of divisions of the grand trunk road have lately applied for permission to resign their appointments. We have long observed that anything but the utmost harmony prevailed in this department, and much regret that any differences of opinion between the superintendent and his subordinates should prevent the public duties from going on smoothly.—Ibid. Sept. 25.

RELIGIOUS MOVEMENT AGAINST THE GOVERNMENT.—The annexed is extracted from the letter of a correspondent. "A meeting was held at Galoutie, not many days ago, by the Syuds there, to express their willingness to co-operate with the Swats in a religious war against the Sircar—so you see the feeling against the Company is not confined merely to Delhi. The magistrate, Mr. Power, and deputy magistrate, Mr. Tonnochy, went out to Galoutie, and three or four houses of the principal Syuds were searched, but no papers of any consequence were found. The ringleader was apprehended, and is now in custody.—Ibid.

MAHAMURREE, we regret to learn, has again made its appearance at three different places in the neighbourhood of Almorah. Several medical men, at present on leave in those hills, have proceeded to the places said to be infected, for the purpose of offering medical aid to the sufferers, and, if possible, to arrest the progress of the disease.—Delhi Gazette, Sept. 8.

TREES IN THE PUNJAB.—An active commencement, in the way of tree planting, is about to be made in this country, the Board of Administration having recommended, and the Supreme Government sanctioned, an annual outlay of Rs. 1,446, for three years, for planting the banks of the Huslee Canal, which will continue open until the completion of the first and second sections of the Baree Doab Canal.—Lahore Chronicle, Sept. 11.

ABDUCTION OF A WIFE BY HER HUSBAND.—Five or six years ago a young Brahmin of high caste, a Pandit deeply learned in Sanscrit and bearing a character which secured him universal respect (named Neel Kaunt), undertook to refute a Christian tract, published in Sanscrit by Mr. John Muir, of the civil service. He performed his task to the great satisfaction of all orthodox Hindus, but to the utter discomfiture of his own religious convictions. For, with more honesty than polemical tact, he had read the Bible diligently in order to refute it, and the result was his conversion to Christianity. The same honesty led him to avow his new belief fearlessly, and to make all the sacrifices that the avowal was sure to compel. Despite the entreaties of his friends, the promptings of an affectionate heart and the denunciations of the Gamaliels, who had brought him up, he openly renounced Hinduism, and was publicly baptized by the missionaries at Sagra. The Benares Recorder shall give the remainder of the narrative:—"The mother of the Pundit died when he was a child. His remaining relatives and connections reside for the most part at Banda. His wife has all along been living in this city. On his turning Christian, at which time he was about twenty years of age and his wife thirteen, it was found impossible for her to accompany him in his new career. Time rolled on and about two years ago an attempt was made to restore to him his better half, through the intervention of the Civil Court. She was confronted with her husband, in the presence of our magistrate, Mr. F. Gubbins, and was asked whether she would consent to share his fortunes. Influenced by intimidation, as it now seems, her reply was in the negative; and it was feared that all prospects of success were at an end. Not long ago the wife's father died, and it appears that, since that event, the family have been reduced to a condition bordering on destitution. The way was now evidently a little clearer, and hopes began to brighten. Moreover, the Pundit had received intimations, through several channels, that his wife still regarded him with affection, and was ready to second him in any attempt to effect her release from the ignominious captivity of a nominal widow. Very properly, seeing no more harm in abducting one's own wife than in picking one's own pockets, the Pundit at last resolved to act with vigour. Taking with him a number of his native Christian friends, and several other persons well affected towards him, the whole being marshalled by Mr. Broadway, of Sagra, the Pundit marched into the city, walked into his mother-in-law's house, led out his not unwilling spouse, lifted her into a palankeen which he had brought with him, and deposited her under his own roof at Sagra, before information could be lodged at the nearest thana. Although the affair was preconcerted with great secrecy, still the wife had got an inkling of what was in the wind, and showed herself standing at a window as her rescuers approached. In consequence of a complaint made by the mother, the parties met at the house of Mr. Gubbins, in order to ascertain the wife's definitive choice. The presence and mute agonies of the mother, however distressing to filial affection, were ineffectual to shake her preference for her husband, to whom she was at once made over."

A CENSUS.—The Government, N.W.P., have directed the taking of a general census of the whole population of the country, on the 31st December next.—Ibid.

THUGS.—The commissioner of Lahore has, as sessions judge, been many days engaged in the trial of the Thugs collected by Capt. Sleeman and Mr. Brereton. The number brought to this bar is said to have exceeded 170. The great majority of the offenders will, it is believed, be transported for life.—Ibid. Sept. 4.

MR. McMURDO, a midshipman of the Fox, was accidentally drowned whilst returning in a canoe from visiting H.M.S. Hastings.

THREE DEPUTY COMMISSIONERSHIPS will soon be vacant in the Punjab, that of Lahore on Major Macgregor going to Moorshedabad; of Shapore vice Major Birch proceeding to England, and of Thanetur vice Capt. Larkins, who is about to apply for furlough.

CHAPLAINCIES.—We understand that the chaplaincy of Landour and Roorkee will, on the Rev. F. A. Dawson's departure for England, be conferred on the Rev. J. B. D'Aguilar, who will be succeeded at Meerut by the Rev. C. Garbett, now of Mooltan.—Mofussilite, Sept. 14.

THE COURT OF ENQUIRY, lately sitting at Lahore on an officer of the Artillery, has resulted in a trial by court martial on charges of drunkenness, &c.—Ibid.

AFFRAY IN CASHMERE.—It will be in the memory of most of our readers that an artillery officer, whilst on leave in Cashmere last season, got mixed up in an unfortunate affray, about which we stated that an investigation was to take place. We now learn that a court of inquiry is to be held, and that the witnesses have only just been brought down for the purpose. We have little doubt that the officer in question will rejoice at the opportunity thus afforded him of placing the facts, which have been distorted considerably, in their true light.—Ibid.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. C. A. WHEELWRIGHT, REG. OF ARTILLERY.

Head-quarters, Simla, Sept. 9, 1852.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Meean Meer, on the 18th day of August, 1852, Lieutenant Charles Apthorp Wheelwright, of the regiment of artillery, was arraigned on the following

Charge: for conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in the following instances:—

1. In having, on the forenoon of the 15th June, 1852, returned to the staging bungalow at Anarkullee, where he was temporarily residing, in a state of intoxication; and in having, after having undressed himself for the purpose of bathing, continued in a state of nudity throughout the day, exposed to the gaze of the servants at the bungalow, and rendering himself liable to be seen in that state by any casual visitor to the bungalow.

2. In having, by continued drunkenness, induced an attack of delirium tremens, on the 21st June, 1852, at Meean Meer, in consequence of which it became necessary to employ a guard to remove him from the artillery mess-house, whither he had proceeded, and afterwards to place him in charge of an European non-commissioned officer.

Finding.—On the 1st instance of the charge, guilty.

On the second instance of the charge, not guilty, and the Court do acquit him thereof.

The Court further considered the prisoner guilty of the preamble of the charge; viz., of conduct highly unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman.

Sentence.—To be dismissed the service.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed)

W. M. GOMM, General,
Commander-in-Chief, East-Indies.

Remarks by his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief has perused with surprise much of the evidence recorded at this trial, particularly that portion of it relating to the medical treatment of Lieutenant Wheelwright, consequent on the state he is said to have been in on the 21st of June last. A great deal of matter has been entered on the proceedings relating to the second instance of the charge that was not evidence, and ought not to have been received as such. The Court, however, appear to have exercised a sound judgment in giving the prisoner the benefit of all that was before them, and acquitting him of this instance.

The name of Lieutenant Wheelwright will cease to be borne on the returns of the artillery regiment, from the date of publication of this order at Lahore, of which a report is to be made to the Adjutant-General of the army, and to the officiating Assistant Adjutant-General at the Presidency.

MADRAS.

MISUNDERSTANDING BETWEEN THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL AND SIR HENRY POTTINGER.

We are concerned to hear that a serious misunderstanding between the Governor-General and Sir Henry Pottinger has grown out of the events connected with the despatch of troops to Rangoon from this presidency. The whole of the correspondence has been referred to the Court of Directors, and its tenor gives that distinguished body no alternative but to pronounce an absolute verdict on the merits of the dispute. Some months since, it appears that Lord Dalhousie complained of the dilatory proceedings of the Madras authorities when called upon to embark the force for Burmah, by which many days were lost and much extra expense incurred. The Governor of Fort St. George retorted by an indignant remonstrance to the Supreme Government, at the way in which he had been treated throughout the business. He had never been consulted as to the mode in which it was intended to carry on the war, or asked even as to the extent of the means which Madras could make available for the prosecution of the campaign. An old soldier, accustomed to deal with great questions of peace and war, and honoured with the confidence of his sovereign in China and elsewhere, it was not expecting too much that the head of the state should at least have made him acquainted, by personal correspondence, with the plans that were laid down in a matter of grave importance. But, instead of an early exposition of the vice-regal views and opinions, he had only received orders, and that at the last moment. He was studiously placed in the position of a subordinate, whose duty it is to obey and ask no questions. Under these circumstances, Sir Henry Pottinger justified his supineness, which was thoroughly intentional. He had made up his mind to act up to his position and not beyond it. As an adviser, he would have gladly co-operated with those at the head of affairs, and have given all the weight of his experience and personal exertion to the course which might have been resolved upon; but as a servant, and nothing more, he left to their foresight and activity the ordering of the minor arrangements. He would not be responsible where he was not trusted.

In reply to these remarks, the Governor-General acknowledges not only a common belief with Sir Henry Pottinger as to the ability and experience of the latter, but urges the very fact of that belief as a reason for his own conduct. Concluding that he had a just appreciation of what ought to be done, he relied upon him for doing it. To a novice or an incapable man he would have felt it needful to pre-cribe the exact steps to be taken, but in this case the knowledge was not wanting, and he had counted on its being applied in the most effectual way. According to the breadth of his capacity he was bound to act for the public good. Was it not incumbent on one holding such a high position to volunteer all the aid in his power? Ought not his work to be commensurate with his opportunities? That responsibility was declined in such a case, was a result which never could have been anticipated in Calcutta. He, the Governor-General, had relied upon the most energetic assistance in every department of government. He had set the example in his own person, and had supervised as far as was possible all the details. Save in the instance of the Madras presidency, the exertions of Government had been met by corresponding zeal, and he repelled the attempt to fix the blame of that inattention on his shoulders. It was for the supreme authority to complain of a want of public spirit on the part of the Government of Fort St. George, and not for the latter to set up a plea of being treated uncourteously and without due consideration.

We have endeavoured to compress into the above paragraphs, an abstract of the voluminous papers which have gone home on the subject. Of course we merely embody the spirit of the arguments used on both sides. At the outset the parties were on those terms which permit the use of the semi-official style of correspondence, but towards the close Lord Dalhousie declined to answer papers which were not of a strictly public character. It is understood that a vote by the Court of Directors in favour of the Governor-General will very probably involve the resignation of Sir Henry Pottinger.—Athenæum, Sept. 18.

ECCLESIASTICAL FEES.—The discussion on the subject of ecclesiastical fees has resulted in a considerable reduction. For a marriage license, the chaplain is now to receive Rs. 35, instead of Rs. 70; and the marriage banns are to be published for Rs. 10, instead of Rs. 17; while really poor persons are to be married gratis.

THE SUPREME COURT.—Of all the ruined institutions which folks deplore in these days of trouble and change, there is none so utterly done up as the Supreme Court of Madras. The fees are not sufficient to pay for bombazine. We have heard that it is in contemplation to increase the jurisdiction of the Small Cause Court to suits for the recovery of Rs. 1,000. If the design be carried out, it will certainly involve other and more important alterations.—Athenæum, Sept. 21.

ESCAPE FROM A PANTHER.—A letter from Jaulnah, dated September 8th, contains an account of a perilous affair with a panther, in which Lieutenant Horner, 7th N.I. narrowly escaped death. On the 4th, Lieutenant H., unaccompanied by any other officer, came upon the animal, which he wounded severely, on which the panther broke through the line of beaters, and crawled into a bush, which Lieutenant H. approached, when the beast sprang out, knocked him down, and broke his gun with his teeth. In the struggle (the lieutenant being uppermost) the panther got the officer's head in his mouth, when a shikaree fired and wounded the beast, who slunk away into the bush and died. Lieutenant H. was recovering of his wounds.

ACCIDENT.—A correspondent of the Madras Athenæum, writing from Vizagapatam, mentions the death, by drowning, of Mr. Young, junior, on the 7th of September, near the factory of Chitacoalah. The young gentleman and three others were out pleasuring, when the boat upset, and Mr. Young met with a watery grave.

THE MOPLAH DISTURBANCES.—A letter from Cannanore, dated September 20, says:—"The Commissioner, Mr. Strange, is still at Tellicherry. A sharp correspondence is, we are told, being carried on between that gentleman and our collector, on the subject of the late Moplah disturbances. We are sorry we are not in a position to say what the ultimate result of Mr. Strange's inquisitorial tour will be."

THE POPULATION.—The Fort St. George Gazette publishes a "general statement, showing the population of the several districts of the Madras Presidency, compiled in the office of the Board of Revenue from the returns of the Census taken A.D. 1850-51." The total population of the entire presidency is set down at 22,301,697, of whom the Mahomedans number no more than 1,679,889. By the census of 1839 the people numbered 13,967,395,—or 8,334,302 less than by that of 1851. The population of the town of Madras itself has in twelve years increased from 462,051 to 720,000. The area of the presidency, exclusive of Madras, is 136,872 square miles, giving an average for the twenty collectorates of upwards of 157 inhabitants per square mile.

BOMBAY.

THE GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.

The terminus, which will occupy the parade-ground of the N.I. regiment lying nearest to the dhobies' lines, is not yet commenced, but will be in the course of next month. The road from Mazagon to Fort George will be closed for vehicles and also for passengers until a foot bridge is put across; all the traffic must in future go round by the road in course of construction between the gun lascar lines and those of the dhobies. From the market to Sion the line may be said to be almost completed—it is so with the exception of a few minor details. At present the distance of the rails is being boxed up consequent on the effects of the monsoon, which the whole of the line has stood remarkably well. The Byculla Bridge is still unfinished, owing to the girders not having arrived from England. The whole of the permanent way and double road are laid, except in one or two places, between Bombay and Tanna. The Sion cutting, now in a very forward state, prevents the communication throughout the length: this cutting is expected to be finished, and the whole of the contract No. 1, and part of No. 2, which embrace the distance, placed in working trim by January next. In the mean time, stations will be constructed at Parell, Mahim, Sion, and Tanna. The branch line to Mahim, a single road, is in course of completion. Beyond Tanna the engineering difficulties are very great, requiring the closest attention; and only such a really practical professional as the present engineer appointed to that part of the work (Mr. Clowser, C.E.), could surmount such obstacles as are presented. In a short distance of about three miles occur two viaducts and two tunnels, both of which, in their respective parts, are formidable undertakings.

The arches of the least of the viaducts are all turned, and the bottoms in, and some of the piers up to the springing of the larger one. The strong rush of water during the monsoon caused a considerable delay in these works. From Tanna to the tunnel (No. 1) at Persick Point the permanent way is laid. The tunnel is solid rock, and is being got on with very slowly; but more rapidly than with tunnel No. 2, which is rather behind. The first tunnels are, however, being bricked in. The bricks used are made on the ground by the contractor, and are considered very good. Both tunnels will be broken through, it is expected. From the No. 2. tunnel to Callian forms contract No. 3, which is in the hands of natives; and as natives always do work, so are they working—swarms of biggaries and coolies, but no plan—literally scratching the cuttings out where they occur with their finger-nails. There are no works of any importance along this part of the line—a distance of about six miles: it runs across a flat, which at high tide is inundated. Now the monsoon is over, all will be astir again, and probably the next event in Bombay of any moment will be the opening of the Great Indian Peninsula Railway. Surveys have been made along the principal routes to the interior; the most practicable one for the course of the line appears to be that by the Thull ghaut,—works however in that direction have not yet been set out. By the ship Charles, which arrived a few days since, three locomotives and several different class carriages have arrived with other moving stock, which are now being landed and conveyed to the site of the terminus—six European engine-drivers also arrived at the same time.—Bombay Times, Sept. 29.

THE LONDON MAIL of August 24th arrived at Bombay on Sept. 23rd, per Victoria.

CIVIL SERVICE BONUS FUND.—The committee of members of the civil service recently formed to take into consideration the feasibility of establishing a bonus fund to hasten retirements and accelerate promotion, on the principle of the Agra fund, have resolved that there is no prospect of any scheme of the kind answering in this presidency. The committee, on communicating with many of the seniors of the service, found that none were prepared to retire at once, even if assistance to a moderate extent were forthcoming, and among the junior grades the scheme appeared to find but little favour. They have, therefore, and we think wisely, determined to abandon all further agitation of the question of a bonus fund.—Bombay Times.

NATIVE PETITIONS.—We hear of various petitions likely to be sent home by the natives in the course of the next six months, on the subject of the India Bill, to be laid before Parliament during the discussion.—Ibid.

TAX ON OPIUM.—The Bombay Gazette states that the justices of the peace at Bombay have recommended the Government to lay a heavy tax upon opium, for municipal purposes.

THE STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY of this Presidency have realized a profit of Rs. 46,872 on the operations of the past year. They have, however, lost one of their best vessels, the Surat, and expect to be compelled to build another to meet the necessities of the mail contract for Kurrachee. They have, therefore, abstained from declaring any dividend.

COLONEL OUTRAM returns to India so soon as the state of his health permits, with a strong recommendation from the Court of Directors that he shall be again employed in political service. There need after this be no doubt whatever of the views taken by the Court of the merits of the quarrel betwixt Government and the late Resident at Baroda. The case has been closed by the Court; the Khutput memorandum, which forms a separate division of the subject altogether, has not been before them. The perfect authenticity of these statements may be relied upon.—Bombay Times, Oct. 1.

"HURRAH FOR THE DIGGINGS."—We have been informed that there are no fewer than 234 soldiers from three of the Queen's regiments of this presidency who have applied for their discharge with the view of proceeding direct to Australia by the first ship—180 from the 86th, 14 from the 64th, and 40 from the 10th Hussars: all these are either entitled to their discharge through efflux of time, or are willing to pay for it.—Ibid.

THE NATIVE PETITION ON THE CHARTER will not go home till next mail: it is, we believe, founded on the principles of the plan laid down by Lord Ellenborough, of a permanent council for India, or that of Mr. Fox, passed in 1783 by a large majority of the House of Commons, but thrown out by the Lords, intrusting the government and patronage of India to the hands of seven commissioners.

A MAHARATTA NOBLE MADE A SODDER AMEEN.—The Telegraph notices that the Government of this presidency has presented a Sudder Ameenship to Baboo Sahib Vinchorkur. This gentleman is the second son of the Chief of Vinchorkur, the first noble of the Peishwa's Court, and one of the few who clung to Bajee Row through every disaster. After the defeat of his master, he lost all his jaghires and free lands, except one small "surunjam" previously presented to him by Mr. Elphinstone. In this little territory he has established a native court for the administration of justice on the British system, which is said to be far superior to anything in the regulation provinces.

WANT OF LAWYERS.—The Bombay Gazette complains greatly of the paucity of barristers and solicitors at that presidency, which has been found to be productive of great inconvenience to the public. According to our contemporary, the barristers and solicitors of the court have, during the last ten years, received forty lakhs of rupees from litigants, and this is exclusive of their profits from conveyancing, chamber practice, suits in the Small Cause Court, and other legal sources of emolument.

ARAB MARES.—The Company's steamer Queen, which arrived from Muscat on the 14th September, brought from the Imam of that province two Arab mares of great value, as a present for his Royal Highness Prince Albert. They are superb animals, one a white, and the other a beautiful bay; and are both in brood.—Telegraph.

ATTORNEY'S APPRENTICES.—The Bombay Gazette says, it is probable the Bombay attorneys will change their minds on the subject of the admission of native apprentices. The Chief Justice has, it is said, given them to understand extrajudicially, that if they refuse to take native apprentices, they cannot prevent the judges from making native attorneys, and that consequently they had better make the concession with a good grace. The Calcutta Citizen confirms this statement by saying that a Parsee youth to whom he offered indentures, has expressed his willingness to take advantage of the offer, provided he cannot obtain the permission he desires in his own presidency.

CONVERSION.—A considerable sensation has been lately created amongst the Hindoos of the Senoy caste, in consequence of the conversion of one of their number to the doctrines of Christianity. The Senoys are next to the Brahmins in Western India, and this apostasy is therefore universally execrated amongst the higher classes of the Hindoo persuasion. The convert endeavoured to compel his wife to live with him, but the Chief Justice decided against him. Considerable discussion has ensued in consequence, but the general opinion is, that Sir Erskine Perry's decision was perfectly correct.—Telegraph, Oct. 2. Some time since, a Hindoo youth of twenty-two, of good education and respectable parentage, was converted to Christianity, and baptized; his wife, from whom he had for a considerable time been separated, refused from henceforth to live with him. A writ was upon this moved for by him to have her brought up and made over to him; this the Chief Justice declined to grant, it not appearing that she lived under control, or was detained by force. It was stated that the plaintiff might sue before the ecclesiastical court for a return of his conjugal rights, but the language of the judge conveyed the impression that no force would be sanctioned, and that the lady would be suffered to do as she thought fit, whatever might be the ultimate decision. The judgment was based on the principle of doing as we would be done by, and illustrated by the supposition of the calamity imposed in compelling a Christian wife to join the harem of a husband converted to Mahomedanism. Great excitement prevails on both sides: the natives are in raptures with the judgment,—the missionaries regard the judge as little better than a heathen—to us he seems to have done what is right.—Times, Oct. 1.

MR. LICHFIELD, the manager of the Steam Navigation Company, whose industry, intelligence, and good conduct had frequently elicited approbation from his employers, was authorized to draw money from the Oriental Bank by cheque countersigned by two directors of the Company. To save time and avoid inconvenience, as he alleges, he had occasionally been in the habit of writing in the names of the parties in question—and the imitation of their signatures was so good, that the cheques were duly cashed. By accident, one of the directors observed some of these, which he knew he had not subscribed, and the matter was immediately inquired into. It meanwhile appeared that the various sums drawn had all been required, all applied to the legitimate purposes of the Company, and were all, moreover, duly entered and accounted for,—so that there was no evidence whatever of any intention to commit fraud. Meanwhile, Mr. Lichfield has absconded, and thus drawn upon himself suspicions of a much more grave description than those attaching to him in the case just stated. We forbear going further into the matter at present, but have heard of coal and other questions as being likely to be brought under notice at next general meeting of the Company, such as are likely to occasion not a little surprise.—Bombay Times, Sept. 14. An information against Mr. Lichfield was laid by Manockjee Nusserwanjee Pitty, one of the trustees of the Bombay Steam Navigation Company, before Mr. Rivett, magistrate of police, and a warrant was issued for his apprehension.

YOUNG OFFICERS, posted to regiments, and doing duty with other corps, are directed, by a notice from head-quarters, to proceed and join the regiments to which they respectively belong, with exception of those posted to corps stationed at Neemuch, who will continue attached as at present until the 15th of December next.

GOLD has been found by Lieutenant Aytoun, for some time engaged in a geological survey of the southern Mahratta country (now at Kulladghee, in a delicate state of health), far more extensively distributed in the Belgaum and Dharwar districts than was at first surmised; and what is most promising is the fact that it exists in these localities under precisely the same geological conditions as in the great auriferous tracts of the world. It is impossible to say how far gold has already been extracted by the natives,—but by analogy we are entitled to conclude that it originally existed in abundance. At present, all the precious metal that is collected by them is so merely from the superficial gravel of the beds of streams: they never think of digging on the flanks of hills, which are now known to be the chief locales of the gold.—Bombay Times, Oct. 1.

MAJOR SHAW.—Considerable excitement has arisen in our military circles on the removal of Major Shaw from the command of the 22nd N. I., stationed at Kurrachee, preparatory to taking his trial by court-martial. Contrary to the first principles of discipline and dictates of common sense, the officer in question had been counselling and corresponding with Ali Moorad,—just stripped by authority of the Home Government, and most justly so, of a large portion of his dominions,—on the subject of his supposed wrongs: anything more unmilitary is inconceivable.—Bombay Times, Oct. 1. We feel reluctant to give a "local habitation" in our columns to flying rumours, reflecting so dishonourably on the character of an able and highly respected officer. We do so now because the subject has been introduced so conspicuously into the columns of our contemporary, and because it must necessarily and very soon cause great excitement in Bombay; and we do so in the hope that the gallant officer will be able fully to vindicate himself, and to satisfy the honourable army to which he belongs, and the public who are scarcely less interested in his case, that he has not compromised his honour as a soldier, nor his integrity as a man. The Major seems to have interested himself in the affairs of the degraded Ameer, and to have received a glittering douceur, a palpable consideration for any services he might have it in his power to render the Ameer at some future time, by advocating his cause at head quarters. The impatient Ameer, anxious to know what the Major was doing to further his interests, sent three or four of his retainers to Kurrachee to make inquiries and report progress. The presence of these persons excited suspicions in the breast of the able and vigilant Commissioner, Mr. Frere, and by his authority they were examined, when papers and correspondence were found in their possession, implicating the Major with Ali Moorad in the manner we have specified. These are the floating rumours on the subject; and we have thought it better distinctly to state them, than to intimate them by any mysterious and dark sayings, which would only occasion a greater amount of gossip.—Telegraph, Oct. 2.

POONA.—Extract of a letter dated 28th September:—"Bishop Harding leaves in the beginning of October for Saltara, where he purposes holding a Confirmation. He is a great favorite with the Poonaites, who crowd our little church every Sabbath evening to hear his eloquent and evangelical discourses. En passant of St. Mary's Church, the Government has at last sanctioned the outlay of 4,000 Rs. towards enlarging it, and the parts to be thrown down are the north and south transepts, which are to be widened.—Findlay, the Mormonite, although ordered to quit the camp by the 1st proximo, is actually about erecting a meeting-house on a vacant piece of ground out of the cantonment limits, and right in front of Treacher's! He can muster, I am told, some half dozen converts up here.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

NATIVE IMPRESSIONS RESPECTING INFLUENCE.

(Circular).—Political Department.

From A. Malet, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, Bombay:—

"To ————

"13th September, 1852.

"Sir,—The Governor in Council has had under consideration the replies which have been submitted to the Circular,* calling for suggestions as to the best means of eradicating the alleged belief of a large portion of the native community in the success attending endeavours to obtain objects from Government, and the authorities at the Presidency, by a system of intriguing at variance with the legitimate course of procedure and appeal.

* Political Department, No. 2265, dated 15th May, 1850. Revenue Department, No. 4138, dated 28th May, 1850. Judicial Department, No. 2466, dated 23rd May, 1850.

"It appears from the replies of several local officers to the circular, that there is an idea prevalent that there are individuals who attempt to forward, by their personal influence with officers who receive them on familiar and friendly terms, the views of those in whose affairs they are interested; and that either these individuals, or the parties who make use of them, are inclined, from motives of self-interest, to encourage the belief that they can do so.

"While fully sensible of the advantages attendant on the civil officers of Government being at all times accessible to natives, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is equally convinced that the utmost care should be taken, during interviews with them, to prevent such matters being discussed or adverted to as would, on inquiry, be likely to form subjects of official consideration, either by themselves or other public officers, and thus to avoid giving the impression of a bias having been received, or any particular interest taken, in such affairs. His Lordship in Council cannot but think that if the officers of Government had invariably observed in their intercourse with native visitors, or with those inclined to take an interest in their affairs, a circum-spect line of conduct of the nature indicated, the mischievous belief which exists could not have obtained the prevalence it has.

"Private discussion of matters within their official jurisdiction is prohibited to judicial officers by Regulation III. of 1827, section 2; the spirit of this rule is of course applicable to all departments, and his Lordship in Council does not feel it necessary to add more precise instructions, for he feels confident that the officers to whom this circular is addressed will be glad of the opportunity it gives them of precluding for the future all possibility of their being importuned in a manner of which they must disapprove; and he hopes that it may further serve to ensure them from any embarrassment, which in its absence might be occasioned to them, either by their appearing unnecessarily to discountenance applications made to them for their sympathy and advice, or, by their listening to such, affording the slightest grounds for any expectation that they would consent to meddle privately with matters for the settlement of which an open and regular course of application or appeal is available for all willing to pursue it.

"A compendium of the rules observed in receiving and disposing of petitions addressed to Government, will be transmitted hereafter, for the information of all local officers.—I have the honour to be, Sir, your most obedient servant,

"A. MALET, Chief Secretary.

"Bombay Castle, 13th September, 1852."

ABSENTEE REGULATIONS.

Bombay Castle, Sept. 15.—General Department.—With reference to sections 6, 7, and 8 of the Absentee Regulations, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to notify for general information, under instructions received from the Hon. the Court of Directors, that sick leave taken to Europe, as well as within the limits of the East-India Company's Charter, must be taken into account in computing the two years allowed to a civil servant under the first-mentioned section; and that period having been completed, whether wholly in Europe, or partly in Europe and partly within the limits of the Company's Charter, a civil servant cannot obtain a fresh leave under section 6, without loss of salary and appointment, until he shall have been three years at his duties from the expiration of the last leave taken under that section.

PUBLICATION OF OFFICIAL CORRESPONDENCE.

Political Department, Bombay Castle, Sept. 22, 1852.—The attention of all officers in the civil, military, and naval employ of Government is called to the General Order of the Government of India dated the 15th March, 1847, now republished, any infringement of the provisions of which will be severely noticed.

No correspondence whatever in any manner relating to the public service, and especially to military and naval operations in a time of war passing between officers engaged in such operations, is permitted to be made public by them, or to be communicated by them, directly or indirectly, to any parties with the view to publication, without the previous written sanction of the authorities under whom such officer may be serving.

General Order by the Governor-General of India, Camp Dhara, March 15, 1847.—The Governor-General deems it advisable to republish for general information the notification* issued on the 30th August, 1843, in which the principle is laid down that it is contrary to the duty of every officer, civil or military, to make public or to communicate to individuals, without the previous sanction of the Government, any documents, papers, or information of which he may have become possessed in his official capacity.

The practice of making use of official information in carrying on personal controversies, is a course highly prejudicial to the public interests, and is not only at variance with the rules by which due discipline and obedience to superior authority can be adequately maintained, but is a positive breach of faith, inasmuch as no functionary has a right to reveal, without due authority from his official superiors or the home authorities, any fact or circumstance which may come to his knowledge in the performance of his duty, or to correspond with any one upon the instructions he may have received for his special guidance.

The Governor-General is persuaded that every officer, civil and military, will henceforth conform to this rule of the service, under the conviction that, if in the transaction of his official duties his public conduct be impugned, he is at liberty to seek redress through the usual official channel, by an appeal to the Government he serves, and that the Government so appealed to will afford him every opportunity of vindicating his character.

* Fort William, Aug. 30, 1843.—Notification.—Some misconception appearing to exist with respect to the power which officers of both services have over the documents and papers which come into their possession officially, the Governor-General in Council deems it expedient to notify that such documents and papers are in no case to be made public, or communicated to individuals, without the previous consent of the Government, to which alone they belong.

The officer in possession of such documents and papers can only legitimately use them for the furtherance of the public service in the discharge of his official duty, and it is to be understood that the same rule which applies to documents and papers, applies to information of which officers may become possessed officially.

CEYLON.

From an official statement of the imports and exports of Ceylon, it would appear that the trade of the island is steadily increasing. The total value of imports for the quarter ending 5th July, 1852, was 190,470L, being an increase of 33,260L over the imports of the same quarter of 1851. The value of the exports during the same time in 1852 amounted to 195,970L, while in 1851, they were only 173,454L. The exports of coffee, however, have decreased by more than 10,000L, and those of cinnamon have slightly declined. The greatest increase appears to have been in cocoa-nut oil. Ceylon will have a formidable rival, we hear, in Arracan, when the innumerable cocoa-nut trees which have been planted there begin to yield their produce.

THE CLERGY.—It is with pain we have to notice the suspension of the venerable Archdeacon from his colonial appointments, on account of the part he has taken in the Bhoodist question. We waive for the present the expression of any opinion with regard to this extreme measure, waiting the issue of a conflict which we feel cannot now be much longer deferred. How the bishop, at whose recommendation, we believe, the Government have acted on this occasion, will come out of the approaching ordeal, we presume not to so much as to surmise. For the Archdeacon we have no fears but that he will acquit himself with the dignity and high honour of a fearless and uncompromising friend of truth. We notice that the Observer, in his remarks on this Drako-like proceeding, asserts that the Archdeacon is to be superannuated, on condition of apologizing to the Governor and Bishop, and that Mr. Boake is also warned. The statement with regard to the apologetic part of it, we are glad to say, quite erroneous.—Ceylon Times, Aug. 27.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

The principal event of the past month has been the advance of General Cathcart, at the head of a strong column of troops, and about 1,000 burghers, across the Kei, into the territory of the Amagaleka Caffre chief Krel, his burning the deserted kraal, or "great place," of that chief, his return to head-quarters at King William's Town, and disbandment of the burgher force, after capturing 13,000 of the enemy's cattle.

His Excellency moved forward from the Umvani. During his progress towards the Kei, two messengers from the chief reached him, sent to "inquire the cause of the presence of the troops, and to hear the Governor's word." They were sent back with the answer—"That the Governor had sent to demand the payment of the fine of the cattle imposed by the former Governor; that the fine has not been paid, and Sandilli is still in the Amatolas; that, if Krel would, with the fine imposed, surrender his person, to be kept in safety till the Gaikas cross the Kei, the Governor would halt the troops." The messengers replied "that the fine might be paid, but that Krel would not surrender."

The forces then entered Krel's country, an intrenched post being left at the Balotta to secure communication with the colony. Advancing in two columns, they reached Crouch's station, in the neighbourhood of Krel's place, on the 11th; and on the following morning his Excellency led a force of colonial contingents, with four companies of the 6th regiment, as support, upon Krel's great kraal, which was found deserted, and was burnt, without the enemy showing himself. On the 13th, two columns, under Colonels Napier and Michell, were despatched in pursuit of the enemy's cattle, and, although the great mass of them had already been driven beyond reach, mostly into the territory of Umbala (which for some reason the forces were forbidden to enter), the large number above mentioned were brought into camp. The only casualties reported are one artilleryman killed and one wounded.

The prompt and spirited manner in which so large a body of the Eastern burghers had turned out in arms at the Governor's call was warmly acknowledged by his Excellency, in a general order on the 21st, when he dismissed them to their respective homes. He also declared that, by the exertions of the forces in one foray of nine days, the object he had in view in invading Krel's country and punishing that chief had been accomplished. He then withdrew the troops, and returned to King William's Town.

Some surprise and disappointment are expressed on the frontier at this speedy termination of the expedition, for which such great preparations were made, and various causes are assigned for the return of the troops without having elicited any appearances of submission on the part of Krel, who, it is generally believed, will have by this time resumed his former quarters, the work of a few hours sufficing to reconstruct the cluster of straw huts and rude cattle fences which form his "great place." One cause is said to be that the enemy took the precaution to cover his retreat by burning the grass in every direction behind him, thus rendering pursuit by cavalry impracticable. It is also stated that some of the Tambookie and other neighbouring tribes have been subsidized, and are prepared to fall upon the contumacious chief, and, in Caffre phrase, "eat him up." The most general impression, however, is, that under any circumstances peace will shortly be proclaimed by the Governor; and that, having displayed to the border tribes the overwhelming force which he is prepared to bring against them, he will now endeavour to allay the stormy elements, and assert, under more specific influences, that authority over our savage neighbours which is essential to the very existence of the colony, and which every month's continuance of this miserable warfare seems but more and more hopelessly to undermine and weaken.—Cape Town Mail, Aug. 30.

The supplement to this journal, of September 6, states, however, that it is the intention of the Governor to make another inroad into Krel's country at a suitable opportunity.

IMPEDIMENTS TO CONVERSION IN INDIA.—Secular Hindu property, held in common, would include the family mansion. I will suppose the case of four brothers, residing in the family mansion of their ancestors, and that one of them becomes a Christian. Previously, they had all lived, as is the custom of the country, under the same roof, as a common property, and partook of their meals in common; but after the conversion of one, it would be impossible for the three brothers who remained Hindoos to meet at meals, or allow of contact with, or associate with, the brother who had become a Christian, without being, according to Hindoo notions, contaminated; either the Hindoos or the Christian must forfeit the right to reside in the house.—Evidence of Sir H. Maddock.

THE INDIAN PRESS.—The Editor of the Lahore Chronicle says that he lost, in 1847, by one article, not only the entire Sudder Bench, but six or seven of the subordinate agency of the same institution. "The records of the subscription list of an Indian journal," observes the Friend of India, "if faithfully given, would furnish a most curious history of public and sometimes of coteries opinion. Our remarks on the military proceedings of Lord Gough cost us from a dozen to a dozen and a half subscribers. Every man, official or non-official, under his Excellency's influence, deserted us; but a newspaper, like nature, abhors a vacuum, and it was soon filled up."

At a meeting of the Asiatic Society of Hong-kong, Mr. J. C. Bowring exhibited a living plant, from the pith of which what is known as rice-paper is made, and some specimens of the material in various stages. The plant is a native of Formosa.

Of 34,252,587L, the amount of the Government Stock in India, on the 30th April, 1847 (the latest return received), 21,981,447L. was held by Europeans, and 12,271,140L. by natives.

The number of officers dismissed from the Indian army by sentence of courts-martial, from 1834 to 1851, is 108: viz., Bengal, 47; Madras, 45; Bombay, 16. Of this number only 8 were restored.

The number of European officers, military and medical, on the active list of the Indian army (excluding those absent on detached employment, namely, 1,040, or on leave), in 1851, was 4,233; viz. Bengal, 1,913; Madras, 1,341; Bombay, 979. The furloughs in that year (including colonels of regiments) numbered 948.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

In our last number we gave an account of the visit of two Chinese Christians to the Jewish Synagogue at Kai-fung-fu, in Honan, China, and of the removal of certain of the Hebrew MSS., in the possession of the descendants of the Jewish colonists, to Shang-hae. We now insert, from the North China Herald, an account of the rolls and manuscripts removed, the result of a careful examination of these curious documents.

"The peculiar circumstances under which these relics have been found, cannot fail to interest the student of Judaic archaeology, and, when submitted to the inspection of Western biblical scholars, they will probably afford some clue to the history of this colony. The paucity of materials within our reach here prevents any very satisfactory investigation for arriving at the age of the rolls from internal evidence. One is clearly distinguishable from the other five by the style of writing, the appearance of the skin, and the evident marks of having at some former period suffered much damage by water, probably in the flood which happened at Kai-fung-fu in 1642. Nearly two centuries ago, the Roman Catholic missionaries learned that twelve of these rolls were preserved in honour of the twelve tribes of Israel, and one, said to be five hundred years older than the others, was dedicated to Moses. This last has been thought to be an ancient copy that was presented by a Mohammedan, who had received it as a bequest from a dying Israelite at Canton. The document alluded to may probably be the one before us, but of this we cannot speak with any certainty, as we are informed that there are still two ancient copies remaining at Kai-fung-fu. On close inspection, we find that this, like the Codex Malabaricus, found by Buchanan among the black Jews in India, is made up of portions of two or more copies, it having been pieced and patched since passing through the waters; this last fact is abundantly evident, from the much more clumsy style of the recent joinings, the freshness of the ligatures, and the skin being in one place notched out and joined in the middle of the column, the last word on the one piece having also been left at the beginning of the other, while the difference of handwriting is too marked to escape notice. The appearance of part of the skin also indicates that it has been manufactured at a time or under circumstances where leather-dressing had not reached the perfection which marks the other rolls. Among the tattered fragments which were all bound up together, and kept sacred as one roll, we have duplicates of some portions of Numbers; but taking all together, there is not above two-thirds of the Pentateuch remaining. Of this, about one-half is illegible, and in many parts the skin is left quite blank, from the action of the water. The more modern-looking of the two classes of fragments has obviously been re-written in many parts with Chinese ink, over the original characters. It is in a free, bold, and graceful hand, and very different from the calligraphy of the other rolls.

"The newer rolls are formed of stout sheepskins, varying in width, but all in excellent condition: each roll has a Hebrew number at the outer corner of the last skin, which we suppose is to show its order in the synagogue. These numbers are, Beth, 2; Daleth, 4; He, 5; Teth, 9; and Jod-beth, 12. Besides these, each skin is numbered at the top, the last one showing the actual number in the roll; thus, 5 contains 75, 4 contains 79, 9 has 47, and 12, 66; 2 seems to be numbered on a different principle, the numbers only reaching as high as 19, when another series is begun and carried up to 19 again, and so on to the end. Although the numbers of the skins vary so much, not so the columns, each roll containing 239; but there is a striking difference in the width of these throughout the roll, though there is a general correspondence between one roll and another. Thus, the Song of Moses, in the 15th chapter of Exodus, is nine inches wide in No. 2, while some of the columns do not exceed three inches. There are forty-nine indented horizontal lines, nearly half an inch apart, in each column, apparently drawn with an iron or wooden stile, which lines form the boundary for the tops of the letters. They almost uniformly begin and end each column with the same letter, but there are some exceptions to this in No. 2.

"There are no points throughout, with the exception of the word וְיִשְׁמְרוּ in Deuteronomy xxxiii. 4, which in Nos. 2, 4, and 9, and also in the old one, has a dot over each letter, according to our printed Bible; but Nos. 5 and 12 are without this. The enlarged and diminished letters found in our editions are not preserved in any of these. From an examination of some parts, and a comparison with the Samaritan, we are induced to think that these will only be another testimony to the accuracy of our received text; variations there are in many places, but they are in general merely the omission or addition of a vau or jod, which neither affects the sense nor reading; and these variations are not uniform in the different rolls.

"A more uncommon reading is found in the Song of Moses, Deuteronomy, xxxii. 25, where, instead of the word וְיִשְׁמְרוּ khareb, "sword," there is וְיִשְׁמְרוּ khaleb; this is uniform throughout all five, and seems to indicate that all have been copied from the same original; while, if that original copy was written by a Chinese scribe, there is little difficulty in accounting for the interchange. In the ancient copy we have the word וְיִשְׁמְרוּ read redundant in the 23rd verse of 7th chapter of Genesis; but this error has been noticed at some former period, for a line is drawn round the word to direct attention to it. Most of the rolls are profusely disfigured by errors, blots, erasures, and corrections; Nos. 4 and 12 especially, which have nearly as many corrections as columns; in some instances, these are made by cutting off the surface of the skin, in others by an attempt to wash out the writing, and in others again there is a white composition rubbed over the surface, to conceal the writing; but in these two last cases, the original letters are generally still clearly legible through the corrections. Making allowance for these, we believe the Jews at Kai-fung-fu, whatever else may be laid to their charge, will be found to have been faithful guardians of the oracles of God.

"In addition to the rolls above described, there are fifty-seven other manuscripts, the greater number of them similar to those of which fac-similes have already been printed. They are small, written chiefly on thick paper, formed by pasting several sheets together, and evidently with less care than that bestowed on the complete copies of the Law. Lines are indented to form a guide in writing as in the rolls, and there is always an odd number of lines in a page. Of the fifty-three sections of the Law, thirty-three of these lesser MSS. contain one each, and there are seven or eight duplicates. This enumeration, however, includes the six sections brought at the beginning of the year. They have the points and accents, the system differing little from that pursued in Europe. Some of these sections, whose faded silk covers and tattered appearance show them to be the oldest, have notes appended to them, giving their dates, the names of the writers, auditors, or witnesses, and of the rabbis in whose time they lived. Persian would seem to have been the mother-tongue of those who wrote these notes. Several words from that language are introduced in Hebrew characters; and are some of them by no means easy to be identified. The Roman Catholic missionaries who formerly visited the synagogue transcribed some similar notes. Translations of them by European scholars are found in Mr. Finn's work on the Jews in China, and in a note to the Prolegomena in Bagster's Polyglott Bible. If these renderings are correct, the note at the end of section I. of the Pentateuch should read, 'Our Lord and Rabbi, being the Rabbi Jacob, son of the Rabbi Abishai, the Sheloh [this word is translated by the above authorities "liable to err;" it is more probably the name of some office]. The Sheloh being the Rabbi Shadai, son of the Rabbi Jacob, son of the Rabbi Abishai, the Sheloh. Written by [or heard by] Rabbi Akibah, son of Aaron, son of Ezra. Presented by Abram, son of Aaron.'

"At the ancient city Pien-liang, written in the year 1931, in the month Marchesvan, on the fourth day of the week, and third of the month.

"By divine assistance, the fifty-three sections of the Law were written at the Feast [of Tabernacles], in the year 1932, in the month Tebeth, the 4th day.

"The Jews used the era of the Seleucids, the Greek kings of Syria, till within the last few centuries. Reckoning from that epoch (a.c. 312), this manuscript must have been written in a.d. 1621, a few years only before the Jesuits made their inquiries. The note to the last section of Deuteronomy reads:—

"Written at the ancient city Pien-liang, in Honan, in the year 1931, in the month Marchesvan, on the fourth day of the week, and third of the month.

"The fifty-three sections of the law were written at the Feast of Tabernacles, in the year 1932, in the month Tebeth, the 14th day.

"We have omitted what was illegible, and to the signification of which we could find no clue.

"The next manuscript we shall mention is a register of several principal families belonging to the Jewish congregation at Kai-fung-fu. It is prefaced by extracts from books of prayers. The register is in two parts, allotted to the men and the women respectively. The Hebrew names are given in full, and in the greater part of the register, the Chinese also.

* There seems to be a misprint in this Hebrew word, as there is no such word in Deut. xxxiii. 4, nor anywhere else in the Bible, according to the Concordance.

"Names have been chosen from those common among the Chinese, without any reference to similarity in sound or sense. These surnames are often written in Hebrew characters. At the end of the male register is a prayer that those it contains may be bound in the bundle of life with the seven just and holy men, Abraham, Isaac, Jacob, Moses, Aaron, Elijah and Elisha, and sit with them beneath the tree of life in the garden of Eden. At the end of the female register is a similar prayer that those mentioned in it may be bound in the bundle of life with the seven just and holy women, Sarah, Rebekah, Rachel, Leah, Jochebed, Miriam, and Zipporah, to sit with them beneath the tree of life in the garden of Eden.

"Among the other books, which in some cases have the points, and in others not, are several containing the service for the day of Atonement, and for the evening of that day. Another is entitled the Hundred Blessings for the same day. Another has at the end of it the names of the Jewish months and days of the week. Another contains the service for the feast of Purim. The greater part of those that remain consist of prayers and passages for chanting, forming the daily ritual. The Psalms are introduced so numerously that probably half of them might be collected from those prayer-books. Passages from the prophets and some of the historical books occur frequently. Such is the character of these service-books, that their compilers must have been men who knew well how to excite religious feelings by supplying the richest materials for them. The Psalms found here most frequently are those that are most familiar to the Christian reader of the Old Testament.

"The subject of the coming Messiah is introduced, but as in the case of other portions of this widely scattered race, not so prominently as we Christians are inclined to imagine of them. This, however, as well as a definite expectation of another life, has been lost, with the knowledge of the Hebrew language and the contents of their sacred books. The prayer in the family register above alluded to is a remarkable and characteristic proof of their faith in the soul's immortality and the future happiness of the good, when that was composed. It is not a little melancholy that the doctrine should have since disappeared so entirely from among them. The Rabbis of Honan took little pains to clothe their theology and traditions in a Chinese dress. The two Jews now at Shang-hae say it was believed that the knowledge of their religion in its native form could never be lost. They therefore felt it less necessary to communicate it in either a Chinese or Hebrew form. The two tablets in the synagogue would seem to have been written by persons who held quite as closely to Confucianism as to their professed faith, and fail to convey any adequate idea of Judaism. Perhaps the cause of the deterioration that has taken place is to be sought rather in the poverty and consequent apathy of the congregation in late years, than in the neglect of the earlier Rabbis, for the better educated of our two visitors remembers an old worn-out volume, in the last stages of decay, that he believes was a translation of the books of Moses. What he read in the Chinese translation of the Pentateuch on coming to Shang-hae brought to his recollection what he had there seen. On being shown a map of Jerusalem and the temple, they mentioned that there is a drawing in their synagogue of a large house of worship belonging to their religion in the country from which they came."

ROMAN CATHOLIC PRIESTS IN INDIA are granted allowances, varying from Rs. 20 to Rs. 100 per month, by the Government, for performing the rites of their religion to Roman Catholic soldiers in European regiments. The total sum paid for Roman Catholic establishments in India, since 1834, has increased from 1,500*l.* a year to 5,000*l.* There are 78 Roman Catholic priests who also participate in the grant. There is one Roman Catholic bishop, to whom an allowance of Rs. 200 a month is given, for services connected with the registration of births, marriages, and burials.—Mr. Melville's Evidence before the Lords' Committee.

The number of natives employed in the civil administration of British India in 1849 was 2,813, whereof 64 are principal sudder ameens, 81 sudder ameens, and 494 moonsiffs. Their allowances vary from 24*l.* a year to 1,560*l.* One received the latter amount; 8 from 840*l.* to 960*l.*; 12 from 720*l.* to 840*l.*; 68 from 600*l.* to 720*l.*; 69 from 480*l.* to 600*l.*; and 58 from 360*l.* to 480*l.*

The European residents in British India not in the service of the Queen or of the Company amount to 10,006, viz. males, 5,729; females (exclusive of the wives and families of civil and military servants), 4,277.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, October 29, 1852.

THE progress of Louis Napoleon, the Prince President of the French Republic, to the high station he has all but attained, has been, since the grand coup d'état of December last, gradual, steady, and certain. Far from appearing to have been accelerated by any arbitrary or even irregular acts of despotic power on his part, the impulse would seem to have been given by the nation, whose wishes he has merely obeyed. Between a President of a Republic, clothed with absolute and irresponsible authority, and a dictator, with the title of emperor, there may be little intrinsic difference; but it is a mighty step for an individual to make from one character to the other, and if, in less than twelve months, Louis Napoleon has traversed this interval without resorting to any manifestation of force, encouraged, on the contrary, by popular invitations, he is entitled to the presumption, at least, of having gained an imperial crown by the best of all titles,—the will of the nation.

When the revolution of last year burst like a thunder-clap upon startled Europe, we were amongst the few who hesitated to condemn Louis Napoleon, albeit the circumstances by which his usurpation was accompanied,—the violation of solemn obligations, and the annihilation of all securities against misrule,—imposed upon him a heavy responsibility. But the peculiar position of the Prince, who, upon the hypothesis that the enemies of order were upon the point of plunging the country into ruin, had no alternative but to seize the reins of absolute power, appeared, as we then said, to justify an act which nothing less than such an extremity could even palliate. The country was appealed to for its sanction of this extraordinary proceeding, and the country,—the only party that could complain of the wrong, or cure the irregularity,—gave its sanction.

The manner in which Louis Napoleon has used the vast authority which he thus acquired does no discredit either to his motives or his talents. It is true, he has not restored to France her institutions in the same state as when he was first placed temporarily at the head of her rickety constitution. He could not have done so with safety to himself or to the order of things he had established. On the other hand, he has crushed sedition, subdued faction, and purged the country of the enemies of internal and external peace. Under his administration, France has enjoyed a measure of repose to which she was for several years before an utter stranger. Her commerce and trade flourish; her finances are emerging from a confusion, supposed to be incurable and desperate, into something like order; the outward marks of content are exhibited by all classes of her population. Looking at the reception which the Prince President has met with whenever he appears in public, and especially during his recent tour into the provinces, we must conclude either that he is one of the most popular rulers France ever had, or that the French are the basest of hypocrites.

If Louis Napoleon has rendered these services to his country, and if he is so popular a ruler, nothing can be more natural than that the French people should desire to retain the positive benefits of his administration, and to escape the risks attending a change; in short, to place him permanently at the head of the government. There is no mode of accomplishing this wish effectually but that of making the supreme authority hereditary in the family of Louis Napoleon. To declare him President for life, would be to offer a temptation to the disaffected to assassinate him,—an inducement which does not exist, in the same degree at least, whilst his occupation of that post is but temporary.

It may be said that we have assumed the demonstrations of the French people in favour of Louis Napoleon to be spontaneous and voluntary, whereas they have been extorted by fear. That the army is a main bulwark of the President's authority, no one can doubt; but that the enthusiasm which his presence everywhere seems to inspire is the result of military coercion, is by no means certain. However, if the Prince, whose assumption of absolute authority was assuredly justified by the votes of the French people, be by the same votes placed upon the throne from which his uncle was hurled, it is not for other nations to inquire, nor can they determine, whether they were really dictated by gratitude or fear.

All that foreign states are concerned to know upon this subject is, the effect which a new order of things in France may have upon the peace of the Continent. Our apprehensions upon this head, if not banished, are allayed, by the explicit declaration of the Prince President, "L'Empire c'est la paix," and by the eagerness with which that sentiment has been echoed throughout the country. It is true, these professions may be hollow and delusive; or the French army, the supposed instrument of Louis Napoleon's schemes, may hereafter make him the instrument of their will, and force him into war against his inclination. All we can say, in reply to this suggestion, is, that, if war under a Napoleon III. be possible, under a République Démocratique et Sociale it would have been certain.

In a preceding article we reviewed the evidence taken by the Lords' Committee upon East-Indian affairs, with reference to the present constitution of government at the minor presidencies of Madras and Bombay. We now proceed to consider the opinions expressed by the witnesses upon another point connected with "the agencies for administering the general government of India," namely, the separate power of absolute recall of Governors now possessed by a majority of the Court of Directors. The few witnesses interrogated upon this point were pressed somewhat closely by one of their lordships.

Sir George Clerk, assuming that the Governor-General ought to enjoy the confidence both of the Crown and of the Court of Directors, and taking it for granted that the Crown possesses the power of recalling that high officer, thinks that the Court ought, in order to be efficient, to have also that power, and separately, because they are the only government body well known in India; to them is ascribed the credit of any good measures, and they are blamed for everything that is considered unsuitable to the institutions or government of India. Being asked whether, if the Crown directed a measure to be carried out which the Court disapproved, the latter having the power of recalling him, the Governor-General would not be placed in a dilemma, Sir George replied that it is an objection to any system of double authority, that, when exercised without accord, it must cause some embarrassment, and that, in an empire like India, it must be hopeless to expect any mode of administration that can be altogether free from a possibility of encountering embarrassment in some parts of its machinery. The Court of Directors, comprising a proportion of men well versed in the affairs of India, and acquainted with the feelings and prejudices of the people, should be enabled to exercise such a power, if they thought the government of India was endangered by measures about to be pursued by the Governor-General, as might avert so great a danger. He admits that, supposing the Governor-General to be carrying on a successful war, under the orders of the Crown, it would be attended with great objection, and would not conduce to its dignity, for the natives of India to see him suddenly superseded in his authority. But this is a difficulty, he observes, which could very seldom be practically felt; and even then he can conceive circumstances under which, for the safety of the Indian empire, it might be desirable that that power should be exercised by those who best understand India, and the feelings and prejudices of the people. Supposing the Board of Control to force the Secret Committee (which is bound by law to obey its directions) to send out orders to the Governor-General distasteful to the Court of Directors, which he should put in execution; apparently, the Court might supersede him for executing orders which they had sent out to him in their own names. But, the witness added, "I do not see where is to be found the certain means of preventing the possibility of that, combined with the perfect discharge of their trust by a body which is in part responsible for the security of India." That is the only reason, in his opinion, why the Court should have the power of recall: without that, they would be powerless in such an emergency as he supposes possible. The law was framed, he says, with the intention of securing the concurrence of the two parties interested in the government of India; if the Court were to be deprived of the power of recall, there would be no means of securing the concurrence of the two parties, and the entire government of India would be given to the Board of Control.

Having declared this opinion, Sir George was pressed with sundry questions intended to show the inconveniences that might attend the exercise of this power. He admitted that, if a Governor-General were recalled, in the case previously supposed, his supersession would not affect the orders issued by the Court by direction of the Board, which would still be carried out by his successor, if he thought the measures right; and in that case, the Court would be under the necessity of recalling him also. He admitted that, in fact, the government of India is in the hands, legally, of the Board of Control, represented by the President; that to give to any body the substantial power of thwarting measures which another body has the legal authority to order, must be liable to lead to occasional embarrassment; that it would be very desirable if there could be prompt unanimity on such a point as the recall of Governors between the two bodies; that nothing is more important in India than to maintain the authority and position of the Governor-General, and if, in the circumstances supposed, there was a possibility of insuring unanimity, mity at once on such a question, it would be far preferable that he should not be recalled otherwise than by the concurrence of the Crown and the Court, than that the power should be vested in a single body. He admitted, further, that a Governor-General, who felt that he had lost the confidence of the Court of Directors, would be very much embarrassed in the discharge of the duties intrusted to him by the two authorities, and that that embarrassment can be felt solely in respect to the power of recall possessed by the Court. But he does not see how this can be avoided. Nevertheless, although he thinks the power of recall cannot be denied to a body like the Court of Directors, containing in it men the most qualified to pronounce upon every important question relating to India, and which is held responsible by the public for its security; yet he thinks that, in exercising that power, they should give the fullest reasons, to enable the public to know the grounds upon which they decide.

Sir Herbert Maddock, being asked whether he considers that the power possessed by the Court of Directors, of recalling a Governor-General without the approval of the Government, is advantageous or otherwise, answers in the following terms: "I have expressed generally a decided opinion, that it is an inconsistent and anomalous position of affairs, that the Court of Directors, though they are not empowered by law to exercise any other independent functions of government, and are in every other respect, excepting their patronage, subject to the control of an officer of the Crown, should possess the power of recalling a Governor-General, contrary to the will of the Crown."

To the same question, Mr. W. W. Bird replied, that it is very undesirable that, on a point of so much delicacy and importance, there should be any public disagreement between the home authorities which may lead to a collision of opinion; and if it is supposed that the recall is likely to be followed by any sweeping change of policy, it might be attended with very serious consequences; it also places the functionary on whom it devolves to take temporary charge of the office in a very painful and embarrassing situation. It would be very desirable, he thinks, that the matter should be discussed in secret, and the Court's decision be carried out with the concurrence of both authorities, or that the law should be altered.

Mr. Lestock Reid thinks this power ought to be retained; that it is necessary to uphold the authority of the Court, who possess very little power, and he would be sorry to see that little diminished. He does not think the Court would exercise the power of recall in cases where they did not know whether the act which displeased them was done of the Governor-General's own accord, or under instructions from the Government in England; they ought not, he says, to exercise it, unless they had all the means before them of forming a proper judgment upon the subject: if, whilst anything important was uncommunicated and unknown to the Court, they exercised the power, they would act wrongly. Supposing the Queen's Government in England, and the Governor-General through the Secret Committee, to take a certain political line of conduct, which is not approved by the Court of Directors generally, he thought that, upon principle, the Court should not have the power, independently, and against the will of the Queen's Government, to recall the Governor-General, — that is, in cases where the measure in dispute is known only to the Secret Committee; but where there was a collision between the Queen's Government and the Court, either party should have the power of recall, independent of the other; that is, as the concurrence of both is necessary to the appointment, so their concurrence should be necessary to the continuance. He can conceive circumstances in which the Court might use the power to punish a Governor-General for that which is not his fault, but the fault, in their eyes, of the Home Government, because that is the only remedy which the Court have against the persistence in measures which, in their opinion, would endanger the security of India. Supposing, at the present moment, that the Queen's Government should desire to carry on the war with Ava so as to annex Pegu to our dominions, and the Court of Directors should be of opinion that no annexation should take place, the Governor-General could not please both, and might be recalled by either; but the witness cannot conceive that that would be a case in which the Court would exercise the power of recall. Mr. Reid admits that, if it were known in India that the Court were averse to the policy prescribed by the Board to the Governor-General, in the conduct of the war with Ava, and that the Court had the power of recalling him, it would greatly weaken the local government.

The opinion of Mr. Mill is, that it is "proper and necessary" that the Court of Directors should have the power of recalling a Governor-General.

These are the sentiments, somewhat discordant, of the witnesses (all Company's servants) examined upon this important point by the Lords' Committee. Since the preceding portion of this article was written, the evidence taken by the Commons' Committee, who have classed their inquiries under the same identical heads, has issued from the press; and we find that a few additional witnesses were examined by them, though very briefly, with reference to this question.

Mr. Shepherd and Mr. Willoughby consider that this power of recall is essential to the maintenance of the authority of the Court of Directors; and Colonel Sykes deems it indispensable for the efficiency as well as the dignity of the Court. "Cases might occur," he observes, "where the Ministers themselves might desire that the Court should have that power: the Governor-General has usually a Parliamentary connection with the Ministry; he may not satisfy the President of the Board, and he may not satisfy the Court of Directors; but the Minister for the time being, agreeing that he ought to be recalled, may not think it politic to give his sanction to a recall, from dislike to offend the Parliamentary connections of the Governor-General."

Sir H. Maddock was subjected to a long and searching examination by several members of the Commons' Committee upon this point, and his answers carry his objections further. He argues that, in the case of the viceroy and representative of the Crown in India, where the power and authority of the Board and the Court come into collision, the one willing one thing and the other another, the East-India Company should yield. "The first minister of the Crown and the President of the Board of Control," he observes, "are at least as responsible as the Court of Directors for the maintenance of our empire in India, and for the general good government of that country, and therefore, wherever there may be a difference of opinion upon a point so important as the continuance in India, or the recall, of any particular Governor-General, I consider it most wise.

and expedient that the responsibility should rest with the first minister of the Crown and the President of the Board of Control, rather than with the Directors of the East-India Company."

Giving the fullest weight to the arguments in favour of the existing system, we confess that, though they make a strong case for a concurrent voice on the part of the Court of Directors, they fall very short of satisfying us that their retention of the separate and absolute power of recalling a Governor-General, without assigning any reason, and without responsibility to any authority whatever, is either necessary or defensible. The strongest, almost the only, ground upon which Sir George Clerk places the necessity of confiding this power in the Court is, that the Directors should have the means of arresting any measure about to be pursued by the Governor-General which, in their judgment, would endanger our authority in India. But for this purpose the power is altogether ineffectual, inasmuch as the mere recall of the Governor-General would leave the orders under which he was about to act in full force, and his successor, even if a civil servant of the Company, would be bound to carry them into execution. The only effectual mode of arresting such injurious orders is for the Secret Committee to refuse in the first instance to send them out, and the Board, in that case, would be utterly powerless, without the interposition of a court of law, and a virtual appeal to the public. Had this course been adopted when the Affghan expedition was in progress, that calamitous transaction would never have stained the annals of the Indian Government.

We agree with Mr. Willoughby that it is not enough to object to this power that it is an anomaly,—our Government in India being a compound of anomalies;—but when, in addition to its anomalous character, it fails to accomplish the very object for which its retention is desired, and which may be attained by a simpler existing process, and when it punishes a great officer for performing his indispensable duty, prescribed by a Committee of the Directors themselves, whilst it lowers and weakens the Government of India in the sight of states with whom it has to deal, the reasons against the continuance of this power seem irresistible. There would be much force in the observation of some of the witnesses, that this power is beneficially lodged in the Court of Directors because they are versed in the affairs of India, and acquainted with the feelings and prejudices of the people, but for the fact that the Court have a better means of bringing their knowledge to bear upon the Board through the Secret Committee (consisting of three of the most experienced directors), who, we are told, do make representations to the President of the Board, verbally and in writing, when they differ from him in opinion, though he is not bound to notice them. In such an extreme case, however, as would justify the recall of a Governor-General, it would be incumbent upon the Secret Committee, in our opinion, not merely to remonstrate, but to refuse at all hazards to send out a despatch which, in their judgment, would endanger the safety of India.

It has been suggested that more latitude of resistance should be given to the Secret Committee; but Mr. Secretary Melvill has stated an objection which applies, as it appears to us, with equal force to the power of peremptory recall,—upon which subject Mr. Melvill's opinion (for some reason or other) was not asked by either committee. "It has occasionally occurred to me," says that very able and experienced officer of the Company, "that it might be desirable to give to the Secret Committee a similar power of remonstrance to that which the Court of Directors possess in public matters; but mature reflection induces me to doubt whether the advantages of any such change would not be counterbalanced by the disadvantages of it. Important political questions, involving war, must, I think, always be left to the Government of this country."

THE EAST-INDIA CHARTER ACT.

The Select Committee of the Commons appointed to inquire into the operation of the Act 3 & 4 Will. 4, c. 85, reported, with the Minutes of Evidence, as follows:—

"Your committee having deemed it to be advisable for the more complete investigation of the extensive subject referred to them to divide it under the following separate heads, viz. :—

"1. The authorities and agencies for administering the government of India, at home and in England respectively:

"2. The military and naval establishments of India—character, extent, and cost:—

"3. The income and expenditure of the British Indian empire, showing the produce of the territorial revenues, and of all other sources of income; and the modes of assessing and levying each, in the respective presidencies and districts; also, the progress of trade and navigation in India:

"4. The judicial establishments of British India, European and native; the modes of administering justice, civil and criminal, and the working of the system, as exhibited by tables of trials, appeals, and decisions:

"5. The measures adopted, and the institutions established and endowed, for the promotion of education in India:

"6. Works of local improvement executed, in progress, and now under consideration:

"7. Ecclesiastical provision for the diffusion of Christian spiritual instruction:

"8. Miscellaneous topics of inquiry:

"Have pursued their inquiries under the first of these heads, viz., that which relates to 'the authorities and agencies for administering the government of India at home and in India respectively,' and have taken the evidence thereupon, which they now report to the House.

"The labours of your committee being necessarily interrupted by the approaching prorogation of Parliament, they direct the attention of the House to the favourable tenour of the evidence with respect to the operation of the Act 3 Will. 4, c. 85, so far as it regards the administration of the government of India by the East-India Company, as trustees under the control of the Crown.

"It is apparent, however, that one only of eight heads of inquiry has hitherto occupied the attention of your committee; the inquiry under the remaining heads, which are very important, ought, in the opinion of your committee, to be pursued in the next session of Parliament."

The last paragraph was added on the motion of Sir James Graham. A motion, by Mr. Hume, to leave out the words "the favourable tenour of," in the preceding paragraph, was negatived, being supported only by Mr. Cobden.

A motion made, in the course of the inquiry, by Sir E. Colebrooke, suggested by Mr. Hume, "that there be laid before the committee all papers and correspondence that passed between the Court of Directors, the Board of Control, and the Government of India, relating to the recall of Lord Ellenborough from the office of Governor-General of India," was negatived by 17 against 2.

Colonel Sykes, in support of his suggestion to the Committee of the House of Commons on Indian Affairs, that power should be given to the Court of Directors, in Secret Court, of recording their opinion respecting the declaration of war, and carrying on warlike operations, in India, declared his belief that, had such power existed, "the Affghan war might probably never have taken place;" and stated that, up to the date of his examination (20th of May last), "the Court of Directors had no knowledge whatever of the origin, progress, or present state of the war in Burmah."

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Special General Court of Proprietors was held at their House, in Leadenhall-street, on Wednesday last, for the purpose of taking into consideration the following resolution proposed by the Court of Directors :—

"That, as a testimonial of the gratitude with which the East-India Company must ever remember that the glorious career of the Duke of Wellington commenced in India, and that the consolidation of the British power there was greatly promoted by his brilliant achievements, a marble statue of that illustrious commander be placed in the General Court-room."

Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., Chairman of the Court of Directors, took the chair.

The Chairman said :—I have now to acquaint the Court that it has been specially summoned to take into consideration the resolution of the Court of Directors, which will now be read.

The resolution was then read by the secretary.

The Chairman.—In presenting for your concurrence the unanimous resolution of the Court of Directors to erect a statue of the Duke of Wellington in this room, I feel that it would ill become me to offer any reasons, much less to urge any arguments, in support of a proposal which must at once commend itself to the judgment and feeling of every man. (Hear, hear.) It has pleased Almighty God to remove the Great Duke from this earthly scene. Full of years, and covered with glory, he descends to the tomb mourned, not only by his country, but by the civilized world. No testimonial is required to perpetuate the memory of his matchless deeds—they are imperishable; but we call to mind with honest pride and heartfelt gratitude that the career of the illustrious Duke commenced in India. (Hear, hear.) More than half a century has elapsed since, as Colonel Wellesley, he commanded in the trenches at Seringapatam; he then administered, with consummate skill, the government of Mysore; soon after achieved the victories of Assaye and Argaum, and dictated treaties of peace by which the British power in India was upheld and consolidated. (Hear, hear.) It is in commemoration of services thus rendered, that we propose to place here a statue of the departed hero, thus marking, as far as it is in our power to mark, our gratitude for the benefits which, under the blessing of Divine Providence, the Duke of Wellington conferred on that portion of the British empire committed to the government of the East-India Company. I feel that it would be unsuited to the occasion to add another word when presenting for that cordial approbation, which I am sure it will command, the resolution which I now propose.

The resolution was again read, and

The Deputy Chairman (Mr. Russell Ellice) said :—After the chairman's speech, in which I entirely concur, it will not become me to dwell on the important public services of the great man we have just lost, and to whose memory, as a tribute of our regard, we propose to raise a statue. What the whole of India owes to the Duke of Wellington is now so much a matter of history, that I will limit myself to formally seconding the resolution, adding only the expression of my own deep feeling of gratitude for the services rendered by the Duke of Wellington, and of regret for the irreparable loss which the country has sustained. (Cheers.)

Mr. Lewin.—How is the cost of the statue to be defrayed? Is it to be defrayed by the members of this Court, or out of the territorial revenues of India? If from the latter, then you will be voting a statue to be paid for by persons who know nothing of the Duke, and who care nothing for him. I believe that the people of India have no regard for our rule, but that, on the contrary, it is hated and detested from one end of India to the other. (Murmurs.) Yes, I thoroughly believe it. I have no objection to a statue being raised to the Duke, but I think it derogatory to us to express our own feelings at the expense of others; and I fancy that the friends of the Duke of Wellington will hardly be gratified by a testimonial voted by this Court, but paid for from another source.

The Chairman said :—Considering the high position which the hon. member has held in India, I can only say I have listened to his observations with the deepest regret. I think that the best course I can pursue, and I hope it will be followed by the rest of the Court, will be to abstain from answering those observations. It is, however, my duty to reply to the question put by the hon. proprietor, and I inform him that the expenses of the statue will be met out of the territorial revenues of India. (Hear, hear.)

Mr. Twining.—As one of the oldest proprietors, I hope I may be excused for saying that I could not conceive any occasion when a vote of this Court should be carried with more entire unanimity than on the present. To pretend to enter on the character and claims of the Duke of Wellington, would be perfectly preposterous and idle on my part. Your hon. chairman has summed up those claims in a manner which precludes the necessity of enlarging on them, and I am happy to think that the statue of the Duke of Wellington will be placed in this court, where I have so often heard it admitted that the best interests of India have been promoted by the conduct and gallantry of the noble Duke. I hope, then, that long after I shall have ceased to take any part in the meetings of the proprietors, those who will assemble within these walls hereafter, will feel themselves animated by the best sentiments on contemplating the features of a man who has been universally revered, and whose great principle of life has been one which we might all apply to ourselves,—that every man should be governed by a strong sense of duty. (Hear, hear.) I give my most cordial assent to the resolution.

Mr. Clark said :—Nothing could be more appropriate, more full of feeling, and more true, than what has fallen from the hon. chairman. I therefore do not rise to prolong the present discussion, but to express my regret that there should be even one member of the Court of Proprietors who will not hold up his hand with the rest this day, or, at any rate, propose that the money for the statue should not be appropriated out of the national revenue of India. I sincerely regret the speech of the hon. proprietor (Mr. Lewin), and I hope and trust that upon such an occasion as the present the hon. proprietor will withdraw his opposition. We have precedent after precedent for the proposed course of proceeding; for how have all those statues which we see around us been paid for?

Mr. Wedding.—I have heard enough of the chairman's speech to be satisfied that very little need be said on the proprietors' side of the court in support of the motion before it; but I am unwilling to let the resolution pass without observing that it was in India that the illustrious Duke first earned his military renown. It was there, too, that he first gave the proof of those transcendent talents which have elicited the praise and admiration of the world; and, by a rare and admirable combination of qualities, he was enabled to be alike firm in council and in action.

Captain Shepherd observed that one hon. proprietor (Mr. Lewin) had alluded to India. He (Captain Shepherd) had never had the honour of serving the East-India Company in India, but he had had opportunities of knowing the feelings of the people there, and he believed that if it were possible to collect the voice of the people of India from one end to the other, not a single person would be found to concur in what he regretted to hear fall from the hon. proprietor. (Cheers.)

The resolution was then carried, Mr. Lewin's hand being the only one held up against it.

The Chairman grieved to see that the resolution had not passed unanimously.

Mr. Gray.—Will not the motion be recorded as carried with one dissentient only?

The Chairman.—I shall direct the secretary so to record it.

Mr. Lewin.—Then it should also be recorded that a great many proprietors were not present in the court.

The Court then adjourned.

MAPS OF INDIA.—The Directors of the East-India Company have caused to be lithographed, with a view to assisting the Parliamentary inquiry into the operation of the Charter Act, outline maps, representing by distinctions of colour the different native states, and specifying the superficial area of these states, and their population. It appears that the total area of the native states is 691,695 square miles, and their population 52,156,237.

HYPOTHECATION OF GOODS.—The amount of loss sustained by the East-India Company on remittances by the hypothecation of goods since 1st May, 1834, is 13,508*l.*, of which 10,666*l.* was sustained in 1847, the year of commercial distress, when the amount by which the net sale proceeds of the goods fell short of the bills of exchange drawn against the respective consignments was 12,968*l.*, and only 2,322*l.* has been recovered.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULA RAILWAY.—The directors of this company have just issued their half-yearly report. It states that the whole line between Bombay and Calcutta is now under contract, in three separate portions, and the works are in various stages of progress, promising completion according to the several agreements. It is expected that the first portion of the railway, from Bombay to Tanna, will be opened for traffic early in the ensuing year, and a supply of engines, carriages, and other rolling stock has been forwarded to Bombay sufficient for the opening. In the despatches last received, dated Bombay, September 1, the chief resident engineer reports as follows :—"Of the permanent way, about four miles of double line, and 16 miles of single line, are laid nearly three-fifths of the entire length upon the contract, and five-ninths of the ballasting is spread, and I expect that the whole line will be laid by the end of November, or early in December." The whole capital of 500,000*l.* has been paid into the treasury of the East-India Company, and the guarantee interest is now accruing upon the total amount. The surveys for the extension of the railway beyond Callian across the Ghauts into the interior have been completed. The accounts for the half-year ending the 30th of June last show that 485,185*l.* had been received, including 99,145*l.* in Bombay; and 193,521*l.* expended, including 111,794*l.* in England, and 81,726*l.* in Bombay; leaving a balance in hand in England of 274,245*l.*, and in Bombay of 17,419*l.*, together, 291,664*l.* The total amount disbursed during the half-year ending the 30th of June was 24,297*l.* in England, and 42,547*l.* in Bombay; together, 66,844*l.* The interest account shows a balance in hand of 10,624*l.*

THE EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY COMPANY received notice on the 15th of October from the India Company, that a guarantee of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. will be accorded them on the new sum of 1,000,000*l.* to be raised to construct an extension line to Rajmahal, the other conditions being the same as those of their existing grant. This 1,000,000*l.* will be altogether independent of any further guaranteed capital that may be required for the completion of the original line from Calcutta to the Ranegunge collieries. The option of subscribing at par will be given to the proprietors of the old shares.

THE RAILWAY ACROSS THE ISTHMUS OF PANAMA is now (September 21st) complete to the village of Barbacons, twenty-five miles of the road—rather more than half-way—and decidedly the worst half of the line. Out of the twenty-five miles, at least twenty are through a continuous swamp, all of which is laid on piles about six feet apart, and driven twenty and twenty-five feet before a foundation could be obtained.

ABD-EL-KADER.—The liberation of this African chief from his long and unjust confinement is thus announced in the Moniteur: "The Prince has marked the end of his tour by a great act of justice and national generosity—he has restored Abd-el-Kader to liberty. This act has long been decided in his mind; he wished to carry it into effect as soon as circumstances should permit him to follow, without any danger to the country, the suggestions of his heart. At present, France has too legitimate a confidence in his strength and his rights not to show herself great towards a vanquished enemy. In returning to Paris, the Prince stopped at the Château d'Amboise, and, having seen Abd-el-Kader, informed him of the end of his captivity." It appears that the chief is to be taken to Broussa, in Turkey, there to reside (apparently under the surveillance of the Sultan), with an allowance from the French Government. The ex-Emir swore on the Koran that he would never attempt to disturb the rule of the French in Africa, and that he would submit, without any ulterior design, to the will of France. The Times states that, "previously to the liberation of Abd-el-Kader, negotiations had been carried on by the French Government with the Porte for the purpose of obtaining the consent of the Sultan to the reception of the Arab chief in his dominions. Broussa had, accordingly, been named by the Porte as the most suitable place of residence, that being the city to which prisoners of State and disgraced officers of the Turkish Government are usually sent; but it would appear from Louis Napoleon's speech at Amboise, that Abd-el-Kader is to be considered as a free resident at Broussa on parole. It is a remarkable circumstance that the intention of the President to liberate the Emir had been strongly opposed by all his advisers, civil and military, and they imagined that he had yielded to their remonstrances. It was only a few minutes before the interview at Amboise that Louis Napoleon informed General St. Arnaud, the Minister at War, that he was going to set Abd-el-Kader at liberty on the spot. Such is the tenacity of purpose and the secrecy of resolution which characterize the present ruler of France."

PITCAIRN'S ISLAND.—The Lords of the Admiralty have received a despatch from Rear-Admiral Moresby, dated Aug. 12, reporting his visit to this island and its interesting community. He says: "It is impossible to do justice to the spirit of order and decency that animates the whole community, whose number amounts to 170, strictly brought up in the Protestant faith, according to the Established Church of England, by Mr. Nobbs, their pastor and surgeon, who has for twenty-four years zealously and successfully, by precept and example, raised them to a state of the highest moral conduct and feeling. Of fruits and edible roots they have at present abundance, which they exchange with the whalers for clothing, oil, medicine, and other necessities; but the crops on the tillage ground begin to deteriorate; landslips occur with each succeeding storm, and the declivities of the hills, when denuded, are laid bare by the periodical rains. Their diet consists of yams, sweet potatoes, and bread-fruit; a small quantity of fish is occasionally caught; their pigs supply annually upon an average about 50 lb. of meat to each individual; and they have a few goats and fowls. Their want of clothing and other absolute necessities is very pressing, and I am satisfied that the time has arrived when preparation, at least, must be made for the future, seven or eight years being the utmost that can be looked forward to for a continuance of their present means of support. The summary of the year 1851 gives—births, 12; deaths, 2; marriages, 3. On their return from Tahiti, they numbered about 60, of whom there were married 13 couple; the rest from the age of 16 to infancy. Mr. Nobbs was anxious to avail himself of my offer to convey him to Valparaiso, and thence enable him to proceed to England, for the purpose of obtaining ordination. At a general meeting of the inhabitants their consent was given, provided I would leave the chaplain of the Portland (the Rev. Mr. Holman) until Mr. Nobbs returned."

THE BABIS OF PERSIA.—The late attempt to assassinate the Shah of Persia was made by two persons who belonged to the religious sect of the Babis. This was the only confession they made in spite of the inexpressible tortments of the rack; and, though their muscles writhed under red-hot pincers, though their bones were crushed with screws, still their lips remained closed, and all they said was, "We are Babis." The Babis are schismatics, and they pray to the Prophet; but prefer their prayers in a manner somewhat different from the devotional exercises of orthodox Moslemism. This sect was founded, about fifteen years ago, by a man named Bab, whom the king ordered to be shot. The most devoted among his followers fled to Sengain, where they were attacked by the king's troops. It was believed that all of them, men, women, and children, had been put to the sword; but intolerance has always the same effect, and Babi doctrines took root and spread apace, and at this moment there is not a town in the kingdom without its congregation of secret Babis. The Government adheres to the system of persecution, and the heretics have consequently many opportunities to assert the purity of their faith by martyrdom. The Prophet Bab himself told his disciples that the road to Paradise lay through the chamber of torture. If this be true, there is no denying it that the present Shah is very kind to the Babis, for he does his best to send them to heaven. His last decree treats of the utter extermination of the heretics. Now, considering the peculiar character of Oriental ethics, nobody could find fault with the Persians if the poor sectarians were simply and quickly put to death; but the manner in which the capital sentence is executed, the circumstances which precede the last blow, the tortments which consume the body until life ends in a last horrible convulsion—these are so revolting, that the very thought makes one's blood run cold.—Köln's Zeitung.

THE UNITED STATES JAPAN SQUADRON was to comprise the following vessels:—The Vermont, 100 guns; the steamer Susquehannah, 9; the Mississippi, 10; the Princeton, 10; the Macedonian (razée), 30; the Plmouth, 20; the Falmouth, 20; the Saratoga, 20. "From this list," remarks the New York Herald, "it will be seen that, as far as metal is concerned, the expedition will be truly formidable. It is not, of course, contemplated to use force towards Japan, unless her conduct should be of such a nature as to demand it. But, although Commodore Perry will proceed to that country with the most peaceable intentions, it must be remembered that we have already serious complaints to make, which call for immediate redress. By a barbarous policy of Japan, our seamen who may chance to be wrecked upon her coasts are instantly seized, put in cages, and kept in a state of the most wretched imprisonment for an indefinite period. Such treatment would not for a moment be submitted to from any civilized nation. Who can doubt that, were England or France to imprison American citizens who might be shipwrecked on their coasts, ample satisfaction would be demanded and enforced? And the fact that Japan is in this respect a barbarous nation, forms no more exemption in her behalf than the natives of the South Sea Islands can claim, who seize, roast, and eat our sailors, because they like the savoury viand. But, inasmuch as Japan is comparatively a weak country, our Government, notwithstanding the enormities which Japan has practised, and is daily practising, towards our citizens, desires to have them stopped in a peaceable and friendly manner. It will, therefore, be Commodore Perry's duty to endeavour to effect an arrangement by which those abuses will be put an end to, and also, if possible, to open friendly commercial intercourse with them. In order to effect this, a sufficient force must be placed at his command to carry with it that respect which semi-barbarous nations always pay to power, where, without it, eloquence would be thrown away."

INDIAN BEGGARS.—A correspondent of the Times, under the signature of "An Indian Observer," and who appears to be a native of India, calls public attention to an evil which we lately noticed, namely, the number of Indian beggars in London. He says:—"I freely entered into conversation with several of these unfortunate countrymen of mine, and inquired the cause of their leading such a life. By some I was informed that they were brought to England by gentlemen, who, on their arrival, after making them a trifling present, left them to get back to India or live here as they best could; the masters of others had died and left them destitute. Others said they had been brought over by captains of ships, and were obliged to beg, as they could do nothing else, and were unable to obtain a passage home. They had gone to the Lord Mayor and the East India-house, to solicit the means of returning home, but were equally unsuccessful in each instance. I was told that many of this unfortunate class had perished through want of proper nourishment, and from being exposed to the inclemency of the winter without sufficient clothing. On mentioning this subject to some English gentlemen, I was told that my poor countrymen were mostly idle vagabonds, who would rather beg than work, and that they would not return even though they had the opportunity, and that, in this free country, nobody could compel them. On hearing this repeatedly asserted, I determined to make myself more fully acquainted with the real circumstances of these 'idle Indian vagabonds,' as I have heard them called, and ascertain the true cause of their degraded state. With this view, I visited some of their dwelling-places, which I found situated in the most miserable lanes and alleys of London. Their rooms were mostly without furniture, and their beds were bundles of straw. I also learnt that what they obtained from casual charity was, on an average, about 6d. a-day. Every one of them expressed at least a strong desire to return to India."

THE EGYPTIAN RAILROAD, between Alexandria and Cairo, is advancing rapidly; it is fully expected that a portion, as far as the Nile, will be completed by next year.

THE DRUSES.—Letters from Beyrout of the 29th of September announce that, in the event of the Druses manifesting further opposition to the Sultan's orders, the Seraskier, at the head of 15,000 men, had resolved to attack them. This extreme measure would not, however, be resorted to until the great caravan, with provisions for the pilgrims of Mecca, had attained a position of safety from the attack of the Druses, who would pillage it if hostilities had commenced. At present they have retired to the most inaccessible parts of the Hauran. In the meantime the Seraskier has ordered several of the Druses to his camp. The last intelligence from Damascus announces the defeat of the insurgents in the Hauran, but they had retired into the rocky fastnesses of Ledja; so that the rebellion is not over.

ARISTOCRATIC EMIGRANTS.—Amongst recent emigrants to Australia are a son of the Bishop of Exeter, who is gone out as a settler near Melbourne; and the Hon. and Rev. Baptist Noel's son, who is gone out to practise at the Australian bar.

Francis Macnaghten, Esq.

Charles Otway Mayne, Esq.

William Rothery, Esq.

Capt. Samuel Thornton, R.N.

Brodie McGhie Wilcox, Esq., M.P.

AUDITORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.;

William Oxenbrough, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.

Solicitors.—William Henry Cooterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1882, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year
20		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	12th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1847.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

NOTTINGHAM LACE FOR INDIA.—

From the "Times."—"We have reason to believe that the general adoption of lace for summer curtains which is taking place will lead to a very extended use of lace for summer tapestry. The light, elegant, and cool appearance of the fabric, combined with its extraordinary cheapness, are its strong recommendations."—Vide article, Nottingham.

The "Times" Newspaper, in its impression of July 29th, says,
"No emigrant should venture to sea without

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE for SEA-SICKNESS."

Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS

HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The bristles being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2s. EACH.

Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back?
Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium," or Handleless Hair-Brush.

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches.
2, MIDDLE ROW, HOLBORN.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS, a most

EFFECTUAL REMEDY for ERYSIPELAS.—Mr. Joseph Craven, of No. 1, Brownlow Cottages, Stonehouse, Plymouth, had been severely afflicted for more than three years with that most dreadful disease, erysipelas; his sufferings were incredible, and although he received some of the best medical advice, he could obtain little or no relief. Almost despairing that he should ever be cured, he determined on giving Holloway's Ointment and Pills a trial, and by a little perseverance with them, he is now completely restored to health, and strongly recommends these medicines to others so afflicted. Mr. G. Williams, chemist, of 19, Edgecumbe Street, Plymouth, can verify this case.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

LADIES' & GENTLEMEN'S DRESSING CASES.—

MECHI, 4, Leadenhall Street, London.—His STOCK possesses peculiar advantages, both in quality and price. There is a general complaint that the internal fittings of dressing cases are often very inferior. Those who purchase at Mech's will be sure of having everything of the best, because he has long been celebrated for the superiority of his cutlery, and has bestowed equal pains in bringing to perfection his tooth, nail, hair, and shaving brushes, and other necessities. In fact, he considers it essential that each article in a dressing case should be perfect in itself, so as to render the whole useful and complete. Catalogues gratis. The largest assortment in London of papier maché manufactures, and the usual stock of articles suited for presents. Mech's peculiar steel razors, 7s. and 10s. per pair. FINE HEAD of HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds constantly announced for promoting the growth or reproduction of the human hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period; whilst ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, continues on the increase in public estimation; and the successful results of the last half century have proved, beyond question, that it is endowed with singularly nourishing powers in the growth and restoration of the human hair, and when every other known specific has failed.

This celebrated oil is now universally acknowledged to be the cheapest, and superior to all other preparations for the hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of existence, strengthens weak hair, produces a thick and luxuriant growth, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachia, it is unfailing in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. A small pamphlet accompanies each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life.

Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle are the words, ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, in two lines. The same are engraven on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 25,000 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 30, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

VARICOSE VEINS, WEAKNESS, &c. &c.

HUXLEY'S SURGICAL CAOUTCHOUC ELASTIC

STOCKING, KNEE-CAPS, ANKLETS, &c., which have been tested in the hottest climates, and proved invaluable in all cases where support is necessary. They are drawn on with ease, as an ordinary stocking, and perfectly porous. They produce a pressure equal and permanent in every part, and not a muscle of the limb is impeded in its free and healthy action. They are now recommended by every London practitioner of eminence, and may be ordered through Messrs. JOHN WOOLLEN and Co., Bombay (of whom prospectuses may be obtained); Messrs. THE MILITARY HISTORY

THE DUKE OF WELLINGTON IN INDIA.

In this sketch of the Duke of Wellington's early career, compiled from original authorities, his Military Acts are elucidated by a perspicuous narrative of the political transactions with which they were connected, relieved by biographical notices, anecdotes, and incidents. The work presents, likewise, a succinct view of the most remarkable features of the Marquis Wellesley's administration in India.

"Messrs. Allen and Co. have published the History of the Wars of the late Duke of Wellington in India, in a popular form, and at a cheaper rate, as befits their speciality. It enters more largely into the Indian exploits of the deceased than the general biographies of him hitherto published; but that is clearly an advantage, rather than a defect, inasmuch as his military genius was first displayed in India, and his military reputation consolidated by the famous battle of Assaye. The narrative terminates with his resignation of the military and political powers confided to him at Seringapatam, 24th June, 1804; and fitly concludes with the flattering address of the native inhabitants of that city to the departing hero. This little volume, the careful compilation of which is obvious, and the authority, therefore, undoubted, cannot fail to find favour in the eyes of the public—European and Indian, but especially the latter. Its cheapness, moreover, recommends it in the strongest degree to notice, by making it perfectly accessible to all classes."—Observer, October 24th.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have but little to add, in respect to the progress of the war in Burmah, to the intelligence embodied in our last Summary. The latest accounts from Rangoon were brought to Calcutta by the Company's steamer Tenasserim, which left that place on the evening of the 2nd of October. No communication of importance from the advanced division of the army had been received up to the date of the Tenasserim's departure. The steamers Nerbudda, Damoodam, and Lord William Bentinck arrived off Rangoon, in company with the Tenasserim, all safe, on the 1st.

On the 16th September, the first detachment of troops started from Rangoon for Prome, conveyed by the steamers, and on the 26th, the last portion of the first division followed in the same manner, consisting of the 18th Royal Irish, H.M.'s 80th, the 35th Madras N.I., and a field battery with two 8-inch howitzers, and details of sappers and miners. General Godwin, with a company of the 4th battalion artillery, left in the steamer Proserpine on the 24th. The second brigade would, it was hoped, be able to follow in three or four weeks' time. General Steel, with the Madras reinforcements, had arrived; part also of the additional brigade from Bengal, under Sir John Cheape, as well as Admiral Austin. The weather had been wet, squalls and rain occurring in great severity about the 22nd. Brigadier-General Sir John Cheape had accompanied General Godwin; Brigadier-General Steel therefore commanded at Rangoon. Admiral Austin had gone up towards Prome in the Pluto steamer. The expected reinforcements to the army of Ava were gradually arriving at Rangoon from Madras, Calcutta, and Kyook Phyou.

The reports respecting the enemy were vague. It was reported that Prome had been strengthened. A large gun had been mounted in a prominent site, but this was all that could be seen of the movements of the garrison, from the steamer stationed a little below Prome, which used her large 32-pounders against the Burmese wherever they showed themselves. The surveying brig Krishna had been stationed off Puzendown, with a party of marines and seamen from H.M.'s ship Winchester on board, it having been reported that a large party of the enemy from Pegu intended making an attack on the place.

The following letter from a correspondent of the Friend of India contains some information upon this head :—

"Regarding the preparations for resistance which the Burmese are making, you will be not a little surprised to learn, when their warlike reputation is remembered, that they are making none, at least in the vicinity of the Irrawaddy, which are not utterly contemptible. The war, in fact, has dwindled to a farce. As far as I can learn, I believe there are no impediments whatever to the passage of our vessels from Rangoon to Ava. I understand 2,000 Burmese are to be stationed at Mee-day, about 40 miles above Prome; but they are not there yet. At the latter place there are 500 stationed in the town and the adjacent hills; but without any artillery. They must now deplore the loss of the 23 heavy guns which the steamers captured there on their first visit. About six miles from Prome, inland, is Ethay Me, a town of considerable importance, I hear. Bandoola, as we call him, has taken up his position there, with the remnant of the Acow toung force, and some new levies, in all about 7,000 men, with 30 pieces of ordnance of various calibre. The latter I do not entirely believe, though my information is good in most respects; probably jinjals are included. I know they are very much pressed for guns, and no wonder, when we remember how many have been captured. The men are intrenched, and not stockaded in the approved Burmese style, which probably they begin to find rather expensive. All the expelled Woonas have collected at Ethay Mu, whether for the purpose of mutual condolence or what, I am unable to discover. The Commodore's friend, the Dalla Woon, is one of the number. The Shaydoun Woon, the ex-Governor of Rangoon, who accused our officers of being intoxicated, and by his insolence and ignorance brought on the war, is now numbered amongst the dead. He had been some time in ill health, and circumstances were not calculated to restore him."

An officer of one of the Bombay steamers, it is said, went some distance up the river at Martaban, and attacked a body of inoffensive Burmese there (without any provocation), firing on them and slaying them.

A letter from Rangoon states that some charges were got up against the Dalla chief, which could not, however, be substantiated: the chief was accordingly acquitted.

It appears that Moun Chouk, the chief at Shou Ghen, is endeavouring by every means in his power to conciliate the inhabitants of Pegu.

The Straits Times contains intelligence from Siam which may ultimately prove of importance. It is said that the young king has issued orders for the collection of an army of 50,000 men upon his frontier, which will move in two divisions, one directed towards the Burmese frontier, and the other towards the north, to subdue certain rebellious tribes. The writer adds that the troops have been "extensively drilled" by Captains Impey and Knox. It is not probable that the young king, who is better acquainted than any man in his dominions with the extent of British power, should have resolved to assist his hereditary foes at Ava, and it may be presumed that he hopes, in the general dismemberment of the Burmese empire, to obtain a share. The wild region between his own dominions and the Sitang is probably the object of his ambition, and in that case our territories in Pegu, instead of being bounded by a number of petty tribes, will be contiguous to the dominions of Siam. He appears not to be indifferent to the acquisition of military renown, and besides having three armies in the field, one in Cambodia and the two mentioned above, he is fortifying the river below his capital, to prevent the approach of armed steamers. This precaution is not, however, directed against the British, as he is expecting the arrival of Sir J. Brooke, in the character of British ambassador, and is repairing a house for his reception.

Our north-western frontier appeared to be quiet, but there are reports of combinations among the tribes, and it is asserted with some confidence that our authorities have resolved on a cold weather campaign. The Delli Gazette states that the Governor-General and the board of administration in the Punjab have come to the determination of effectually rooting out the wild hordes that keep that frontier in a constant state of disturbance.

An event of some interest is announced in one of the up-country papers, namely, that young Dhulleep Sing, the late sovereign of the Punjab and chief of the Sikhs, has, to all appearance, become a Christian. He has not yet been baptized, but he had appeared in church at Mussoorie, Bible and Prayer-book in hand, and behaved with the greatest propriety. The journalist who records this occurrence seems to apprehend the possibility of its creating dangerous discontents among the people of the Punjab, and exciting uneasy suspicions of compulsory proselytism in the minds of Indian princes.

Intelligence had been received at Bombay from Afghanistan, down to the 15th of July, stating that Ghoolam Haider Khan, governor of Ghuzni, was at the head of the troops of Dost Mahomed, numbering 15,000 men, and had reached the neighbourhood of Kelat-i-Ghilzie. On his approach the whole of the tribes of that vast tract of territory hastened to pay their respects to him. The Candahar sirdars, who had taken that place, were in the greatest consternation, and had commenced repairing the fort and citadel of Candahar, on which they were expected shortly to fall back.

The accounts from Oude and the Deccan speak of the affairs of those two native states as being in their customary state of disorder.

The rest of India was quiet.

The latest advices from the Cape of Good Hope, to the 11th September, inform us that the Caffre war still lingers on. Fort Grey had been twice attacked by the rebel Hottentots, who were repulsed by the garrison,—and this is the sum of the intelligence. The real cause of the Governor's short stay on the other side of the Kei is said to be the impossibility of procuring forage for the horses.

BENGAL.

BURMAH.

The advance on Prome, we are delighted to learn, has already commenced. A few troops have been sent up to occupy an island below that town, and about 2,000 men were under orders to embark for it on the 18th of September, under the personal command of General Godwin. He was then to return and take a second detachment of equal strength with him. Admiral Austen accompanies the general. For several days previous to the 15th of September there had been extraordinary activity in all departments of the service, and the ease and rapidity with which arrangements were made for transporting six or seven thousand men in a single week to Prome, with all necessary stores and ammunition, did infinite credit to the officers at the head of departments, and showed the inestimable advantage which we derive from our steam flotilla.

No authentic information could be obtained of the proceedings or the designs of the king. It was, however, the general opinion of the Burmese that there would be a strong effort made to resist us at Prome or in its vicinity; that in case of defeat the enemy would fall back on Ava, and there concentrate the resources of the empire for the final struggle. Intelligent Burmese state their opinion that it is contrary to the custom of their kings to fly from the seat of government during a war, and that if the monarch were to leave his palace he would forfeit his crown. In their wars with the Chinese, they observe, it was the presence of the king at the capital which saved it from destruction. Several accounts concur in stating that the governor of Rangoon, whose oppressions occasioned our first visit to the town, has been put to death by order of the king, and that his whole family, consisting of forty or fifty individuals, have been destroyed, by cruelties such as Burmese only can inflict. It is also reported that the fugitive governor, who insulted the commandore, and brought on hostilities, has been put to death for not having annihilated the enemy at Rangoon. In all our letters, very great stress is laid on the duty of conciliating the natives of the country by sparing their religious edifices, which, since our advent, have been in some cases most wantonly levelled with the ground. Hitherto, in all our expeditions, the religious feelings of the people have always been sacredly respected, and the Burmese war should not be allowed to present the solitary exception to a rule which has smoothed our way to supreme power in Asia.—Friend of India, Sept. 26.

The Oriental steamer has just returned from Rangoon, having conveyed the 37th regiment of Bengal infantry to Arracan, and carried on the 5th Madras infantry to the scene of action. By this vessel we learn that all the troops, stores, and ammunition destined for Prome, had left Rangoon, in the various steamers. General Godwin was the last to quit it, and he proceeded towards Prome on the 25th of September. The whole force, consisting of between 6,000 and 7,000 men, would be assembled in the neighbourhood of that town in the first week of October. There the Burmese are supposed to have concentrated their force; the heights of Prome, which we might easily have occupied two months ago, have now been fortified, and we shall in all probability have a more severe struggle than we have expected; of the result, however, there can be no doubt. It is generally understood that the Burmese intend, if defeated at Prome, to retire upon the capital, and there to make a last stand for the defence of the kingdom. There is every reason to believe that the king is altogether ignorant of the great danger which is impending; he has been constantly deceived by the mendacious reports of his own officers, who have represented the Burmese troops as in every instance victorious. The court is torn with factions, but there is no faction which will venture to propose to the king the necessity of submitting to the humiliation of suing for peace. Even the capture of Prome will scarcely serve to open his eyes.

Meanwhile, the enemy is working his way down on the eastern side towards Rangoon. The Burmese general, Moung Kyouk Longe, remains at Siwey-gyne, eighty miles north-east of Rangoon, and the officer next in rank is at Pegu, with a force of about 9,000 men. Some days before the departure of the steamer, this officer sent down his men, and succeeded in digging up eight guns and thirty jinjals, in and about Rangoon, which the Burmese authorities had buried before their flight. These arms were carried off in safety to Pegu. The principal agent in the affair is now in custody, but the Burmese deserve no little credit for having managed the abstraction of the guns with so much secrecy and tact. The Burmese forces at Pegu are committing dreadful ravages in the country which is within their reach. Their movement towards Rangoon is marked by desolation. About the middle of September, two entire villages were cut off at no great distance from Rangoon. Indeed, it would almost appear as if the Burmese had some anticipation of the approaching annexation of Pegu, and had determined that we should obtain possession of a country entirely wasted by fire and sword. They are waiting for the subsiding of the waters to come down in bodies of two and three hundred, when they will sweep the country to the gates of Rangoon. Their agents are dispersed through the town, and working great mischief by their machinations. They have succeeded in creating an extraordinary panic among the townsmen, great numbers of whom have already left it and taken shelter at Pegu, because they have been informed that Rangoon is about to fall again into the hands of the Burmese troops, when they will all be executed as rebels. The outposts of the Burmese army are already within twenty miles of Rangoon.

While the enemy is thus sowing the seeds of revolt, the proceedings sanctioned by our own authorities serve to increase the general disaffection. The people complain that they are treated with less consideration than under their Burmese oppressors. Within fifteen days every native house in the town has been taxed twice over, in order to provide men, as it was said, for the boats required for the public service. The sum realized was small; indeed, compared with the alienation it was calculated to produce in the native mind, it was contemptibly insignificant. Yet it was not the amount of the tax which raised a feeling of irritation, so much as the insolence of the officials employed in collecting it. These evils will be at once cured by the capture of Prome, and the annexation of the country.—Ibid, Oct. 7.

ANNEXATION.

The Citizen gives us the following brief article. It is the most dismal and melancholy intelligence which has been announced since the campaign opened:—

"We fear that the signs of the times altogether betoken a resolution on the part of the Governor-General to be content with Pegu, for the present. We shall be very sorry to find this conjecture realized. The failure to march upon Ava will be sure to be construed by the barbarians with whom we have to deal into a confession of want of courage for such a step, and will lead to disastrous consequences. This has, we believe, been represented to Lord Dalhousie, by some who are well acquainted with the Burmese character, and his lordship is not insensible to the misinterpretation which may be put upon his moderation. At the same time, it is understood that moderation has been strictly enjoined from home, and Lord Dalhousie is anxious not to put forth his hand further than is consistent with the power of withdrawing it at his option."

If such has been the determination of the Governor-General, it must have been created by a desire to conform to those strict injunctions of moderation which the Citizen tells us have been enforced from home. Most unquestionably, no such fatal policy can have been suggested in this country. Lord Dalhousie is aware of the importance of capturing the capital of a kingdom in every eastern expedition. Nothing short of it can fully extinguish the hope, and the effort of continuous resistance, or bring the war to an auspicious issue, and thus prevent the recurrence of a subsequent war. One of the greatest errors of the last expedition was, our stopping short of the metropolis, and making peace forty miles below Amerspoora. Even the disavowance of two important provinces of the kingdom was insufficient to correct that error, and to repress the presumption which was created in the minds of the cabinet by the fact that the English had not planted their standard on its battlements. It is not our fault if we are on this occasion obliged to repeat the trite and commonplace remark that no Asiatic understands the principle of moderation, that it is invariably attributed to weakness or pusillanimity, and leads to presumption. Every transaction we have had with the natives for a hundred years has taught us this lesson, yet it is the first we forget on every new emergency. We are about again to try the effect of moderation on a barbarous court. Now, if the Burmese became presumptuous when we stopped forty miles short of the capital, to what extent will their arrogance and presumption rise when, after coming into the country with such power and resources as have filled their minds with dismay, we stop 240 miles short of Amerspoora, and refuse to march to the capital? It is scarcely possible to imagine a more calamitous mistake than that of neglecting to advance beyond Prome. We shall give the Burmese the strongest reason for refusing to make any peaceful overture, and prolong the war and its expenditure to an indefinite period.

The Citizen says, "it is thought that were we to march upon Ava, we might very likely find the golden footed monarch no where, and be obliged to annex from the very want of any one to whom to make restitution." For our part, though we have hitherto contemplated the annexation only of Pegu, yet, if the march to Ava should involve the annexation of the whole country, we see not that this would present any valid argument against that movement. Why should we shrink from the occupation of the whole territory, if forced on us, after the experience we have had of the ease with which new provinces are governed in India, when we have substituted the equity of our own proceedings for the oppressions of native powers? We shall be able to govern the whole kingdom with as much facility and success as we should any portion of it. There is no principle of cohesion in the component parts of that empire, no ancient and venerable associations which would make the presence of a stranger galling, except to the officers of Government, who live only to oppress. As soon as the throne is overturned, the people will fall naturally under the control of a new power, and repose with delight under the influence of its mild and equitable institutions.

While, therefore, we continue to vote for the annexation of Pegu, at all events, we are bound to observe that the annexation of the whole country, if circumstances should render it indispensable, presents no subject of alarm to the mind. There can be no doubt whatever that we are destined to take the country, and to keep it, in spite of the President of the Board and Secret Committee, and it is only a question of time; if we do not annex it now, we shall only render it necessary to have two bites at the cherry, instead of one.—Friend of India, Sept. 23.

We saw a letter from the India House dated August 24, received by last mail, which contained words to the following effect:—"I regret to observe the Indian newspapers recommending this odious annexation. We want no more territory—we have too much already;" and if the whole of the home authorities are on one side, and are obstinate and determined on the subject, Lord Dalhousie is not the man to beard or disobey his lawful superiors, however unwise he may consider their views,—and on this occasion assuredly most unwise they do appear. The Bombay Times has throughout its career been one of the most steady and uniform denouncers of annexation, but the annexations we denounce are those made dishonestly whatever be their character,—or those which, though honestly acquired, weaken our frontier, drain our finances, or distract our attention from the country to which it ought to be directed. Scinde is open to the whole of these objections,—the first being fatal where the others are wanting. There are many cases—and we consider the present one—where none of all the objections enumerated present themselves, and where extension of territory such as can be lawfully made, is in the last degree desirable. We never could comprehend the meaning of the phrase of the mass of our oriental empire becoming such as to be weak or dangerous from its magnitude or unwieldiness,—or see the slightest difficulty, if we governed wisely, justly, and economically, with a considerable simplification of the home portion of the machinery of government, why we should not rule from the Caspian to the China Wall with as much facility and effect as from Kurrachee to Calcutta. The government of the north-west provinces and that of the Punjab should seem just as well in hand, as much under the control of supreme authority, and at least as efficient, economical, wise, and just, as the administration of Bombay, Madras, or Calcutta: we feel, indeed, assured that neither of the authorities first alluded to have one-tenth of the acts of insubordination to answer for for which the last are responsible, and that in this case the saying "the nearer the kirk the further the grace," may be preceded by another, "the nearer the sovereign authority the further from dutiful obedience."—Bombay Times, Oct. 15.

Pegu and Martaban would prove of infinitely greater value than the millions sterling which our army might extort under the walls of Ava. Their possession by us would restore to Pegu its old predominance in the valley of the Irrawaddy, and deprive the court of Ava of all its resources. We should have possession of the teak forests, the petroleum wells, the rice-fields, the gnapees trade, and, though last, far from least, the idol manufactory. We should be paramount with the three last in our hands; all Burmah, both proper and improper, would be dependent on us for its dinners and its divinities, and with such a monopoly we certainly ought to make the country pay. The gnapee monopoly would be in itself a California. Gnapees is no other than fish cured in a peculiar way. It is the national condiment of both Burmese and Peguers, and is only procurable on the sea-coast. The Burmese are not patriotic enough to do without their gnapee, and they would to a man be forced to buy it from us, for with Pegu and Martaban in our hands they would have left to them no sea-board of their own. Then throughout the empire there is only one sort of idol which it is orthodox to worship, and this sort is manufactured within the limits of Pegu. We of course would not have the British Government trade in idolatry; it has incurred too much disgrace from this already. But the annexation of the territory containing the idol-mine would of necessity add to our estimation in the eyes of the idol-worshippers. And the natives would soon come to have a low idea of Guatama, who could not defend his own worship from foreign invaders.

We have here merely indicated a few reasons which lead us to believe that Pegu would pay us handsomely, and that its seizure would be a far heavier blow to the Burmese Court than any we could strike by a tedious progress to Ava, at a time of the year when an advance by water is out of the question.

There are those who would have the entire empire annexed at once. Now we have patience with men who talk about yielding to our "destiny," but none with those who would attempt to dictate to her. It may be our destiny to possess Burmah and Siam too. But sufficient for the day is the evil thereof, and destiny at present tells our rulers to look nearer home.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 8.

THE LONDON MAIL of Aug. 24th arrived at Calcutta on Sept. 29th, per Pottinger.

SILK MANUFACTURE OF LAHORE.—It is not generally known that numerous manufactures of silk, of considerable value, exist in Lahore, and that similar manufactures are carried on, to a much greater extent, in the neighbouring town of Umritser. The silk fabrics of Mooltan have been long known in Hindostan, because the Lohanee merchants purchased quantities at that place, on their way from beyond the Indus to Delhi, and thus widely disseminated a handsome article in the provinces subject to English rule, while the consumption in the Sikh capitals, by the well-dressed court of Runjeet Sing, and by his sirdars, many of whose military retainers were clothed in silk, gave ample and profitable employment to the numerous local weavers. Thus formerly, the article rarely found its way across the Sutlej. Besides this, the oppressive imposts at that time levied in the Sikh dominions must have materially kept down any spirit of mercantile enterprise that might have arisen in that direction. Mr. Cope, secretary to the Agri-horticultural Society of the Punjab, in an able paper laid before that society, states that the trade and manufacture in silk afford employment in Lahore to 935 persons, and in Umritser to 2,205 persons; and that the value of the silk, after passing through the hands of manufacturers of all classes, in both cities, is upwards of six lakhs of rupees. As the raw silk used is from Khorasan and Bokhara, Mr. Cope proposes to introduce the silk-worm into the Punjab. "The Government of India have bestowed," he observes, "a large amount of capital on, and devoted much attention to, the introduction of tea into this country, and success of no ordinary nature has attended their most useful efforts; why should they not open out a new, and equally important branch of industry, in their newly-acquired territories, whereby they may convert an indolent, and frequently mischievous, into an industrious population, and thereby secure the means of restoring a trade which is suffering a natural depression from the change which has taken place in the government of these provinces?" The society resolved that Mr. Cope's interesting paper be printed at the society's expense for circulation, and that a copy be submitted to the Board of Administration, with the view of suggesting this subject for their consideration, and that they be solicited to aid the society by taking any measures which may seem to them fit for the purpose of procuring the introduction of the silk-worm from Bengal into the Punjab.

ENSIGN CHESTER.—Letters from Simla inform us that the Governor-General has refused his sanction to the appointment of Ensign Chester to the Khelat-i-Ghilzie regiment. Considering that this young officer's commission dates back little more than two years, we cannot say that his lordship's objections are altogether unfounded.—Agra Messenger, Sept. 11.

FORGERY.—Police, Sept. 10.—Mr. W. T. Moyston, lately we believe an officer of H. M. 18th R. L., was placed at the bar on a charge of uttering a forged bill of exchange for 350*l.* on Messrs. Cox and Co. of London, purporting to be endorsed by Dr. O'Callagan. The bill was presented to Mr. David Mackinlay, a partner of the firm of Gillanders, Arbuthnot and Co., and cashed. The person in question stated to Mr. Mackinlay, that he had just returned from Rangoon, and wished them to negotiate a bill of exchange for 350*l.*, saying he had deposited in the hands of Messrs. Cox and Co., his agents, 1,100*l.* before leaving England; on these conditions the bill was cashed. Subsequently it was found to be a forged one. Dr. O'Callagan denies the signature to be his, and the prisoner has reserved his defence for the sessions. The case was finally committed.—Englishman.—Mr. Moyston was formerly of H. M. 75th. It is a painful case; he is a married man with a family, and was well known at Umballa a short time ago. His wife and child have fortunately left for England in the Plantagenet.—Delhi Gazette.

THE CALCUTTA MISSIONARIES have petitioned Parliament against the Abkaree system and the opium trade.

THE 38TH REGIMENT AT DACCA.—For some time past, there have been various notices in the public journals of the mortality which prevailed in the 38th regiment at Dacca. We have just received a more particular account of the state of the regiment, and the cause of disease, which we lose no time in submitting to public notice. The 38th regiment is now to a man lying prostrate in hospital, suffering from fever and ague of the very worst description. Many of the patients have two paroxysms in the course of twenty-four hours. They are reduced to a state of the greatest helplessness, and even the sepoy who were told off to attend upon the sick have been themselves attacked, and there is no one now to assist the poor creatures to a drink of water or to raise them from their cots. All the regiments hitherto stationed at Dacca have suffered from disease, but scarcely any of them to such an extent as the 38th. In the month of August, 376 were admitted into hospital, and since the last day of that month, the admissions have been 134 a week upon an average. Last year the 74th N.I. was obliged to call in all the station-guards, and to maintain only a quarter-guard in their own lines. This year the 38th has been obliged to adopt the same course,—a month earlier.—Friend of India, Sept. 23.

CONVERSIONS.—On the 18th September, an interesting baptismal service was held at the Female Orphanage, Circular Road. The candidates for the ordinance were three of the elder girls of the institution, originally under the care of Mrs. Anderson, and subsequently under that of Mrs. Yule. We understand that another young native, a pupil of the Free Church Institution, was baptized by the Rev. T. Smith, at the Free Church, last Lord's day morning.—Col. Christ. Advoc. Oct. 3.

COOLIE EMIGRATION TO BOURBON.—It appears that the French Government has applied to that of Great Britain to allow the question of coolie emigration from India to Bourbon to be reopened, with a view to the removal of the present restrictions.

EUROPEAN ZEMINDARS.—The Calcutta Gazette publishes the draft of an Act to "Remove Doubts as to the Liability of all Subjects of her Majesty to the same Jurisdiction as Natives in respect of public and police Duties and public Charges incident to the Holders of Land or their local Agents or Managers." In other words, European holding zemindaries are to perform the duties of zemindars.

THE STAMP DUTIES.—The Englishman states, that the produce of the stamp duties in Bengal has latterly fallen off considerably, and that the average of commission received by the vendors does not exceed nine or ten rupees a month.

THE "QUEEN OF THE SOUTH," on her return trip, after having been towed down the river, and remaining at Saugor two or three days to rectify her machinery, got at last to sea, but was obliged to put back once more, as the bilge pumps had become choked, exactly as they were when leaving Plymouth. The agent was compelled to send down 100 men to pump out the vessel, and she left Saugor on the following day.—Friend of India, Sept. 30.

THE CIVIL ANNUITY FUND.—We are happy to be able to state that the last mail brought the concurrence of the Court of Directors in the proposal made to them some time ago in regard to the Civil Annuity Fund. Every civilian in future will be at liberty to retire from the service at the end of twenty-five years with a pension of 500*l.* a year, added to such amount of annuity as he may be willing to pay for, provided it does not exceed 500*l.* a year more. It is also understood that the court will, in future, pay half the value of the additional advantage of quarterly and to date of decease payments. On the other hand, however, the valuation of the pensions is to be increased six per cent. The result of this arrangement will be, that annuitants will in future have to pay about Rs. 1,000 more for an annuity of 1,000*l.* a year than their predecessors.—Friend of India, Oct. 7.

A YOUNG CIVILIAN has been suspended under somewhat unusual circumstances. He has appealed to the Court of Directors, and if his appeal is rejected, he will of course be sent to England.—Ibid.

THE "ORTHODOX" HINDOO PARTY, in every part of India, appear to be girding their loins for conflict in defence of their hereditary faith. In Bengal the movement takes the form of Anti-Missionary publications, and quasi philosophical attacks on Christianity, generally distinguished by the ribaldry of Voltaire, without his acumen, and the virulence of Paine, without his fanaticism. In Bombay, a Hindoo gentleman, Crishno Shastree Satoy, intends to deliver Sunday lectures in a Hindoo temple, to which everybody is admitted, except Europeans and Christian converts. This gentleman undertakes to resolve any doubts his hearers may entertain; but we are not informed whether he means actually to hold a "disputation" in the style of the fifteenth century, or to convince his audience by his eloquence. These things make men enquire, and enquiry is all that we want.—Ibid.

EMIGRATION TO AUSTRALIA.—The Calcutta Chronicle understands that several officers of H. M.'s 96th regt. are about to sell out of the service for the purpose of becoming settlers in Australia.

A COURT-MARTIAL has been ordered to assemble at Umballa, to investigate certain charges brought against "the youngsters" of H. M.'s 75th regiment.

THE STATION OF UMBALLA, hitherto considered unusually healthy, has been severely visited with sickness. No less than 450 men of the 43rd N.I. are on the sick list, and nearly half the men of the European Company, while almost all the civilians have been compelled to leave the station.—De'hi Gaz.

MAJOR TIERNEY, 28th regiment N.I., retires on a bonus of Rs. 18,000. The regiment may now be considered one of the fortunate ones.—Lahore Chron. Sept. 29.

CHURCH AT UMBALLA.—Lady Gomm got up a concert at Simla, in aid of the Umballa Church Fund, when Rs. 12,000 were realized by the sale of tickets.

PRESBYTERIAN MINISTERS.—We learn that the Kirk Sessions of St. Andrew's are about forwarding a memorial to the Court of Directors for an augmentation to the number of Presbyterian ministers on the Bengal ecclesiastical establishment.—Hurkaru.

THE TENTH OPIUM SALE of the season came off on the 4th of October with the following results:—

Chests.	Highest.	Lowest.	Average.	Proceeds.
Behar ...1,920	1,195	1,160	1,177	2,260,550
Benares 880	1,200	1,190	1,195	1,052,275

SINGULAR AFFAIR.—One of the officers of a native regiment gave a bill for Rs. 1,500 in payment of a step. The bill was not drawn so speedily as it might have been, and in the interim the officer transferred his funds to Calcutta. When the bill was presented, there were "no effects." The moment the officer heard of this he paid the amount in treasury drafts. And yet his brother officers thought the affair dishonourable, and the commanding officer of the regiment supported the same view of the matter. The officer commanding the station took the other side, and thus the case stands at present.—Delhi Gaz.

KAMAOH TEA.—Government have again to congratulate themselves on the result of their tea speculation. We learn, that at the sale, which took place at Almora, on the 3rd of August, the following satisfactory proofs of the estimation in which Kamaoh tea is held, were furnished:—

Black Tea, Max. per lb.	Rs. 3 8 0
" " Min. "	" 1 8 0
" " Average "	" 2 7 1
Green Tea, Max. "	" 4 15 0
" " Min. "	" 2 0 0
" " Average. "	" 2 13 0

Thus it appears that nine shillings and nine pence per lb. have been paid for the fine green teas! When the prices realized in 48, 50, and 51, were mentioned by us, it was immediately remarked, and each time with equal accuracy:—"Oh! these are only fancy prices, and must fall." Instead of falling, they have risen. It is, however, a state of things that cannot continue very long. The increasing cultivation itself will bring the prices down.—Lahore Chron. Sept. 11.

A MYSTERY.—A singular transaction, in which a retired lieutenant-colonel, late of the commissariat, a high Government functionary, and a well-known contractor, have been parties, is shortly likely to become the subject of discussion in legal circles. It involves, it appears, some questionable proceedings that may not be considered quite creditable to those concerned.—Ibid.

MAJOR SHERER AND MAJOR EVANS.—We have heard from unquestionable authority that an ample and unqualified apology has been offered by Major G. M. Sherer, of the general staff, to Major D. F. Evans, of the same department, with expression of the former officer's sincere regret that he should ever have been induced to frame a charge which formed the subject of a late Court of Inquiry, held at Ghazee pore. The whole proceedings were laid before Government, and we are happy to see this termination to a very unpleasant affair, as it cannot fail to be received with satisfaction by the numerous friends of Major Evans, left in these provinces, where he was well known for many years, and his character respected.—Delhi Gaz. Sept. 29.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

ROORKEE COLLEGE.

Fort William, Sept. 24, 1852.—The Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to publish, for general information, the undermentioned rules for the admission of officers to the Roorkee College, as sanctioned in a despatch from the Hon. the Court of Directors to the Government of India, in the public department, No. 23, dated the 2nd June, 1852:—

1. European commissioned officers of the army under the rank of a field officer, will be permitted to study at the civil engineering college at Roorkee, on the following terms:

2. The candidate for admission must be qualified by acquaintance with his military duties, and by having passed the examination in the vernacular languages, to have charge of a company.

3. His application is to be addressed through his commanding officer to the principal of the college, who, after satisfying himself that the candidate is likely to profit by the course of study, will forward the application for the approval of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

4. Admissions to the college will take place from the commencement of March to the end of June. Applications should be forwarded so as to permit of the candidates joining not later than June 30th, after leave formally granted in general orders.

5. The duration of the first permission to study at the college will be till November 1st of the same year; but, if the progress of the student is satisfactory, and his conduct otherwise exemplary, the principal will be at liberty to forward his application to head-quarters, for permission to remain another year at the college with the sanction of the Governor-General in Council. No student will be allowed to remain longer than the November year after his first admission, unless on special sanction granted under peculiar circumstances.

6. The principal of the college may at any time recommend to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief, that an officer be remanded to his regiment.

7. Officers studying at Roorkee under these rules, will be required to pay ten rupees a month to the college library fund.

8. Officers who obtain permission to study at Roorkee College, will be considered "absent on duty," and will be so reported in the regimental returns.

MEDICAL CHARGES OF ARTILLERY.

Fort William, Sept. 24, 1852.—Under instructions from the Hon. the Court of Directors, communicated in paras. 14 to 16 of their military letter to the Governor of the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal, No. 123, dated 5th November, 1851, the Most Noble the Governor-General of India in Council is pleased to abolish the rule, by which a full surgeon is appointed as a matter of course to each brigade or battalion of artillery.

2. In future no posting of a surgeon to a brigade or battalion of artillery shall be made at any of the presidencies, unless an adequate medical charge of that arm be available for him at a station where artillery are permanently located. Artillery thus assembled together must (to form an adequate medical charge for a surgeon) consist substantially of two European or three native companies, or of one European and two native companies, or of the head-quarters and a European troop of a brigade of horse artillery. Any smaller detachment, with or without the head-quarters of a brigade or battalion of artillery, must form an extra charge of a medical officer already at the station where it is located; except in circumstances under which the Commander-in-Chief may, according to existing rules or usage, nominate an assistant-surgeon on the usual head-money, without staff salary, to a troop of horse artillery, or to a light field battery and company of foot artillery, so situated.

3. When artillery are employed on field service, one or more surgeons may be attached, at the discretion of the Commander-in-Chief, with general reference, when circumstances admit of it, to the preceding rule.

4. But at an army station, where the artillery present does not exceed the strength of a brigade or battalion, the senior surgeon should have medical charge of the whole of the artillery there located, whether horse or foot, the assistant-surgeons attached to troops and companies doing duty under him as in regiments of European infantry, and if in course of the relief, &c., the head-quarters of a second brigade or battalion should be ordered to such station, a surgeon will not be required to accompany them.

5. The surgeons of artillery drawing staff salary under these rules, will, as at present, receive also head-money for the European artillery under their medical charge at the usual rate of twenty-five rupees per hundred Europeans per mensem.

6. The general order by the Commander-in-Chief, dated 21st September, 1827, and 28th November, 1842, which direct medical officers of brigades and battalions to retain separate charge of the men of the arm to which they belong, are hereby cancelled, and at all stations where a detachment of artillery may be serving, equivalent to the strength of a wing, as detailed in the margin,* the senior assistant-surgeon serving with the detachment in the absence of a surgeon, will be appointed to the medical charge of

* A wing or its equivalent must consist of—

Two troops of horse artillery (even at Madras), or two companies of European foot artillery.

Or three companies of native foot artillery.

Or one troop of horse artillery and one company European foot artillery.

Or one troop horse artillery, or one European company of foot artillery with two native companies of foot artillery.

it and draw the staff salary for the wing; any other medical officers attached doing duty under his orders.

The Governments of Fort St. George and Bombay will issue the necessary instructions for arranging medical charges of artillery in those presidencies, conformably to the rules now promulgated.

QUALIFICATION IN NATIVE LANGUAGES.

By the Governor of Bengal, Oct. 1, 1852.—With reference to the notification, dated the 9th March, 1852, the Most Noble the Governor of Bengal has been pleased to direct that the reward of Rs. 1,000, allowed by the Hon. the Court of Directors to military officers attaining to the standard of qualification in the native languages therein laid down, shall not be granted to officers about to retire from the service. The object of the Hon. Court, being to stimulate officers to attain a higher degree of proficiency in the native languages for the advantage of the public service, cannot be attained if the proficiency of an officer is evinced only on the eve of his retirement.

MADRAS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Aug. 24th arrived at Madras on Sept. 26th, per Pottinger.

THE MURDERER OF LIEUTENANT JOHNSTONE, adjutant of the 3rd Madras Light Cavalry, who was assassinated at Jaulnah in April, 1851, has at last been brought to justice. Khader Khan, a private of the corps, was convicted of the crime by an European general court-martial, and sentenced to be hanged. The commander-in-chief (Sir R. Armstrong) confirmed the finding, but has commuted the sentence. He observes:—"The prisoner has been justly sentenced to suffer the extreme penalty of the law, for the crime of which he has been convicted; and as that crime was committed under the malignant workings of a truly diabolical heart, without extenuation or excuse, it would in ordinary circumstances have been carried into effect. But the awful suspense in which the prisoner has been kept during an imprisonment of sixteen months, alike torturing to body and mind, although unavoidable, has its influence with me, together with some other considerations, to exercise the power vested in me by law, and I therefore commute the sentence of death awarded against the prisoner, private Khader Khan, into imprisonment with hard labour and transportation for life. Whatever life may be to others, I feel it can be no boon to the prisoner; followed by the detestation of his comrades, and that of all good men, he will be placed beyond the means of doing further injury, and remain a wretched spectacle of a man deprived of liberty, working in fetters, away from all relatives and friends, dragging on an uncommiserated, hopeless, and wearisome existence, until death releases him from his troubles."

THE VASAREDDY CASE.—The Madras United Service Gazette says, that further proceedings in the Vasareddy case will shortly be commenced, and it is believed that the Board of Revenue will yield at once as far as regards the purchase of the estates; that is to say, they will resign the whole of this immense zemindaree, larger even than that of Burdwan, into the hands of Vasareddy Naidoo, according to the terms of the decree of the Privy Council. They will probably then endeavour to obtain the liquidation of arrears from the holder of the estate; but even in this, it is said, they will be met by a demand for mesne profits.

CAPTAIN GRIFFIN.—The same journal informs us, that the Court of Directors have replied to the memorial of Captain Griffin, who was removed from his appointment because he had failed to pass an examination in Hindoostanee, although the order had not reached him through the regular official channel, "praying for a reconsideration of the Governor-General's order, removing him from his appointment in the Nizam's service." The Court express a full approbation of the Governor-General's determination, but leave the matter in his lordship's hands.

GOLD IN SOUTHERN INDIA.—The Bangalore Herald, 21st September, publishes a letter, stating that gold has been discovered about seventy miles from that station, in the Chittledroog division. A nugget of gold, of the purest quality, had reached Bangalore.

RAJAH OF NAGPORE.—Intelligence has been received from Kamptee that the affairs of the Rajah of Nagpore are undergoing searching investigation by the resident; extensive changes in the mode of government are talked of, but nothing decided is known. The rajah's principal vakeel has been suspended, and a tour into the interior of the country by the rajah, accompanied by the resident, is on the tapis.—Athenaeum, Oct. 2.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON STANBROUGH has been placed in arrest by order of the Commander-in-Chief, upon charges growing out of certain imputed dealings with the late Sheristadar of Masulipatam, and a subordinate in the medical department.

THE MADRAS RAILWAY begins to "loom in the distant future!" Its outlines are, we are happy to say, somewhat more distinct than the hazy object described by the prophetic eye of the Chancellor of the Exchequer. The sanction of Leadenhall-street to the commencement of the work has been received, but to the Supreme Government has been reserved the selection of the particular line. Why Madras is not competent to decide in what direction a railway will be most serviceable, or what superior advantages for a correct decision Bengal may enjoy, it is not easy to say.—Athenaeum, Oct. 13.

BOMBAY.

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, SEPT. 25.

In the matter of Ballaram Gunput.—Mr. Dickinson, on behalf of a Hindu convert to Christianity, named Ballaram Gunput, applied for a writ of habeas corpus to be served on the relations of the wife of that person. The application had been made in chambers; but the Chief Justice had directed that, as it was a novel one, it should be brought forward in open Court. He then read the following affidavit: "I, Ballaram Gunput, of Bombay, a Hindoo of the Shenvee caste by birth, and a Christian by faith, make oath and say that, in the Christian year 1813, I, then being of the age of thirteen years, and professing the Hindu religion, was married to Pootlabae, then of the age of seven years or thereabouts; that, in the year 1850, Pootlabae, having arrived at womanhood, came to live with me and did live with me as my wife for about eighteen months, up to March last, when, on my refusing to conform to and join in the ceremonies of the Hindu religion, she, by the advice and instigation of her relations, left my house, and went to live with her mother, Keekee Bae, a widow, at the house of her grandfather, Bappoo Bhace Sooruthur, where she has remained ever since, and is now. And I further say, that, some time ago, after very long and mature consideration of the grave importance of the step I was about to take, I determined on renouncing the Hindu religion, and embracing the Christian faith; and on the 16th of September instant, I was admitted by baptism, received at the hands of the Rev. W. S. Price, a clergyman of the Church Missionary Society, a member of the Church of England; and that, since my renunciation of the Hindu religion, my wife Pootlabasee has remained closely shut up with her mother in the house of Bappoo Bhasee; that I have never been able to gain admission to her presence, or speak with her; that I am much attached to my wife, and that during the period hereinbefore-mentioned, in which we lived together as husband and wife, she evinced great affection for me, and we lived very happily together. And I further say, that I am very desirous of again enjoying the society of my said wife and resumption of my marital rights; and I believe, if I were enabled to see and reason with her, I might be able to overcome any religious scruples she may at present entertain in acceding to my wishes."

Mr. Dickinson supposed that the writ would be granted as a matter of course.

The Chief Justice said, on the contrary, had the application come regularly before him in Chambers, he would have refused it as a matter of course. He was at a loss to know what grounds could be adduced for granting the writ as a matter of course.

Mr. Dickinson said, the legal custodian of a wife was her husband. This principle was clearly laid down in the case of Cochrane, which he read, and referred to a case, which he stated to be exactly similar to the present, decided by the Chief Justice of Madras.

The Chief Justice said that Cochrane's case was very different from the present.

Mr. Dickinson confessed he could not see the great difference. In Cochrane's case it was clearly laid down that a husband was the proper guardian of his wife, unless she could show that she was entitled to live apart from him on account of ill-usage or other cause: this was the law of England.

The Chief Justice said he had formed his opinion on the point, and had entertained it for many years; and he felt not the slightest reluctance in refusing the writ of habeas corpus in this case. He would have made the same order in it when the case came before him in Chambers, but that he remembered that the passions and prejudices of the multitude were enlisted on one side, and very strong feelings also on the other, and, therefore, did not consider that it would be satisfactory to dispose of it in that summary manner. The restitution of conjugal rights could only be obtained by a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court, and that alone would have been sufficient ground on which to refuse the writ. The habeas corpus writ was a most important provision of the English constitution; but the most erroneous notions prevailed regarding it in this country. When the last writ of habeas corpus had issued from the Supreme Court, it was made matter of complaint by a portion of the public press, and even by members of the bar, that an immediate return was called for. But the principle which guided the Court was, that the object of the Habeas Corpus Act was to prevent illegal imprisonment; and wherever it was sworn that this evil existed, the writ issued at once, and an immediate return was of course called for. There was, however, one exception, which included most of the cases of this nature that came before Indian Courts—it was that of parent and child. A child adopts opinions contrary to those of his parents, and when the parent seeks to have his rights upheld,—rights which every father has by English law,—the will of the child is put forward in opposition to the rights of the father. In 1844, a Parsee case came before the Court, in which the learned Counsel (Mr. Dickinson) was engaged, and in which the Court laid it down that a father, whatever his religion might be, was entitled to be the custodian of his children, so long as his conduct was in accordance with the laws of morality, and that whoever interfered with parental authority did so at their own risk. In that case it was a Parsee converted to Christianity that sought to recover his child, and the consequence of the principle then laid down by the Court was, that the Christian father walked off in triumph with his child, much to the discomfiture of the native community. In the same year, the tables were turned; for a case came on in which the Court enforced the rights of a Hindu father in opposition to the will of his son, who was stated to be desirous of joining himself to the Christian faith,—the Court holding that the father was entitled to his control, custody, and moral government. This he held to be the principle of the English law. The judges of the Supreme Court at Calcutta had taken a different view, in a case in which, in opposition to the rights of the father, they allowed a child to remain under the protection of Dr. Duff. He was, however, glad to see that this contrariety of opinion had subsided; for, in the recent case of Brigadier Warren, the judgment of the Calcutta Court contained the expression of the principle which he had advocated, and in equally strong terms. In laying down the right of a father to the custody of his child, he would say nothing as to the age of the child—he was indisposed to set up the rights of mere chicks. With regard to the present case, the application was by a young man of twenty-two for a writ of habeas corpus to bring up the body of his wife, who was sixteen years old. Now if the principle laid down by him, that the object of the writ was to prevent illegal imprisonment (except in the exceptional case of father and child), was sound, it followed that there were no grounds for the present application, inasmuch as it had not been sworn that the girl was detained against her will. In England an affidavit of illegal imprisonment was necessary before the writ could issue. The case cited by Mr. Dickinson was quite different in its features from the present. In that case it was alleged that the wife had been illegally imprisoned by her husband, and the writ accordingly issued; but when it was found that the liberty she wanted was to go to masqued balls and to withdraw her children from their father,—and, in fact, to run away from him,—the Court took its course at once: it respected the rights of the husband, and ruled that, as he had not ill-treated his wife, she must return to him. The case decided at Madras, to which allusion had been made, certainly militated very strongly against the principle which he had laid down; but, with every respect for the opinion of Sir William Burton, he (Sir E. Perry) felt it his duty to say that he disagreed with it entirely; and he had thus no hesitation in refusing the present application. The applicant had his remedy by suing for the restitution of conjugal rights, and he could compel his wife in this way to live with him, unless she had valid reasons against it. Her objection at present to live with him was obviously his abjuration of the Hindu faith; and whether that reason was valid or not, this was not the time to decide. The question was too important to be disposed of in that summary way. He had no difficulty in dealing with cases like the present. He put to himself the case of a Christian family living in a country under Mahomedan rule—in Turkey for example. Now suppose that the husband were to become a convert to Mahomedanism, and to indulge himself in the luxury of four wives, and to wish his Christian wife to become the inmate of a harem along with three Mahomedan associates. In such a case he would ask what Christian wife would consent to her husband's wish? or what court of law would force her to live with her Mahomedan husband? Certainly, there was none that would. The same principle, in his opinion, was applicable to a Hindu wife, who could not live with her Christian husband without pollution. That such was his opinion might seem a melancholy fact to some of the gentlemen in Court; but it was an opinion in accordance with law; and he was convinced that the principle thus laid down by the law would be felt by calm judging men to be in unison with the dictates of common sense.

Application refused.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 8th arrived at Bombay on Oct. 9th, per Ajdaha.

Brevet-Major Clarkson, 12th N.I., who died at Ahmedabad on the 6th October, entered the service in 1823. He served with the 12th regiment during the campaign against Kolapore in the year 1827; in 1828 with a light field detachment in pursuit of the Ramoosee chief Oomeahjee, and with the regiment during the whole of the Scinde campaign under Sir C. Napier in 1842-43; was present with it at the Battle of Meeanee, 17th February, 1843; at the Battle of Hyderabad, 26th March, 1843; and in pursuit of Meer Shere Mahomed in June, 1843.—Telegraph, Oct. 16.

DISGUSTING QUACKERY.—Mustan Lateef Shah, a Mussulman widow of Kurrachee, charged a native before the magistrate of Bombay with stealing a box of money and medicines. When asked her profession, she said she lived by selling medicines, one of which was a panacea for all diseases. This medicine consisted of a "living Abyssinian boiled to death in ghee," which operation she had witnessed on Russian territory at the town of Sham,—El-Sham, or Damascus, we presume, is intended. The sale of this medicine had brought her wealth, and she confidently offered to cure the magistrates of any disease to which he might be subject.

MILITARY MISDEEDS.—The Bombay Times has an article on some instances of roguery in the army of this presidency. In one instance an Ensign Wigny is mildly told by the first judge of the Small Cause Court, that "young military men are careless in their money matters. You want to victimise poor people after contracting debts. This vice is common to young military men in Bombay." Another officer, "of honourable name," lately ordered some thousands of rupees' worth of goods from tradesmen, and promised to pay them on the very day on which he intended to leave the island, and would have escaped with his booty but for an accident. A third officer ordered a quantity of goods from different tradesmen, giving them all promises to pay, after he had applied for the benefit of the act.

NATIVE ATTORNEYS.—The Bombay Gazette states, that the question of the admission of native attorneys at that presidency has at length been decided. The local Government has, it is said, expressed to the Company's solicitor its opinion, that native attorneys ought to be admitted on the roll. Of course, the solicitor has the power of taking native article clerks, and the remaining attorneys of the Presidency have given up their opposition.

THE SUPREME COURT has resolved, for the future, to compel every plaintiff who arrests a defendant for an amount greater than that which is actually due, to pay the entire costs even of a successful action. "The Court," said Sir W. Yardley, "could not afford to throw away the only safeguard it possessed, to prevent the arrest of a defendant for more than what was actually due by him."

SIR ERSKINE PERRY, the Chief Justice, it is said, was to leave India, for good, in November.

THE BOMBAY ASSOCIATION, composed of the most respectable portion of the native community—Hindus, Parsees, Mahomedans, Portuguese, and Jews—have, it is stated, prepared a petition to both Houses of Parliament, which will be dispatched by the present mail. The business of the managing committee, presided over by Juggonath Sunkersett, Esq., is managed with great ability and prudence by the secretary, Dr. Bhaoo Dajee, a graduate of the Grant Medical College, and a very successful practitioner. The petition has been entirely drawn up by him. Its contents have not yet transpired, but we learn from a good source that its recommendations and requests are nearly as follows;—The abolition of the Board of Control and formation of a council for India, upon views very similar to those of Lord Ellenborough, so as to provide a responsible instead of an irresponsible Government for India. The dispensation of patronage and promotion in strict relation to merit—without regard, as at present, to the personal feelings or interests of the individual patron, and without regard to security. It also asks for provision for the admission of natives to higher appointments; the Charter Act of 1833—which provides that no native of India, or natural born subject resident therein, shall be disqualified from office by reason only of religion, place of birth, descent or colour—having remained altogether a dead letter. The abolition of councils at the minor presidencies is also supposed to be advocated: also a provision for submitting the conduct of the civil service, like that of the other servants, to inquiry, and if requisite, to punishment. The abolition of sinecure appointments. More liberal grants to education and works of public utility.—Telegraph, Oct. 16.

CEYLON.

The Colombo journals are filled with local matter of little general interest. We subjoin a few extracts from the Observer of Oct. 14:—

Subsequently to the departure of Archdeacon Bailey for England, his friends published, through the Ceylon Times, a correspondence which reveals good grounds for the compulsory retirement of the old clergyman, not on the score of his discussion of the Buddhist question, but in view of his ungovernable tamper and rebellious spirit, as revealed in his attack on the bishop in St. Peter's vestry, while the two dignitaries were rpled for divine service.

It is again rumoured that Sir George Anderson will shortly be promoted to the government of one of the Indian presidencies.

Mr. Cargenven and Lieuts. Webb and Larnox have each been fined $50. for an assault committed on Mr. Herwick, Deputy Queen's Advocate at Galle. A jury recommended the prisoners to mercy because they were "respectable gentlemen."

CHINA.

THE LONDON MAIL of July 24th arrived at Hong Kong on Sept. 29th, per Ganges.

We have again the usual monthly amount of report of battles fought between the government and insurgent forces—sanguinary by account, but bootless in apparent result. Governor-General Su still remains at Woo-chow (Wu-chau) in Kwangsi; Yeh has returned to Canton, and Pih kwei (of Barbarian discussion notoriety) has proceeded northward, some say to Peking, others to confer with She-shang-ah in Hunan. Tien-teh still maintains a position at Hing-ngan, a place not far distant from Kwei-lin-fu, in the north-east quarter of Kwangsi, and would appear to be in constant communication with evil-disposed spirits in the northern parts of the Kwang-tung province, whence we have repeated reports of plunder, ransack, and stoppage of river navigation. The main body of insurgents are in Hunan, and, so far as we can ascertain, are having it pretty well all their own way, working steadily up towards Nanking. The report of insurrection in Hoo-kwang (the conjoint province of Hoo-nan and Hoo-pih) is confirmed in the Peking Gazette of the 6th of July. The following translation from that journal has been furnished to us:—

"There has been an imperial decree, commanding the Board of Revenue to deliberate promptly on the easiest way to transmit 300,000 taels to the province of Hoo-pih, which sum has been requested by the viceroy of that province to meet expenses incurred in moving troops to repel the aggression of rebels from Kwangsi."

The insurrection appears to have spread westward, too, as well as northward, for, in the Peking Gazette, No. 60, there is an imperial decree regarding Kwei chow, and direction that no forces be moved out of that province until the rebels are driven beyond the borders. The same gazette contains a memorial from the viceroy of Hoo-kwang, reporting an engagement with insurgents from Kwangsi, who, having entered the department of Yungchou (mentioned by our correspondents some time last month), attempted to take the chief city, but were repulsed after two days' fight, with a loss of 300 men. Nine of the long-haired (rebels) were made prisoners and immediately ordered for execution. The day after the battle six men were apprehended on the hill, on suspicion of being spies, and, when the memorial was written, were under examination by the district magistrate.

We heard about the middle of the month that another attempt had been made on the life of the emperor—that his majesty was in great fear—had packed up his valuables all ready for a flight, and that a part of the royal palace at Peking had been destroyed by fire; all this, however, is wanting in confirmation, and there is not, perhaps, a word of truth in the whole of it. We give the reports just as we got them, together with another, that many chops of tea, on the way to Canton, had been laid under an embargo, and hence the reason for the comparatively small quantity brought in to market up to the present date. But this report is received with more caution than the others; some supposing that it is manufactured by the brokers for purposes of their own, whilst others account for the short coming by the last year's delay, in making purchases when teas were in plentiful supply.

The United States squadron (Susquehanna, Plymouth, Saratoga, and store ship Supply) are still stationed about the Canton estuary, awaiting orders, it is supposed, to proceed to Japan, whither it is said H. M's. Serpent will accompany them, if they go within the current year; hardly likely, however, now that the north-east monsoon has come round on us again.—Friend of China, Sept. 28.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

Major James Abbott, Boundary Commissioner in the Punjab, has communicated to the Asiatic Society of Bengal a paper, the result of careful exploration and local inquiries, "on the Sites of Nikaia and Boukephalon," as he writes the names of the ancient cities, founded by Alexander the Great, usually written Nicea and Bucephalia. From this paper, which is published in the Society's Journal, we shall make a few extracts.

"Abisares, we all know, was king of the mountainous Indies of the Punjab, i.e. either of Huzara and the mountain tract enclosed by the Indus and Hydaspes, or of that and of the Juppaul and Jumboo mountains. In the latter case, he probably held also Cashmere.

"Now, in invading the Assakanoi, Alexander had to cross the river Gouraios, difficult of passage, owing to its depth and current, and the round and slippery boulders in its bed. This river, says Arrian, is called after the people, Gouraios, of that country. The Gouraios, called to this day Gour, still dwell upon the Sohaut river, improperly called in some maps Loondi, and the river to this day bears, as one of several names, the title of Punjowra, from a town of that name on its bank, inhabited by the Gour tribe. Here we have an undoubted landmark. Again, the barbarians escaping from Massaga, designed to take refuge first in Ora, but eventually fled to Abisares. Alexander marched to Ora, and then besieged Bazira, and the fugitives from Bazira fled to the rock Aornos, whose roots (see Curtius) the Indus enters. It is manifest, therefore, that the river Gouraios, that Ora, Bazira, and Abisara, are all nearly contiguous one with another, and all near the Indus.

"After the capture of Aornos, Alexander entered deeper amongst the mountains, to settle the brother of Assakanos, who had carried thither some troops and many elephants. He then came to the Indus, and, ordering timber to be felled for boats, went throughout the country included between the Kophenos and Indus. This Kophenos is without doubt the Loondi, for Alexander had not crossed it, but had marched for it from Nikaia (a town probably near the present Julalabad). This country, therefore, is the Eusufye. Curtius states that he made seventeen marches from Aornos to the Indus, where he crossed. Such a tour, including the attack upon the brother of Assakanos, would bring him to the ordinary crossings at Attock.

"Now, when Alexander, crossing the Indus, had come to Taxila, the brother and ambassadors of Abisares waited upon him with tribute. It is therefore manifest that Taxila is near the Huzara mountains, and somewhere about the parallel of the Eusufye country; for had Alexander crossed the Indus below Atuk, i.e. at Nitab, Abisares had never troubled his head about him. Yet there are people who, because they find on the wrong side of the river Indus the valley Taik (which they hope to convert in Taxila), would make Alexander drag his army and war-engines during the hot winds over the difficult passes of the Kohaut mountains, only that he might get the worst roads and the worst ferries, and leave behind the most powerful of those he came to conquer. The Gamaxus, mentioned by Curtius, is probably the chief of Ghayti, a rugged district on the eastern border of the Indus, about eighty miles south of Huzara.

"Again, on hearing of the victory over Porus, Abisares sent to submit himself and kingdom to Alexander. Had this victory taken place at Pind Dadun Khan, it had scarcely threatened the safety of Abisares. It seems, therefore, almost certain that Alexander, after his passage of the Indus, skirted the mountains Huzara and Juppaul. But previous to deciding between the Jelum and Julalpoor routes, we have some arguments to examine.

"After crossing the Indus, Alexander halted at Taxila to refresh his army. Of Taxila, we only know that it was the largest city between the Indus and Hydaspes, and the capital of Taxiles, one of the two most powerful chiefs of that tract. But since Abisares sent his brother there with tribute, we infer that it was not far from Huzara; that in all probability it was a position menacing Huzara. And we also infer that it did not border the Indus, because Alexander sent Koinos (Conus) back from Taxila to the ferry of the Indus, with orders to break up the boats,—the larger into three pieces, the smaller into two,—and to bring them on carts to the Hydaspes.

"Now, had Alexander, with the main army, reached Tukht Purri, which some conceive to be Taxila, the danger for Huzara had for the present been past. Moreover, that Lower Tukht Purri, which is eighty miles from the Indus, appears to me inconveniently distant from the board of works. I think Hussein Ubdal, the delight of travellers upon that road, thirty miles from the Indus, and, until the last twelve years, the chief town of the Tarkhaili clan, from whom it was wrested by the Sikhs, a more probable locality; for although Taxiles (the Tarkhaili) was one of the two principal chiefs of that Doaba, yet we have no reason to suppose that he was king of Potawar, an immense tract abounding in warlike inhabitants. Gamaxus, we see, opposed Alexander, although Taxiles had submitted; and I am inclined to think that Taxiles' own territory was bounded eastward by Chehlo Jungi, between Rawul Pindi and Jain ké Sungh.

"However that be, there were two routes from either to the Hydaspes for the train of carriages containing Alexander's boats: the shorter to the present town of Jelum, the longer to the modern village of Julalpoor. Upon one of these places he must have debouched from the table-land of Potawar. Each had its ferry; but between the ferries there is no comparison; that of Jelum being infinitely more convenient and only one third the width of the Julalpoor ferry.

"Let us, however, suppose that he carried his pontoon train twenty needless miles by Julalpoor, and chose to encounter rather than shun the quicksands of the torrent Hurrund, which at that season (the monsoon) are a serious impediment to beasts of burthen and wheel-carriages. On arriving, he would have found Porus encamped upon the eastern bank of the Hydaspes, near the present village Duttoo Choor. It was the height of the monsoon, and Alexander there found the Hydaspes four stadia, or 833 yards (i.e. half a mile), in breadth, according to Curtius. But I measured it even in February, after a fall of rain, immediately above that point, one half-mile in breadth, and during the monsoon it is considerably more. Curtius also says it was thickly studded with islands, to which the youth of either army swam to skirmish. But at present, during the monsoon, there is not an island there. At Julalpoor, the salt-range comes down almost to the water's brink, and this is the case to the distance of eight miles higher up, affording Alexander such a bird's-eye view of the whole river, as had made it impossible for him to mistake an island for the main land. Neither Arrian nor Curtius indicates the flank to which Alexander's movement was made; but although several travellers have supposed that it was to his left flank, none has hitherto imagined it might have been to his right flank. Let us, therefore, examine the ground to his left flank; that is, further up the stream. So far as I can judge, it seems probable that the river there approached to contact with the mountain spur at Murraili and at Julalpoor: it has receded to the east, and left a slip of kándá land, varying from 400 yards to a mile. Now, if we measure eleven miles from Julalpoor in this direction, i.e. up the stream, it brings us to about Darapoor, where there is a ferry. Darapoor, an insignificant village, stands upon an old but small site, apparently that of a village, and is said to have been built about 150 years ago by one Dara Khan. The name signifies, 'the town or village of Darius.' Opposite is Russool, upon a very lofty cliff, beneath which, in the monsoon, a branch of the river flows. This cliff scarps to the west that rising ground, the last glacis of a long ridge of kunka and clay, of small altitude, which runs in a curvilinear figure from Blinleir, and has, at some remote period, joined the salt formation westward of the Hydaspes, ere severed by that river. It runs nearly south from Russool to the distance of two miles, melting there into the plain; from which rises the isolated lofty mound of Moongh, a considerable village. During the monsoon, immediately below the cliff of Russool, rolls the Hydaspes; but farther south, kándá land interposes, i.e. land subject to inundation, and utterly unfitted for the manoeuvres of chariots, or even of cavalry. The bed of the Hydaspes being here a shifting sand, it is impossible to conjecture what might have been its figure 2,000 years ago; islands are constantly forming and disappearing. But the character of the cliffs and heights of Russool is so remarkable, that it could scarcely have escaped the minute detail of Arrian's description. Nor does it seem probable that such a master of strategy as Alexander should have selected a landing-place immediately below a cliff and height, where a hundred of the enemy could have set at defiance his whole array. Still less is it probable that, with such a bird's-eye view of the river as is afforded by the mountains on Alexander's side, that great captain could have mistaken an island for the shore. Moreover, the cliff at Russool is so lofty, that the whole river lies beneath an eye stationed there. No island, or series of islands on the further side could have masked Alexander's preparations from the scouts of Porus. On landing, he would have found himself beneath a cliff, crested with armed men. The great breadth of the river there admits of a boat crossing but twice between daybreak and night. To have landed 14,000 men, one-third cavalry, would have required an absolute fleet of boats and rafts. These boats were conveyed on carts to the spot, and hidden behind the island nearest shore. The rafts were hidden in the bushes; but they must have been launched at least a day or two previous to the embarkation, in order to prove their capacity for the enterprise. This could not have been done at Darapoor, without giving the alarm at Russool.

"We have yet to examine a circumstance which has led several to think the crossing must have been in this neighbourhood. Curtius has stated that, in crossing the tremendous torrent of the Hydaspes, the waters, beaten back, betrayed the existence of hidden rocks: in many places, he adds, further on, but one boat was wrecked, being driven by the current against a rock. Now, although I think that Quintus Curtius's history is generally faithful, yet there are proofs sufficient that he occasionally dealt in poetical embellishment of facts. This is seen in his episode of Alexander and Charus, at the storming of Aornos, and in the fine speeches which he puts into the mouths of his heroes. Any person gazing upon the torrent of the Hydaspes, during the monsoon or previously, must have been struck with the sight of these 'unda repercussæ,' this boiling up of the waters, as if hurled back from sunken rocks. Nevertheless, there are no rocks below Luhri. There are none at Darapoor, nor at Julalpoor, although the mountain almost dips its foot into the wave. The reason of this seems to be, that the sandstone is so soft and friable, that it melts into sand under the influence of air and water. Arrian is quite silent about the rocks. The inference is, that none existed then, any more than now. A boat may have been lost against the hard solid bank of the island, as well as if it had been rock. The current is so violent at that season, that a boat, with fifty or sixty men in it, is easily smashed against any obstruction less soft than water. As the boiling of the waters exactly imitates their action over sunken rocks, so would any of the solid banks near Bhoona represent the power of a rock to the hapless boat dashed against it. It must also be remembered, that at Bhoona, where I suppose the crossing to have been made, the bottom is a pavement of large boulders, firmly cemented together. Above this originally lay shingle of smaller sizes, to the depth of several feet, now carried away from the channel, but still appearing in the islands, and often forming solid shoals, quite as dangerous as rocks. Occasionally, masses of this shingle become disjected from the shore, and form, for months, huge, rock-like cubes; until gradually their cement is dissolved by the elements. Thus it will be seen that Curtius's expressions will apply better to the Hydaspes above Jelum, than to the river above Julalpoor. The 'insula crebra,' if they ever existed at the latter spot, are no more to be seen. It is impossible for any one looking on the river there, with Arrian and Curtius before him, to imagine he contemplates the scene described by either.

"Let us next refer to the landing. On accomplishing this, we have no mention of Alexander finding the corps of observation sent against him posted on a height from which it was necessary to dislodge them. On the contrary, he dashes at them with his cavalry; but at Russool, the kānda (or inundated land) will not admit of cavalry movements, and no cavalry can charge up cliffs and rugged ravines. Porus, too, marched until he found himself upon soil firm enough to admit of cavalry evolutions. This could not have been the kānda; he must needs have been upon the sandy soil above it; in which case, Alexander had so decidedly the advantage of ground, that it is wonderful that Arrian has not noticed it. The chariots of Porus, according to Arrian, were encumbered in the mud; according to Curtius, they were swamped in quicksands. But, as already observed, the kānda land could not have been the battle-field; no charioteer would have ventured upon it. And as for the high plain above the cliffs, the soil being sand, bound together by grass, becomes the firmer for saturation: so that here again the features disagree. What, then, is the evidence that Alexander crossed the Hydaspes at the Russool ferry? Mr. Williams's argument is, that Strabo has said: 'The Macedonians marched to the Hydaspes from the Indus in a southern direction.' But from the Indus there is no carriage-road south, nor is Julalpoor south of Atuk, though both Jelum and Julalpoor lie from thence very many degrees south of east.

"Burnes says, 'It has been conjectured that Julalpoor is the scene of Alexander's battle with Porus, &c. There is much to favour the opinion; for, in the words of Curtius, we have islands in the stream, projecting banks, and waters dilated; yet the mention of sunken rocks seems to point higher up the river, near the village Jelum. The high roads from the Indus pass this river at two places, at Julalpoor and at Jelum; but the latter is the great road from Tartary, and appears to have been the one followed by Alexander. The rocky nature of its banks and bed here assists us in identifying the localities of the route, since the course of the river is not liable to fluctuation. At Jelum, the river is also divided into five or six channels, and fordable at all times, excepting in the monsoon. About fifteen miles below Jelum, and about 1,000 yards from the Hydaspes, near the modern village of Darapoor, we hit upon some extensive ruins called Oodeenuggur, which seem to have been a city that extended three or four miles. The traditions of the people are vague and unsatisfactory, for they referred us to the deluge, and the prophet Noah. Many copper coins are found, but those which were brought me bore Arabic inscriptions, &c. General Court found a fluted pillar near this site, with a capital very like the Corinthian order; it however had a Hindu figure upon it. At present, there are no buildings standing, but the ground is strewn with broken pieces of kiln-burnt bricks and pottery, the latter of a superior description. On the opposite side of the Hydaspes to Darapoor stands a mound, said to be coeval with Oodeenuggur, where the village of Moongh is built, at which I procured two Sanskrit coins. There are also some extensive ruins beyond Moongh, near Huria Badshapoor. I do not conceive it improbable that Oodeenuggur may represent the site of Nicaea, and that the mounds and ruins on the western bank mark the position of Bucephalia.'

"So far Burnes. I did not hear of the ruin of Oodeenuggur when in the neighbourhood, or should have visited it. Burnes rates it at fifteen miles below Jelum; but Darapoor is nineteen and a half miles as the crow flies, or by the road about twenty-four miles. If, therefore, it be Nikaia or Boukephala, Alexander's camp must have been at Julalpoor, which Burnes had just before proved to be improbable. Alexander's flank movement, according to Arrian, was 150 stadia, or about eleven miles.

"Again; the foregoing extract would lead any one to suppose Moongh opposite to Darapoor or Oodeenuggur; but Moongh is, in fact, seven miles below Darapoor; and the only argument Burnes could himself observe for the Grecian origin of either was, that Oodeenuggur yielded Arabic coins and inscriptions, and Moongh two Sanskrit coins. General Court, however, found a fluted pillar, with a Hindu figure in relief, near Oodeenuggur; and therefore it is probable that it was inhabited previous to the extinction of the Scytho-Greek architecture, which seems to have lasted till the invasion of Mahmood Ghuznavi. Oodeenuggur and Moongh, both very old Hindī names, are probably antecedent to Alexander's invasion, and give not the slightest hint of having succeeded to older Greek titles.

"With regard to the resemblance which Burnes supposes between the Hydaspes at Julalpoor and Curtius's description, it seems to have arisen from Burnes trusting too much to memory. Curtius nowhere says that the Hydaspes opposite Alexander's camp showed 'projecting banks and waters dilated.' On the contrary, he says, 'Nec pro spatio aquarum late stagnantium impetum coarcebat; sed quasi in arcum coarctatis ripis, torrens, et cæcis ferebatur.' Nor did it curb its impetus on account of that spread of waters widely overflowing, but, as if compressed by the rushing together of the banks, roaring and strangled it was hurried past.' As to islands, Curtius says not that there were islands, but that the stream was thick sown with islands, which is certainly not the case near Darapoor or Julalpoor.

"As for the site below Russool, called Gunja, it does not yield a brick, or a building-stone, or a Greek coin to research. A space, about 500 yards in length by 70 wide, is marked with fragments of pottery, and therefore in all probability has been a village site; but it is not in the slightest degree elevated above the soil, like all old sites in India, and the potsherds do not penetrate below a depth of two feet. A mud village may have been here, but could not have existed above one, or at most three, generations, or the accumulation of soil would be manifest. The Sikh trench of circumvallation, made after the battle of Chillianwala, has ploughed this site up throughout its length, and exhibited its contents. The natives call it Gunja, or the market: they have no tradition regarding it.

"Why, then, is this Nikaia? the city that was built to mark the greatest and most memorable of Alexander's exploits. Was Alexander,—the shrewdest king that ever played the paltry game of conquest,—was he the man to found a city, which was to bear the memory of his greatest victory to remote ages, upon an obscure site, off the road of commerce, and not even opposite to a ford or ferry, in the certainty that it could never be more than a village, and that neither traveller nor merchant would visit it? If the crossing was at Russool, then Nikaia is Moongh, and Julalpoor is Boukephala. A few words, therefore, may be devoted to each.

"Moongh is a large village on the eastern bank of the Hydaspes, and about two miles from the stream. It is sited upon a very high mound, which appears to me partly natural, partly an accumulation of rubbish. So far as I can learn, Greek bricks are not found there, and few, if any, Bactro-Greek coins. Tradition is silent regarding it. Julalpoor is a large modern village, built about sixty years ago by Rājā Jullal Khan, whose descendants still live in the neighbourhood. It stands upon a spur from the salt range. The original town stood upon the mountain, at the distance of a mile from Julalpoor, in a very strong and rugged position. It was about a quarter of a mile in length, by 150 yards in breadth, built of undressed stone, cemented with mud; in short, a collection of rude huts. It was called Gishank, was inhabited by the Rajpoots tribe of Junnoot, and was attacked and destroyed seventy years ago by Sirdar Chirt Singh, grandfather of Runjet Singh. I carefully explored the ruins, without discovering a single stone bearing the marks of the chisel. No Greek or Bactro-Greek coins are found there. If, therefore, it be Boukephala, all traces of the identity are lost. Yet it is very certain, that if Alexander crossed at Russool, this must have been Boukephala. He halted and celebrated the obsequies of the fallen opposite the crossing; but he of course built the cities where they would remain such, and not mere congregations of obscure huts.

"It may be asked, might not Alexander have crossed the Hydaspes eleven miles below Julalpoor? Upon this question I am not prepared to enter fully. I can hear of no circumstances to warrant the supposition. The river there is of great breadth, rather more than one and a half miles during the monsoon, and, as we have no evidence of Greek sites either there or at Julalpoor and Moongh, I do not think it will be very readily advocated. May not, then, the crossing have been eleven miles below Jelum? In this there is no impossibility: but we know not a single argument in favour of it. The river bed being there soft sand, it is impossible to calculate the aspect of the river 2,000 years back, as every year alters it. Koharr is an old site, but I could there procure neither Greek coins, nor any intelligence of sculpture or of Greek bricks being turned up. There is one large inhabited island opposite Koharr, but it seems to me of recent formation, and to have been, not a hundred years ago, one with the shore. Supposing it to have been divided from Koharr by a small creek, it would answer very well for the second or larger island encountered by Alexander. The 'insula crebra,' however, if they existed here, are no longer found. It seems to me, that Alexander, having the choice of flanks to move upon, could not have hesitated for a moment to prefer making his passage to the left; for there, between him and the opposite shore, intervened extensive and well-wooded islands; and the deep, narrow channels between them, afforded a mask to his fleet, so that its increase or diminution could not be perceived by the enemy. Moreover, in order to oppose Alexander by that passage, Porus had to march nineteen miles; whereas by this passage he would have marched but ten miles. The figure of the river and its islands to the north of Jelum agrees exactly with Arrian's and Curtius's description. Here are the inhabited and uninhabited, the wooded and the naked islands, in which the youth of either force met to skirmish. There is the promontory (Rheoma), round which the current circles in a remarkable manner, and from which, to this day, cattle take their plunge to reach the small jungle-clad island in mid-stream; the set of the current from thence being directly on that island. There is the larger island, five and half miles in length, and uninhabited, with its invisible eastern channel, fordable even during the monsoon, having a firm pavement of stones. Here is the firm plain beyond the river, hard and solid after rain, where not ploughed; but obstructing, where ploughed, the motion of the chariots. There, in rear of Porus, are the quicksands in the wide, shallow bed of the Sookaytur, in which, according to Curtius, the chariots were swamped; and here is a river of moderate breadth, which Alexander's entire force might have crossed in the course of eight hours; and, in the curvature of the river, there favourable to Alexander, but otherwise to Porus, we see how Alexander's fear of finding the phalanx of elephants of Porus, arrayed upon the hostile bank to oppose his cavalry, was disappointed.

"But it is objected that the constant wear of a river's banks must, in the course of 2,000 years, have obliterated all traces of its previous configuration. I answer, that I have well considered this question; that I have carefully compared my own observation of alterations in the banks with the yearly alterations described by the inhabitants of that portion of the Hydaspes."

At a monthly meeting of the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, 9th September, Dr. Wilson read a portion of his second memoir on the Cave Temples and other antiquities of Western India, in which he particularly notices several new series of excavations, &c., discovered and described by Colonel Twemlow, Capt. James Rose, Dr. Bradley, Mr. Arthur West, Major Lang, Lieut. Black, and himself, and in which he discusses the question of the age of these excavations, from data afforded by their inscriptions, and from considerations derived from the religious and political history of India. He expressed his belief that all the mysteries connected with them, whether Buddhist, Brahmanical, or Jain, are now in the way of being satisfactorily solved.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, November 16, 1858.

In our present issue, under the head of Bombay, will be found the report of a case in the Supreme Court of that presidency, which illustrates the uncertainty of English law, or the inconsistency of its administrators.

An application was made, on behalf of a Hindu convert to Christianity, for a writ of habeas corpus, calling upon certain parties to produce his wife, detained, as he alleged, by her relations, who refused to allow him access to her. The application was founded upon an affidavit of the husband, setting forth the facts; also that, during their eighteen months' cohabitation, before his renunciation of Hinduism, his wife, to whom he was much attached, evinced great affection for him, and that he believed, if he were permitted to see her, he should be able, by reasoning with her, to overcome any scruples on her part to their living together.

The Chief Justice (Sir Erskine Perry) refused the application peremptorily, on the ground that it was not a matter for a writ of habeas corpus; that it was not sworn that the wife was detained against her will, and that the remedy of the Hindu husband was by a suit in the Ecclesiastical Court for restitution of conjugal rights.

Now, in a case precisely parallel in all its parts, which occurred in the Supreme Court at Madras,* Sir Wm. Burton issued a writ of habeas corpus, in obedience to which the wife was produced in court, and delivered up to her husband, in spite of so strong a manifestation of feeling on the part of the Hindus who beset the court, that they were prevented only by the firmness of the peons from storming the place, and carrying off the wife by force.

It is quite evident that, in one of these cases, great injustice must have been done. There is no pretence for supposing that the last decision was not well considered, for the Madras case was brought to the notice of Sir E. Perry, who, "with every respect for the opinion of Sir Wm. Burton," disagreed with it. The object of the writ of habeas corpus, he said, was to prevent illegal imprisonment—except in the case of father and child; and it was not alleged that the wife was illegally imprisoned. But Blackstone tells us that "the confinement of the person in any wise is an imprisonment;" that "the keeping a man against his will in a private house" is an imprisonment. Surely, the detention of a wife from her husband by her relations, notoriously as a punishment for his secession from Paganism, is, prima facie, sufficient evidence of duress to justify the issue of a writ merely calling upon the custodes of the wife to state the grounds of her detention, or to produce her in court, where she could freely speak for herself. It was impossible for the husband to swear that his wife was detained contrary to her will, because he was refused admission to her, she being "closely shut up with her mother in the house of her grandfather." The presumption, in a case of this kind, is, that the party so closely shut up is under compulsion; and it would seem that an English judge ought to be astute to find a ground for the issue rather than for the refusal of the writ, where the alternative is that of sending Hindus,—one of them presumed to be a Pagan,—to our Spiritual Court, of all places in the world!

It is a great misfortune that, in such questions as these, deeply affecting the religious prejudices of the people of India, there should be so egregious a want of uniformity in the decisions of the Queen's Judges in India, which must shake the confidence of the natives in English law, and keep alive amongst them a spirit of resistance against all proselytism to Christianity. The reasoning of Sir E. Perry leads almost to the conclusion that, if the case should come before him when exercising the ecclesiastical jurisdiction of his Court, he would not deem himself justified in pronouncing a sentence of restitution, if the wife should object, upon religious grounds, to live with her husband. He puts the case of a Christian husband turning Mahomedan, marrying several wives, and requiring his Christian wife to become the inmate of his harem. No Court of ours, he said, would force her to live with her Mahomedan husband; and the same principle, he added, was applicable to a Hindu wife, "who could not live with her Christian husband without pollution." This doctrine is at direct variance with that laid down by Sir Wm. Burton in the case before referred to, who, employing the very illustration resorted to by his brother judge, observed, "If a Christian should become a Mahomedan, he could still enforce his wife to live with him, although she might remain a Christian."

If Sir Wm. Burton be wrong in this matter, and Sir E. Perry right, it is very plain that the latter has the merit of having discovered a new and formidable impediment to conversion, and that the Indian Act of 1850 is far from being, what it has been termed, "the Charter of Religious Freedom."

THE Court of Directors, and its constituency the proprietors of East-India stock, are the next "authorities and agencies for administering the government of India," the evidence in respect to which, taken by the two parliamentary committees, we propose to consider.

With regard to the former, nearly all the witnesses recommend that their functions should (with the exception referred to in our last article) be left undisturbed, and that their authority should be rather increased than diminished. Lord Ellenborough, indeed, in his evidence before the Commons' committee, suggests the entire abolition of the Court of Directors, and the substitution of a council of twelve persons, to assist the President of the India Board, the patronage to be dispensed by the councillors, in order to separate it from the Crown. But as his lordship avows that he "prefers the direct authority and government of the Crown, and that the name of the Crown should be used in the government of India, and no other name," it is needless to discuss details connected with a plan which, we may assume, will not be adopted. Mr. Mill conveys, perhaps, the fairest idea of the Court of Directors when he says, "I would not pretend to affirm that no better administrative body could be found; but it seems to me they are as good a body as there is any probability of obtaining."

The main objection to the constitution of the Court consists, according to the evidence, in the mode in which the directors are elected. Mr. Bird considers the canvassing for the office, which sometimes occupies six years, with the annoyances accompanying it, a very great objection—it had deterred him, he said, from seeking the office. Sir H. Maddock urges the same objection, adding that sometimes attempts are made during the canvass, by persons holding proxies, to bargain for appointments. Mr. Shepherd, a director, however, thinks that the canvass is made a "greater bugbear than it ought to be;" that if men of eminence came forward, the proprietary would be very ready to elect them, without a laborious canvass; he has known no eminent men fail, he says, where they waited for a year or two. On the other hand, Colonel Sykes, another director, states that his election, which cost him 2,228*l.*, took up seven years.

To obviate this objection, and to improve the quality of the Court of Directors, various suggestions are made in the evidence. Sir George Clerk recommends that persons of Indian experience and knowledge, nominated by the Board of Control, and approved by the Court of Directors, should be members of the Court, without patronage. Sir H. Maddock, in like manner, thinks that some portion of the Court might be nominated by the Crown and the Court conjointly. Mr. T. C. Robertson, on the other hand, considers that the authority of the Court of Directors should rest upon a large corporate body, having long-established and recognised rights. Mr. Shepherd observes that, of late years, almost all the candidates elected have been in the Indian services, adding, "I should be sorry to see all the Directors Indian, because I think a certain infusion of English members, who have mixed a good deal with men of business in this country, is important." Colonel Sykes thinks that the practical difficulties in the way of reserving some of the directorships for persons who have filled eminent situations in the Indian services would be considerable, and that the arrangement would,—as it certainly must,—excite very great jealousies and heart-burnings. Lord Hardinge, examined by the Commons' committee, is of opinion that the present system of representation produces a very competent body; though he admits it might be an improvement if, for two members elected by the proprietors under the present system, one director were put in by the Court itself, taken from the Indian service. "At the same time," he adds, "I do not think it would be advantageous to have the Court of Directors filled with men who had served in India; I think a body of persons solely impressed with Indian views would not administer the government of India so well as the present Court of Directors: there ought to be in the Court men who have been connected with naval and mercantile, banking and financial pursuits; in fact, there ought to be in a Court of that description such a fusion of European feelings and talent, as well as Indian feelings and talent, as would not make it too Indian—very much as it exists at present." Taking Mr. Melvill's statement to be correct, that "of fifteen directors elected since 1834, one only was wholly unconnected with India," it may be doubted whether already the Court may not be "too Indian."

We incline to think that the Legislature will leave the Court of Directors, in the words of Lord Hardinge, "as it exists at present," and, although the canvass may be, as his lordship acknowledges, a "great toil," will be indisposed to hazard experiments upon this body, which, by aiming at theoretical perfection, may make it practically less efficient and useful than it is.

The constituency is to be regarded in two aspects,—first, as the electoral body; secondly, as a Court, acting in conjunction with the Directors, whom, according to the plan of 1833, they were to assist in the government of India.

The number of proprietors of East-India stock entitled to vote at the election of directors is 1,765, whereof 413 have more than one vote; the total number of votes (which may be given by proxy) is 2,322. Some of the holders of stock are ladies; some are foreigners; many consign their proxies to friends. It has been suggested that the constituency might be enlarged, by adding all the civil and military servants of the Indian Government upon their return to England, without requiring a pecuniary interest. To this proposal, Mr. Melvill objects that, besides swamping the present proprietary, the arrangement would be attended with great difficulty, and the expediency of giving the privilege of debate to retired officers is doubtful. Mr. Shepherd likewise objects that it would make the constituency so large that the canvass would be still more arduous and difficult than it is, and he does not think the plan would act beneficially with regard to the parties ultimately elected.

Colonel Sykes has sketched out before the Commons' committee a plan of electing directors, by the existing constituency, which he thinks would work so as to bring in eminent servants from India without a distasteful canvass, whilst it would not exclude persons eminent in civil life in England. He proposes to lower the qualification for a vote to 500*l.* stock, in order to enlarge the constituency, and to constitute an electoral college, composed of proprietors, who should consider the pretensions of the candidates, and recommend the fittest to the proprietary at large,—a plan which has worked well in the Royal Society.

With respect to the other capacity in which the proprietary was intended to act so useful a part, there is no discordancy of opinion amongst the witnesses examined upon this head. Mr. Melvill observes that the proprietors assembled in court have no substantive power with reference to the government of India; but there is an advantage in the discussion of Indian subjects in the Court of Proprietors, which affords a vent for grievances, real or supposed. He urges, however, that it should be better regulated, so as to prevent a very small number, perhaps four or five, keeping the directors sitting there many hours upon useless debates. "Four or five proprietors," he says, "have been sitting and one speaking, and staying till 12 o'clock at night." He proposes that a quorum of not less than 30 should be required. Colonel Sykes thinks the Court of Proprietors a very useful body, inasmuch as they stand between the Government and the Court of Directors, in certain lights, and enable the public to become acquainted with proceedings in India; but he would not grant them a power of discussion without a quorum of from 30 to 40, the Court being liable to be counted out if below that number.

This is a very simple and easy expedient for the correction of a great evil, and for giving the Court of Proprietors more weight in the estimation of the Executive and of the public than it has enjoyed for some years past. The project of "allotting to the proprietary body important powers and functions in the administration of Indian affairs," for which purpose they were to be "linked and bound, in point of interest, to the country which they are to assist in governing,"—such was the plausible language of Sir Charles Grant in 1833,—was well adapted to disarm the resentment of the then holders of stock; but it will not bear examination. A body constituted like the East-India proprietary is utterly unfit to exercise any functions whatever in the administration of Indian affairs. The Court of Proprietors may be made a useful channel of publicity; but even in this capacity the restriction suggested by Mr. Melvill is indispensable.

It is a misfortune incidental to our system of Indian administration, that, all its proceedings being committed to writing, for the information of the home authorities, the records upon any given subject are oppressively voluminous. This evil might be mitigated if the writers endeavoured to compress and condense their matter; whereas their efforts appear to be made in the opposite direction, diffusiveness and amplification being the very characteristics of official composition in India. We are painfully reminded of this fact by the apparition of two enormous folio volumes, containing 1,548 pages, just printed as a Return to an Order of the House of Commons, on Mr. Anstey's motion for "Copies of all Correspondence and Papers on the Subject of Colonel Outram's removal from the Office of Resident at the Court of the Guicowar, or on the Subject of the alleged Corruption of Officers of the Bombay Government with bribes from Baroda." In all our experience, we never met with more striking instances of this form of the cacoëthes scribendi, which attacks Indian officials, than are furnished in this ponderous mass of documents upon a mere personal matter. Colonel Outram is grievously afflicted with this disease, and very much mars his case by his interminable writing. One of his "monster" reports (a term used by Lord Falkland) extends to 77 folio pages, with appendices, in small type, filling 280 pages more; another runs, with its appendices, to 166 pages. It would seem as if, when he sat down to write or dictate, he was overwhelmed with a gush of words, which he could not stop, or reduce into clear or pure English.

The subjects embraced in these papers are of a very miscellaneous character,—comprehending, inter alia, the case of Joetabhaee Settanee, the widow of a banker at Baroda, said to have been persecuted by Baba Nafry (or Nafkay), the managing agent of her husband's firm; also an incidental imputation cast upon the late Mr. W. C. Andrews, session judge at Surat; charges against Nursoo Punt, native agent at Baroda; illicit information alleged to have been surreptitiously obtained from the secretariat at Bombay, and especially the subject of khutput, or corrupt influence, a belief in the efficacy of which at the government offices at that presidency is said to exist amongst the natives. Upon the last subject, Colonel Outram made a very long report to the Government "on the circumstances which, in his opinion, had tended to confirm the popular belief in the efficacy of khutput made in Bombay," with an accompanying letter, which the Bombay Government considered "so extraordinary in its style and tenour" that it occasioned his removal from the office of resident at the Court of the Guicowar.

In a succeeding page we have inserted the letter in question, the Minute of Lord Falkland, governor of Bombay (in which the Council concurred), and the decision of the Court of Directors, to whom Colonel Outram appealed, and who, giving him credit for "the zeal, energy, ability, and success with which he prosecuted inquiries attended with great difficulty," did not reverse the sentence of the Bombay Government, or recommend his restoration to the office of resident.

Colonel Outram, a gallant and active military officer, a sincere and upright man, is evidently earnest in his desire to reform abuses which flourish in the rank soil of a Mah-ratta court; but he seems to lack a quality indispensable for such a purpose, namely, the discretion which should temper and regulate zeal. This deficiency is apparent in the long and wearisome details of his angry controversy with Mr. Andrews, who, we must say, had the advantage of the resident. The object in view in that affair, now lost, might have been gained, and all the orimination and recri-mination avoided, had Colonel Outram only exercised a little more caution at the beginning, and put some restraint upon his pen afterwards.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—Among the items contained in the Report of the House of Commons (published 29th June, 1852), there are various very interesting documents. I will, for the present, take the Land Revenue.

At pages 280 and 285 of the Appendix, I find the gross land revenue of India for 1849-50 to be,—

	Coa. Rs.	Cost collection.
Bengal	3,53,69,403	31,11,903
Burmese Cessions	16,20,116
N.W. Provinces and Punjab ...	5,92,63,439	43,43,830
Madras	3,47,94,373	50,79,964
Bombay	2,30,59,748	27,07,242
Sinde	24,16,888
Grand Total ...	15,65,23,996	1,52,42,939

The cost of collection is thus about 10½ per cent. In Bengal it is about 8½ per cent.; N.W. Provinces and Punjab, 7½ do.; Madras, 14½ do.; and Bombay, 11½ do.

Taking Bengal and Agra as precedents, the whole cost should be 2 per cent. less than 10½; and 2 per cent. on the gross revenue is a loss of Co.'s Rs. 31,30,379. It is stated that, at Madras, the ryotwar system involves a constant survey, which greatly increases the difference in the cost of collection. That cannot be wholly the case. At the cost as exhibited for the N.W. Provinces, of 7½ per cent., Madras ought to collect its land revenue for 25 lakhs of rupees less than it now costs; and the rest of the extra charge will lie at the door of the Bombay arrangement. The permanent settlement of Bengal caused a fixed settlement as to the cost of collection; but why it should cost more than the N.W. Provinces by 1½ per cent., is not to be easily understood. The village system of the N.W. Provinces (for a term of thirty years) clearly works well; and why should not Madras and Bombay adopt the same system? With all the cost of collection on the Bengal side of India, we lay out about Rs. 75,000 (or 7½ lakhs) in surveys. This subject will come under the third head of inquiry before the Parliamentary Committees when they next meet. There must be some very bad arrangements, both at Madras and Bombay. The land revenue amounts to ½ of the revenue of India, and should be kept distinct, and not have the Abkaree, &c. placed in some of the tables. No uninformed man can understand the revenue accounts, so long as they contain several items. The English accounts are just as bad.

A BENGAL OFFICER.

London, 29th Oct. 1852.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

SIR,—At a time when the sympathies of the public are not unfrequently awakened in favour of persons whose misfortunes are too often the result of their own indiscretions, if not vices, an Indian may be, perhaps, permitted to say a few words on behalf of many of his poor countrymen, who are forced to gain a wretched and precarious living by begging in the streets of London. That they are found here at all, is not their fault, for, independently of their want of money to pay their passage over, Hindoos, especially of the lower class, have a great aversion to travelling in foreign countries; a circumstance well known to all who are the least acquainted with Indian feelings and Indian prejudices. It is, consequently, in the service of wealthy individuals that they have found their way into this country; and having, either from some caprice of their master, or, it may be, from some misconduct of their own, been discharged from their employment, are cast abandoned upon the slender chances of eleemosynary aid. This condition is the more deplorable, because, unlike the poor of most European countries, they know no handicraft or trade by which they could "turn an honest penny;" while the unavoidable daily violation of many of their religious rules must, to such of them as are sincere in their attachment to the doctrines of Brahmah, be a continual source of sorrow and apprehension. Now, Sir, as these men are most undoubtedly British subjects, and as, with perhaps some few exceptions, their present misery is owing to the want of discretion on their part, it appears to me to be the bounden duty of the British Government to concur with the Hon. East-India Company in the adoption of such measures as may,—1, afford present relief to such of my suffering countrymen as are in the above-described deplorable condition, and provide them with the means of returning to their native country; and, 2, prevent such an evil from again occurring, by rigidly enforcing the regulation, which provides as follows:—

"The Honourable the Governor in Council is pleased to intimate, for general information, that, under instructions from the Honourable the Court of Directors, the customary deposit of Rs. 500 will in future be required on account of all servants leaving Bombay, by any route, for Europe, whether such servants be Asiatic, or African, or other persons of colour, born within the limits of the East-India Company's Charter.

"Bombay Castle, 11th Feb. 1846."

In conclusion, let me entreat those who have raised princely fortunes in the land which gave birth to these unfortunates not to withhold a charitable hand, but rather imitate the hospitality of India, whose rajahs and nuwabs never suffer an unfortunate European to wander through their dominions, biting the bitter bread of beggary, but have, in innumerable cases of shipwreck and other unavoidable calamities, not only cheerfully relieved the immediate necessities of the sufferers, but provided them with the means of returning to their native land.

I am, &c.

AN INDIAN OBSERVER.

London, November, 1852.

LIEUTENANT-COLONEL OUTRAM.

Extract Bombay Political Consultation; No. 100 A, of 1851.

From Lieutenant-colonel J. Outram, c.b., Resident at Baroda, to Arthur Malet, Esq., Chief Secretary to Government, Bombay.

SIR,—I have the honour to transmit to you a report on the circumstances which have tended to confirm the popular belief in the efficacy of "khutput made in Bombay."

2. An invitation to draw up such a report was communicated to me by a circular letter under Mr. Secretary Goldsmid's hand, dated 15th of May, 1850, and the only reason why I did not earlier comply with that invitation was, my desire to watch the course and issue of occurrences that have, since the date of Mr. Goldsmid's letter, been powerfully tending to confirm the belief in khutput.

3. So grievously were they operating in this direction, that on the 10th of April last, I deemed it my duty to transmit to Government, in the form of a "statement of facts," an embodiment of the section of my khutput report which related to the case of Nursoo Punt.

4. Under misapprehension of the intentions of Government, I was induced to recall and modify that statement; but in consequence of the circumstances which have taken place since the curtailed statement was presented, I have deemed it my duty to retain in the report now sent the section on Nursoo Punt as it originally stood, or nearly as it originally stood.

5. I have added slightly to it, and I have removed certain expressions which I was led to believe had given offence to the Right Honourable the Governor in Council. I have also carried out the narrative of the proceedings that have taken place relative to Nursoo Punt up to the present date; and I have deemed it my duty to record the substance of a protest which I drew up prior to Mr. Frere's arrival in Baroda, in reference to the trial of Nursoo Punt having been ordered to proceed under circumstances which, as I warned Government at the time, were calculated not to promote, but to frustrate, the elicitation of truth.

6. That protest will be found embodied in the 5th section of the 2nd part of my report, and though I have grounds for hoping that, owing to fortuitous circumstances, my gloomy anticipations have not been realized, I feel assured that the grounds on which I based my anticipations were strong, and I am desirous they should be placed on record.

7. In presenting this report, I beg most solemnly and most sincerely to state, that I am innocent of all intentional disrespect to Government; but matters have reached a point at which I should signally fail in my duty, did I not do my utmost to state, in a clear and explicit manner, the peculiar and the almost overwhelming difficulties under which I am placed.

8. I, the British representative at Baroda, am regarded by the durbar, and the subjects of the prince at whose court I reside, as one whom it is not only safe, but sound policy to thwart and intrigue against. I am regarded as an officer in disgrace with my Government, as opposed by it, and as undergoing at all hands a course of humiliation, which, if not designed to drive me to the resignation of my appointment, is intended to lead me into such insubordinate conduct, or intemperate language, as shall insure its forfeiture; and the results of such opinions may be easily guessed.

9. The Guicowar personally is an amiable but weak man. He would himself willingly exert his powers in support of my authority, and in promotion of the objects I have in view; but he is in the hands of as unprincipled a minister as ever proved the bane of an Indian prince.

10. To the evil influence over him of this individual, does the Guicowar owe such unpopularity as attaches to his raj; and I regret to say that much dissatisfaction exists among the people.

11. To myself, the minister has been a source of embarrassment ever since I came in contact with him. In my various investigations, his influence has been exerted for the suppression of truth; and as an illustration of what I say, I would refer to the proceedings of the two panchayets appointed by his Highness the Guicowar for adjudicating in the case of Joitabae Settane. The disgraceful proceedings of these two bodies, I need not say, could only have been perpetrated with the minister's connivance.

12. In all my investigations he has more or less laboured to thwart me; and latterly, his efforts in this direction have been incessant; for the cunning Nursoo has led him to believe that their interests are identified; that if he (Nursoo) were acquitted by the commissioner, very little intrigue will be required to effect my removal from office, and that, unless I am removed, the minister's exposure and disgrace are inevitable.

13. But though the minister's efforts to thwart me on this commission have been constant, they have been disguised under a pretended cordiality, and frequently under the affectation of great zeal. Let me give a single illustration:—On one occasion during his trial, Nursoo Punt expressed his intention of calling certain witnesses to depose that a particular paper was not in his handwriting. Not only had I it in my power to invalidate the credibility of those witnesses, but I could have extorted admissions from them in court which would have materially damaged Nursoo's cause. This was known to the accused, and to his friend the minister, and the latter accordingly called on my native agent the night before the day fixed for the appearance of the witnesses, and made great professions of his own and the Guicowar's anxiety that the truth should be elicited; and next morning, Nursoo Punt communicated to the commission, that as the minister had had a private interview with my native agent, he declined calling his exculpatory witnesses, implying that the minister was his enemy, and that his interview with the native agent had for its object the corruption or intimidation of his witnesses.

14. Had I been on those terms with my own superiors to which in former days I had the honour to be admitted, as well by the local as the supreme Governments, I should, at a very early date of my intercourse with the minister, have pointed out to his Highness the necessity, for the honour of his own raj, of selecting another adviser; in doing this, I should have done no more than any other Resident in India, in a similar position, would have deemed himself justified in doing. I should have been rendering an essential service to the Guicowar, and I should have diminished that intrigue and corruption which tends so much to compromise the character of the British Government in the eyes of the natives.

15. But I felt keenly that I was not admitted to that confidence and kindly consideration on the part of Government which it was once my honour to enjoy. I feared that my conduct might be censured, and that my recommendation might be unsupported; and in such a case I was well aware that intrigues would multiply, and attempts be made to involve me in a dispute with the durbar, with a view to lead to my removal from a post where I am a source of inconvenience and alarm to the traders in corruption.

16. I have therefore been constrained to meet the minister in his own fashion; to assume his own cordial demeanor; to express satisfaction for such trifling aid as from time to time, for appearance sake, he has rendered me; and to appear ignorant of his secret opposition.

17. This is a position from which I conceive that I have a right to be allowed to relieve myself by the exercise of that authority which few other Residents would hesitate to exert; but should Government not concur with me in this view of the case, I shall respectfully submit to their decision; for I feel that it is my duty to remain at my post, one of difficulty as well as of danger as it is. I repeat of danger, for not only is the climate one that disagrees with me, but it is the opinion of my medical advisers, that on more than one occasion has my life been tampered with, at the instigation of these corruptionists I was endeavouring to expose.

18. I did indeed at one time contemplate withdrawing myself from Baroda. I was then in Egypt, whither intelligence, by no means precise, reached me that Government had invited Nursoo Punt to remain in office, and that my charge of fraud against the Hurry Bhugtee Bank had been disregarded. I knew what would be the consequences; I foresaw an arduous and painful struggle, though I by no means contemplated the occurrences that have actually taken place. Prostrated in body and weakened in mind by sickness, I shrunk from the difficulties I saw before me; I applied to the Governor-General for employment in Central India, and I intimated to two friends holding very distinguished positions in India, and personally acquainted with his lordship, that, in consequence of my anxiety to be removed from the control of the Bombay to that of the Supreme Government, I would willingly accept any office under the latter on half the salary I enjoyed under the former.

19. I thus wrote to the private secretary: "In making this application, I venture to believe that the nature of my past services, which have frequently been acknowledged by the State, warrants me in thus seeking to renew the same direct communication with the Supreme Government that I formerly was honoured with when Resident at the courts of Scinde and Baloochistan, until the abolition of that office in November, 1842, when the British army withdrew from the last-named country, but which, in my present capacity as Resident at Baroda, I am precluded from maintaining. I do not presume to enter into details of my reasons for desiring a change from the appointment I now hold; it may be sufficient to express my belief that at Nagpoor, or in any other equivalent position, my humble services can be rendered more available to the Government of India than they are likely to be at the court of his Highness the Guicowar."

20. Lord Dalhousie could not comply with my request, and I was afterwards ashamed of having made it. It was the first time in my life that I had ever attempted to evade a duty, and I felt that it was my duty to return to Baroda; and whatever the difficulties with which I might have to contend, whatever the humiliation to which I might be subjected, to labour for the vindication of great principles.

21. This feeling every day serves to intensify. I know that, humble as are my abilities, I do possess qualities, the possession of which by the Baroda Resident is indispensable at the present moment. I know that my departure would be the signal for vast intrigues and great oppressions; and therefore, as I have stated, I shall remain at my post even should Government not see fit to relieve me from the difficulties I have alluded to, as caused by the procedure of the Guicowar minister.

22. Should Government repose sufficient confidence in political qualifications which have been extensively employed and favourably noticed by my honourable masters, and in an honesty which has never been questioned, as to rely on my assurance, that I have every reason to believe the truth of the information communicated to me, I would transmit a memorandum exhibiting the hostile proceedings indulged in by the minister. But I will not undertake to prove one word of my allegations while he remains in power. As is known to all who have had experience of native courts, much information which is trustworthy is unsusceptible of proof; even where the British representative is apparently favoured and supported by his Government, it is utterly impossible for him to adduce proofs of facts regarding which he can have no doubt; and, with the views current at Baroda as to my position with reference to the Bombay Government, I could hardly hope to get a single individual to depose to facts which, though topics of conversation in the city, would, if stated at the Residency, bring down on my informants instant persecution. Intimidation and gold would prove too strong for me; nor would I deem myself at liberty to give the names of such informants as I had.

That my embarrassments with the durbar are not of my seeking, nor of my own making, will, I think, be pretty evident to all who carefully read the accompanying report. To what they are attributable, I leave my narrative to indicate.

I have, &c.,

(Signed) J. OUTRAM, Resident.

Baroda Residency, 31st October, 1851.

Minute by the Right Honourable the Governor.

1. On the 15th May, 1850, Lieutenant-colonel Outram was requested by this Government to state his opinion whether a belief in the efficacy of intrigue carried on at the presidency to contravene, by corrupt influences, the recommendations of local officers up the country, existed amongst the natives, and also as to the mode in which such a belief, if it existed, would be most readily eradicated. In reply to this call for information, Colonel Outram has forwarded to us a voluminous paper, intitled, "Khutput Report," to which due attention will be given when we dispose of the several communications we have received from others of our officers on the same subject. The letter which accompanied the above report is, however, so extraordinary in its style and tenor, as to call for immediate and serious notice. From this letter, Lieutenant-colonel Outram would seem to have formed a very incorrect idea of his position at Baroda, as the representative of the Bombay Government, as well as of the relations in which the Government he represents stands with regard to the independent sovereign and friendly neighbour at whose court he is the Resident; for one at least of the principal objects of his present letter would appear to be to induce the Government of Bombay to insist on the suspension or absolute removal from office of the chief minister of his Highness the Guicowar, solely, in as far as we are at present advised, because he, Colonel Outram, entertains a bad opinion of that individual, no specific charge even assumed to be capable of proof being preferred against him. So arbitrary a measure towards any prince in the situation of the Guicowar could only be justified in a case of absolute necessity, under circumstances of peculiar emergency or extreme danger to the State; when directed against a compliant and unoffending ally, it could but be regarded as a most wanton and tyrannical act of aggression. I cannot but think, therefore, that in advocating such a course of policy, Colonel Outram has shown that he takes such an erroneous view of his own position, and of the duties it devolves, as could hardly have been expected from the youngest political officer in the service.

2. It was not intended by our circular of the 15th May, 1850, to enjoin our functionaries to devote their time to searching out cases on which corrupt influences had anywhere, or at any time, been brought to bear, or to attempt to discover that which, from its very nature, must be all but impossible to trace; but it is quite clear that Colonel Outram has misinterpreted the letter on which his elaborate report is founded, and has entered on very laborious and difficult researches, with the expectation of destroying among the people of this country the practice of seeking to compass their ends by indirect means, or corrupt influences. Opinions may vary as to the possibility of attaining such a result, or as to the efficacy of the measures employed with that view; the object was nevertheless a good one; and however I might have differed from Colonel Outram as to the expediency or propriety of the means he would use to gain it, I should not have blamed the honest ardour with which it was pursued. Had the Resident stopped here, I should have deemed it sufficient to have cautioned him that the course he was following was calculated to embroil us with the Guicowar, and that all that it was practicable to effect towards destroying the impression said to prevail with regard to the efficacy of khutput, would be best effected by the exercise of extreme vigilance in the offices of all our public departments.

3. But Colonel Outram has gone far beyond this; it is not, indeed, easy to follow him through the somewhat desultory and incoherent medley of facts and arguments of which his letter consists; but his main intent and purpose apparently is to show that his endeavours to trace out and expose the system of corruption which he assumes to have existed for a series of years at Baroda, have been opposed and thwarted by the Bombay Government; that he has thus become a mark for calumny and reproach, and has incurred the danger of assassination at the hands of those whose evil deeds he has endeavoured to bring to light; that, nevertheless, he remains at his post, because he regards it as an imperative duty to continue to contend for the great principles he has striven to maintain, and he calls on the Government to act with him, to cause the Guicowar to dismiss his minister, to punish the parties he deems corrupt as traders in corruption, and thus vindicate and assert the purity of the British character in the manner he, Colonel Outram, deems just and right. He likewise assumes that he has lost the confidence of his official superiors, and bitterly complains of the position in which he is consequently placed. Had we earlier become aware that Colonel Outram's feelings were such as he now describes them to be,—that he had ceased to regard the Government he represents with respect, to sympathise with its purposes, to desire the accomplishment of its wishes, and to struggle to effect its ends (and this all apparently because we have declined as a Government blindly to follow the Resident's lead, to take for granted what he has not proved, and to denounce as guilty those against whom suspicion only could be said to be established); that, instead of looking upon himself as bound, while the representative of the British Government at Baroda, to act only as directed by that Government, and to carry out scrupulously those views, and those only, which might be indicated for his guidance, he deemed himself, as appears from para. 17 of his letter, to be endowed with some independent authority, which he may exercise or not at his own pleasure,—I certainly should have been sooner convinced that the mutual confidence that ought to subsist between the Government and the Resident was, as it unfortunately now too plainly appears that it is, wanting, and that that officer was no longer qualified to discharge satisfactorily the functions of his important office.

4. Without entering into the question of how, where, in what direction, and to what extent, corruption may have been practised at Baroda, and between Baroda and Bombay, I consider that while labouring under such impressions as those by which Colonel Outram is, by his own showing, influenced, he cannot possess the tact, calmness of mind, and discretion, indispensable to the maintenance, on a satisfactory footing, of our political relations with the Baroda durbar; that much embarrassment will ensue if he be permitted to remain there; and I would therefore inform him that the letter under review, taken in connection with previous correspondence, has convinced us that it will not be for the advantage of the interests of Government that he should continue to represent them at Baroda; that we leave it to him to withdraw from the appointment he fills in the manner least offensive to his own feelings, and least calculated to embarrass or injure our amicable relations with his Highness the Guicowar; further, that we will await his reply, which we request may be sent at his earliest convenience, before taking any other alternative into our consideration.

22nd November, 1851.

(Signed) FALKLAND.

Political Department, 26th June (No. 20), 1852.

Our Governor in Council at Bombay.

Para. 1. We have not hitherto replied to the letters enumerated in the margin connected with the removal of Lieut.-col. Outram from the office of Resident at Baroda, because we were desirous, before we wrote to you on that subject, to make ourselves fully acquainted with the proceedings of that officer as British representative at the Guicowar's court, and especially to take a deliberate review of the investigations which occupied so large a portion of his time and exertions during his last year of office.

2. This review has been completed, and its result communicated to you in our political letters dated 2nd June (No. 17), and 23rd June, 1852 (No. 19).

3. There is still one document proceeding from Lieut.-col. Outram on which our sentiments have not been expressed, namely, what is termed his Khutput report. This document we have not yet received from your Government in the regular manner, as you intended to consider it in conjunction with the other replies on the same subject which your circular letter to the heads of the several departments in the political, revenue, and judicial branches of the service had elicited. At present we have it only from Lieut.-col. Outram, through you, as an inclosure in his memorial; and we therefore shall not now enter into any examination of the substance of that report. Your president, however, in his minutes of 26th January and 28th February, 1852, "emphatically" declared that among the motives to Lieut.-col. Outram's removal "the presentation of the Khutput report had no place." The ground stated by your president for the measure, is Lieut.-col. Outram's letter dated 31st October, 1851, which accompanied the report.

4. That letter Lord Falkland considered to be highly objectionable. In the first place its style and tone appeared to display such an absence of "respect" and "confidence" towards the Government he represented, as disqualified him for discharging satisfactorily the duties of his office. Secondly, he appeared to have formed a most erroneous idea of the rights and duties of his position as Resident at Baroda; and thirdly, he showed that he did not possess the tact, calmness of mind, and discretion indispensable to the satisfactory maintenance of our political relations with the Guicowar.

5. Mr. Blane, in his minute of 28th February, 1852, adds another reason to those specified by your president: "I consider Lieut.-col. Outram's removal" (he observes) "to have been forced upon us by his persisting in proceedings dictated by the sentiments evinced in the letter attached to his Khutput report, and not solely by the inditing of that letter." Mr. Blane does not mention the particular transactions to which he alludes; and we do not perceive in the papers transmitted to us any instance of Lieut.-col. Outram's having persisted in proceedings which he had been instructed by Government to discontinue. We must, therefore, consider his removal as resting on the reasons assigned by your president.

6. The statement that Lieut.-col. Outram, in an important point, misconceived the extent of his powers as Resident, is perfectly correct. We refer to the following passage of his letter: "Had I been on those terms with my own superiors to which in former days I had the honour to be admitted, as well by the local as the supreme Governments, I should at a very early date of my intercourse with the minister, have pointed out to his Highness the necessity, for the honour of his own raj, of selecting another adviser. In doing this, I should have done no more than any other Resident in India, in a similar position, would have deemed himself justified in doing." To take so grave a step without express authority, would far exceed the powers of a Resident, and would require for its justification the probability that some great public evil would arise from the short delay necessary for a reference to Government. In the present case, there was no such emergency, and if Lieut.-col. Outram had acted as he thought he had power to act, he would on that ground have merited a severe mark of our displeasure. He must have been aware that the right vested by treaty in a British Resident, of offering advice to a native prince, is to be exercised by him in strict subordination to his own superiors, and that it is a serious breach of duty to take any step which can have the effect of committing his Government to a particular course of policy, without having previously assured himself of their approbation.

7. With regard to the spirit and temper exhibited by Lieut.-col. Outram, we have no doubt that, in resorting to the strong measure of removing him from office, you were influenced by the general tone of his correspondence for some time previous, and not exclusively by the remarks contained in his letter of the 31st of October, 1851. Lord Falkland indeed states, in his minute of the 22nd November, that that letter, "taken in connection with former correspondence," convinced you that it would not be for the advantage of your Government that Lieut.-col. Outram should continue to represent you at Baroda.

8. Lieut.-col. Outram appears to have laboured under an impression that he was not supported by Government in his exertions for the detection of corrupt practices, and that the supposition that Government looked with disfavour on those exertions prevailed widely at Baroda, and had a tendency to defeat the object of his investigations.

9. But in communicating to you the impressions made on his mind, Lieut.-col. Outram ought to have expressed himself with the deference due from a subordinate officer to the Government which he serves; in this he failed. We are of opinion that the communications of Lieut.-col. Outram were not conveyed in terms consistent with that respect for the Government under which he was serving, which ought to be observed in all such representations; but we regret that you did not take an early opportunity of reprimanding him, and requiring him to withdraw or modify any objectionable expressions which rendered him justly liable to your censure.

10. In conclusion, we give to Lieut.-col. Outram credit for the zeal, energy, ability, and success with which he prosecuted inquiries attended with great difficulty; and taking this view of the case, we express our hope that when Lieut.-col. Outram shall return to India, you will find a suitable opportunity of employing him where his talents and experience may prove useful to the public service.

EAST-INDIAN RAILWAY.

A special meeting of this company was held on the 2nd November, to receive a communication from the directors in respect to raising further capital. Mr. Aglionby, M.P., in the chair.

Mr. Noad, the secretary, read a correspondence that had taken place between the company and the East-Indian authorities on the subject of extending the line from Pundooah to Rajmahal, from which it appeared that the Government of India had approved of the mode of conducting the surveys for the extension line under the directions of their consulting engineer, in conjunction with the railway company's officers; all expenses occasioned by them to be carried to a separate account. On the completion of the surveys, the Government of India signified their determination to commit the execution of the extended line to the East-Indian Railway Company, and to authorize, for that purpose, an increase of that capital by 1,000,000*l.* sterling, under a guarantee of interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum, the terms and conditions contained in the contract of the 17th of August, 1849, being also applicable to the new section.

The Chairman said he had no doubt that the shareholders would approve of the proposition he had to submit, as the result would not only be profitable to the proprietors, but advantageous to the commercial interests in India. They might consider the extension referred to as the second section of their line towards the North-West Provinces of India. It was not the line originally proposed, but it was one deemed best by the authorities in India. This line was surveyed by the company's officers, under the superintendence of the East-India authorities. The terms were to be the same as those agreed to originally, and under which the first section of the line was now being carried out, with the exception of the guarantee of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. instead of 5 per cent., as in the first instance. The length of the line was about 100 miles, but the exact point at which it was to commence had not yet been decided by the authorities, although he believed it would be somewhere near Burdwan. The amount of capital to be raised for its construction would be 1,000,000*l.* That sum was mentioned as a sort of guide, and it would probably be constructed for less; but if more capital should be required, they would have to provide it at the same rate of interest as that under which the guarantee on the second million was granted, namely, $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. per annum. With regard to the extension of the line to Rajmahal, it would tend to promote the public service, and a large traffic would pass over it from the Ganges down to Calcutta. There was a very large traffic conveyed by the steamers on the Ganges, which would run in connection with their line. The line to Rajmahal was reported to have very favourable gradients; they were, in fact, exceedingly good, being nearly equal to a level. It was proposed to raise the new capital by the issue of 50,000 shares, of 20*l.* each, being the same number and amount as for the first section. They proposed to allot the shares rateably among the present shareholders at the rate of one new share for every old share held by them. Those shares which might not be taken up would be disposed of by the directors for the benefit of the company. With regard to the works on the first section of the line, it was expected that the estimate of 1,000,000*l.* would be exceeded; and, whatever that excess might be for that section, the Indian Government could, in accordance with their arrangement with the company, guarantee 5 per cent. interest on the amount of that excess, which would be raised on the same terms. Any excess of expenditure above the million for the second section would likewise bear interest at the rate of $4\frac{1}{2}$ per cent. on the amount, whatever it might be. He then moved a resolution to the effect that the meeting approved of the terms proposed by the East-India Company for the extension of the line to Rajmahal.

The motion was carried unanimously.

Mr. Adams said, with regard to the extension of the line to the North-West Provinces, he had been very much surprised, a short time ago, by seeing advertisements in the papers for a scheme to seize upon a portion of their line to the North-West Provinces, which he considered belonged to this company. The scheme he alluded to was for a line from Allahabad to Cawnpore, and for raising subscriptions to carry it out. He did not think the Indian authorities would permit any parties to intrude upon a district which was fully understood to belong to this company. Upon the completion of their line to the North-West Provinces depended the success of the portion of their undertaking between Calcutta and Rajmahal. It was not to be supposed that parties would be allowed to come in and rob them of the traffic, to which, according to the arrangement with the East-India authorities, they were justly entitled. He was anxious to know from the chairman, whether other parties would be allowed to carry out part of their extension, and to rob their line of its legitimate traffic?

The Chairman said it was a very proper question, and there could be no doubt that the arrangement with this company was eventually to carry out the line to the North-West Provinces of India, and it was fully understood that that arrangement would not be interfered with. The scheme alluded to was part of the company's scheme, and they had absolutely surveyed the whole of the district. He hoped they would leave the matter in the hands of the directors, and they might depend they would leave nothing undone which would tend to secure the interests of the company.

In reply to a question,

Mr. Noad stated that the extra capital beyond the first million for the first section of the line would be about 250,000*l.* or 300,000*l.*, and, when decided, would be allotted rateably among the shareholders.

The proceedings concluded with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

GREAT INDIAN PENINSULAR RAILWAY.

The half-yearly meeting of this company was held on the 29th October, at the office in New Broad-street, Lord Wharcliffe in the chair.

Mr. Nicholson, the managing director, read the report, an abstract of which appeared in the last Mail.

The Chairman, in moving the adoption of the report, congratulated the proprietors on the position of their affairs. He said the accounts showed that 485,185*l.* had been paid into the East-India Company's treasury, and since that period the small balance remaining had been paid, making the whole 500,000*l.*, upon which they were receiving interest. The estimated cost of the line from Bombay to Callian was 500,000*l.*, but he was happy to say that it would be completed for 400,000*l.*, including every expense, leaving 100,000*l.* for any other purpose connected with the undertaking. The estimated cost of 500,000*l.* did not include the construction of a branch line, between four and five miles in length, of a double line of railway, which was included in the 400,000*l.*, so that the saving on the estimate was still more than he had stated. With regard to the great question relating to the prolongation of the line beyond Callian, he believed that problem had been solved. There was very little doubt that the line would be opened from Bombay to Tanna in February next. The shareholders would remember that Mr. Chapman, who was one of the first promoters of the line, had visited India and the locality of the line in 1845 and 1846, at which period he took the opportunity of making a survey of the Ghauts, to satisfy himself as to the best line into the interior, and the result of his observations led him to prefer the passage by the Malsej Ghaut. It was right he (the chairman) should state that, in crossing the Ghauts, there were three passes; that by the Thul Ghaut, to the north-east of Callian, that by Malsej Ghaut, to the east, and that by Bhore Ghaut, to the south-east, of that place. Mr. Chapman had selected the route by the Malsej Ghaut as the most practicable, but the directors felt bound to do everything in their power to select the best route for the interests of the shareholders, and they had the district carefully surveyed by their engineer. It was only yesterday that Mr. Nicholson had received the report of Mr. Berkeley, the engineer, on the subject. It was satisfactory to state that the result of the survey was far more favourable than they had reason to expect. Mr. Berkeley had reported with respect to a passage by the Malsej Ghaut, that it would entail very heavy works, including between four and five miles in tunnelling, a gradient of 1 in 40 for 13 miles in length, and requiring ten years to complete the works. Of the three passes, he found that by the Thul Ghaut the most favourable, and, in a commercial point of view, the most productive. The Thul Ghaut route extended into the great producing districts in that direction. Their engineer found the gradients were unexpectedly favourable by this route, and he had ascertained that about 900 yards of tunnelling would be sufficient. The steepest gradient was 1 in 37 for a distance of 6½ miles. There would be only about 176 yards of viaduct. Judging from the present contracts, and the past experience of the cost of railway works in India, their engineer was of opinion that this line could be constructed for about 10,000*l.* per mile. He (the chairman) thought it was an exceedingly favourable estimate, when it was considered they would have to rise 2,000 feet to the summit level, and that, too, to complete a work almost unequalled in any part of the world. With respect to the pass by the Bhore Ghaut, it was part of the road to Poonah. Although not so much a commercial route as the other, it would be a line of great advantage to the Government, but it would not be so favourable for construction as the Thul Ghaut. The most unfavourable gradient there was 1 in 20 for a distance of two miles, which would require stationary engine-power to work it. The other steep gradients ranged from 1 in 35 to 1 in 67. The tunnelling required for this route would be 1,487 yards, or something less than a mile. The engineer calculated that the cost of construction would be 11,000*l.* per mile. He must own that it formerly appeared to him that they would have very serious difficulty in passing the mountains, and he thought that the report of Mr. J. Berkeley on that subject was very satisfactory. That gentleman had also been very properly instructed by the board to consider the amount of traffic to be expected on the various routes he was instructed to survey, and he had ascertained that the existing merchandise traffic up to the Thul Ghaut was 78,000 tons per annum, and by the Bhore Ghaut 32,000 tons. Taking no more receipts than these would produce, he estimated that the railway by the Thul Ghaut would pay 6 per cent. per annum, and by the Bhore Ghaut 7 per cent. This estimate was made on the supposition that both lines were to be constructed. In Mr. Chapman's estimate of the traffic from the Ghauts he had put it down at 180,000 tons per annum. They were now in a position to consider the extension of their line to the interior. The East-India Company would decide the route to be taken, and he had no doubt they would select that which would be the best in a commercial point of view. The next matter for consideration would be to extend their present line to the foot of the Ghauts. There was another matter to which he wished to allude—it was that of the disputed claim of Mr. Chapman and others who were originally connected with the undertaking. These claims had been compromised and settled, the law expenses paid, and he was glad to say that Mr. Chapman was well satisfied with the settlement. All the merit of settling this difficult question was due to Mr. Nicholson, and reflected the highest credit on his management. The whole of the law expenses and settlement of the claim was effected without taking one farthing from the shareholders or the capital of the company. There was a certain number of shares that were forfeited and returned from Bombay, which Mr. Nicholson proposed should be sold, reserving the nominal value to the company, and appropriating the premiums received on them to the payment of these claims, which was effected in a manner satisfactory to all parties and with the consent of the East-India Company. On the whole, he considered this the most satisfactory meeting they had held. Their line would be completed in a few months to Tanna; there was every prospect of extending it to the producing districts, and they had settled all the questions relating to private claims on the company. Although he did not expect to be present at the opening of the line in India, he looked upon the event as one of no ordinary character; in fact, he had long looked forward to it as one of the utmost importance to the British empire in the East, and as one of those great works which would extend civilization and commerce in that rich country.

The report was unanimously adopted.

It was stated by the chairman, in reply to a question, that he had no doubt the same terms as those upon which the present capital was raised would be granted by the East-India Company to the extent of another 500,000*l.* for the extension of the line.

A vote of thanks was passed to Mr. Nicholson, for his able management of the company's affairs. The meeting then separated.

IMPERIAL PARLIAMENT.

Her Majesty opened the first session of the new Parliament in person, on the 11th inst. The only passage in the royal speech referring specially to Indian topics is the following:—

"You will probably deem it advisable to resume the inquiries which were commenced by the late Parliament, with a view to legislation, on the subject of the future government of my East-Indian possessions."

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, NOV. 4.

The Queen (on the Prosecution of Sir James Brooke) v. the Eastern Archipelago Company.—Mr. Crowder, Q.C., moved to arrest the judgment in this case. The verdict had been found for the Crown upon one of the main issues, and for the defendants upon another. The proceeding was by scire facias, to repeal letters patent, dated the 17th of July, 1847, by which the Crown had granted a royal charter of incorporation to certain persons associated under the style of the Eastern Archipelago Company. The parties had become interested in certain property and a lease from the Crown of land in the island of Labuan, and wanted to found a company for the working of coal and other mines in that district. An application was accordingly made to the Board of Trade for a charter, which was granted. The charter directed that the subscribed capital of the company should amount to 100,000*l.*, and that 50,000*l.* should be paid up within twelve months; that a deed should be prepared to the satisfaction of the Board of Trade, and a copy thereof lodged within the Board of Trade, within a year. Issues being joined upon these directions, the trial took place at the sittings after last term, when the former issue was found for the Crown, and the latter for the defendants, the deed having been lodged, but the required capital not having been paid up. The charter contained the following proviso: that "in case the said corporation shall not comply with any other the directions and conditions in these letters patent contained, it shall be lawful for us, our heirs, or successors, to revoke and make void this our royal charter, and every clause, matter, and thing therein contained, either absolutely or under such terms and conditions as we or they shall think fit." The learned counsel contended that, before a scire facias for the repeal of the charter could be prosecuted in this Court, the charter must be revoked by the Crown, under the great seal or sign manual.

The Court granted a rule nisi.

RE-APPOINTMENT OF THE COMMITTEE ON EAST-INDIA AFFAIRS.—In the House of Commons last night, on the motion of Mr. Herries, the Committee on East-India Affairs was re-appointed. The members proposed to be added to the members of the late Committee, in lieu of those who do not sit in the new House, are the following: Mr. Macaulay, Mr. Ellice, Lord Stanley, Mr. R. Clive, and Lord Palmerston.

LAW APPOINTMENTS.—Her Majesty has appointed Sir W. Yardley to be Chief Justice of the Supreme Court at Bombay, vice Sir Erskine Perry, resigned; and Charles Robert Mitchell Jackson, Esq., Advocate-General of the East India Company at Calcutta, a judge of the Supreme Court at Bombay.

THE LATE LIEUTENANT-GENERAL JAMES CAULFEILD, C. B., M. P., descended from the noble family of Charlemont, was the son of the Ven. John Caulfeild, Archdeacon of Kilmore, in Ireland, where he was born in the year 1785. He was a cadet of 1798, and arrived in India the following year. In June, 1800, he was posted to the 5th regiment of Bengal native cavalry, in which he became lieutenant in 1805. In 1809 he came to England on sick certificate, and returned to India in 1812, when he was appointed to the Governor-general's body-guard. He attained the rank of captain in the 5th cavalry in 1818, and, during the Pindarry war, he commanded a detached squadron of his corps, which attacked a body of Pindarries more than ten times their number. The "conspicuous gallantry" displayed by this squadron, in this "almost unparalleled exertion," was highly eulogized by Colonel Adams, as well as the "promptitude and judgment" evinced by Capt. Caulfeild in the pursuit, conduct which was noticed by the Government in a General Order. He was subsequently appointed major of brigade to the reserve of the Nagpore subsidiary force, and afterwards was deputed to reside in the camp of Jeswunt Rao Bhow. In 1819, he was nominated first assistant to the resident at Indore, and in 1822 political agent in Harowti, upon which occasion the Governor-general commended "the talents, temper, and judgment" exhibited by Capt. Caulfeild in his previous political charges. Whilst exercising the agency of Harowti, which he retained until 1828, he took an active part in suppressing the insurrection of Bulwunt Singh. In 1825, he became major, and lieutenant-colonel in 1829, when he again revisited Europe on sick certificate, the Governor-general in Council conveying to him his sense of the public benefit derived from "his able and zealous discharge of the duties entrusted to his care." In 1832, he was created a C. B., and in 1834 he obtained the brevet rank of colonel. In the following year he returned to India, and was appointed, in 1826, successively, Governor-general's agent at Moorshedabad, and superintendent of the Mysore princes. In 1839, he was advanced to the high post of resident at Lucknow. He attained the rank of major-general in 1841, soon after which he quitted India. In April, 1848, he was elected a director of the East-India Company. In 1845, and again in 1847, he unsuccessfully contested the representation of the borough of Abingdon with Sir F. Thesiger, polling, on the last occasion, within two of his antagonist. At the late general election he was returned for that borough, when he declared himself a moderate reformer. General Caulfeild wrote several pamphlets of a political character. He was a man of more than average ability, firm, decided, and independent. He died at his seat, Copsewood, in the county of Limerick, on the 4th November.

LAUNCH OF THE SCREW STEAMER "BENGAL."—There was launched at Glasgow, on the 30th ult., from the building-yard of Messrs. Tod and Macgregor, the largest iron steamer ever constructed by the hands of Glasgow engineers. She is named the Bengal, and is intended to augment the steam fleet of the Peninsular and Oriental Company in the Indian Seas. This magnificent ship is 10 feet longer than the Great Britain, but, having less depth and breadth of beam, she has not, of course, the same amount of tonnage. The dimensions of the Bengal are as follows:—Length on deck, 310 feet; length from figurehead to taffrail, 330 feet; breadth of beam, 39½ feet; depth, 36 feet; tonnage, 2,900 tons; engines, 470 horse-power; diameter of the screw, 14 feet. She will be fitted up with Lamb's patent boilers, and her furnishing will be on a scale of Oriental magnificence. She has 135 first-class family and single cabins, each furnished with a porthole, and all situated on the main deck. Below are 40 second cabins, for servants. The deck is flush, and presents a splendid sweep, on which a regiment of soldiers might with ease be drawn up. She is to be commanded by Capt. Powell, a gentleman well known to Indian voyagers, from having been in command of the Precursor and Oriental. When in the Indian Seas, the Bengal will be manned by a crew of 200 Englishmen and lascars, including engineers, firemen, &c. Messrs. Tod and Macgregor will lay down immediately another ship for the Peninsular and Oriental Company, to be called the Simla, and which will be 20 feet longer than the Bengal. In the evening, the event was celebrated by a splendid banquet at the Queen's Hotel.

THE DESTINATION OF THE UNDERMENTIONED STUDENTS AT THE EAST-INDIA COLLEGE has been changed as follows:—

Mr. E. B. Thornhill, from Bombay to Bengal.

Mr. Felix Moxon, from Madras to Bengal.

Mr. R. G. Melville, from Madras to Bengal.

THE MAITLAND PRIZE.—Oxford, Oct. 30.—This prize, given triennially, for the best English essay on some subject connected with the propagation of the gospel through missionary exertions in India and other parts of the heathen world, has been adjudged to the Rev. C. K. Robinson, of St. Catharine's Hall. The prize is the interest of a fund raised to perpetuate the memory of Lieut. gen. Sir T. P. Maitland, K.C.B., late commander of the forces at Madras, and the respect and esteem of the subscribers for his character and principles.

THE ENVOY OF THE KING OF ACEH (SUMATRA) was received by the President of the French Republic at St. Cloud, on the 30th ult.

THE DRUSES.—By advices of the 12th October from Beyrout, we learn that the Druses, supported by the Bedouins, commenced hostilities by attacking the Turks in their camp during the night. According to the official accounts, 400 of the insurgents were killed, and half as many made prisoners; but the correctness of this is much questioned, because the Turkish general, immediately after the attack, ordered the garrison of Naplusa to reinforce him. The roads in Syria are more insecure than ever, and the communication between Damascus and the coast is interrupted.

SHAHI KHAN, who has been some time resident here as Chargé d'Affaires from the Shah of Persia, has lately been appointed Minister Plenipotentiary from that court. The Shah has also raised Major Mirza Ibrahim Malcolm, first attaché and interpreter, to the rank of "khan."

THE SIX-MAILED BRUSH.—Hair brushes being desiderata in an outfit, it is appropriate to mention the appearance of a new description of brush which Mr. Baker, of Holborn, has patented. It is without the usual handle, the back being grasped instead. The bristles being placed obliquely, one of these hair-brushes answers the purposes of two others; by turning the brush it acts either as a hard or soft one. The invention saves space and unnecessary trouble; and in all respects seems an acquisition to the toilet.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE lamented death of Lieut.-General Caulfeild, C.B., will create a vacancy in the direction of your affairs at the general election in April next, and I have the honour to inform you that it is my intention (unless previously elected) to proceed to the ballot upon that occasion, when, from the promises of support which I have received, I have the fullest confidence that I shall be placed in the honourable position to which I aspire.

I shall have the honour of addressing you again, as the day of election approaches; and, in the meantime, I respectfully solicit the votes and support of such proprietors as have not yet declared themselves.

I beg to annex the numbers of the unsuccessful candidates at the last contest at the East-India House, January 29th, 1851:—

Mr. John Carnac Morris	652
Mr. Dudley Coutts Marjoribanks	319

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient humble servant,

JOHN CARNAC MORRIS,
Late of the Madras Civil Service.

10, Mansfield Street, 16th November, 1852.

N.B.—My Committee will sit daily, at No. 136, Leadenhall Street.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE lamented death of Lieut.-General Caulfeild having caused a vacancy among the six ex-Directors of the East-India Company, I beg most respectfully to state that, conformably with my former announcements, it is my intention (unless previously elected) to proceed to the ballot at the general election, which will be held in April next, when, from the very great accession of support which I have received from friends, who were previously pledged to Mr. Dent at the last contest, in January, 1851, and subsequently to Mr. Astell, who was elected on the following vacancy unopposed, I can confidently look to success.

Eagerly soliciting a continuance of that kindness, of which I am deeply sensible,

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obliged and very faithful servant,

DUDLEY COUTTS MARJORIBANKS.

My Committee will sit daily at 71, Cornhill.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

PERMIT me respectfully to inform you that it is not my intention to proceed to the ballot upon the vacancy which will occur in April next, in consequence of the lamented decease of Lieut.-General Caulfeild. As soon, however, as the election consequent upon that event shall have terminated, I will do myself the honour again to address you.

I have the honour to be, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your obedient humble servant,

FREDERICK MILLETT.

Woodhill, Ripley, Surrey,
Nov. 10, 1852.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

IT is not my intention to proceed to the ballot on the occasion of the present vacancy, created by the lamented death of my friend and relative, Lieut.-General Caulfeild, C.B.; but I shall take an early opportunity of again personally thanking those proprietors who have already given me promises of their support, and of renewing my visits to those who kindly invited me to wait upon them, when the first vacancy might occur.

I remain, Ladies and Gentlemen,

Yours, very obediently,

J. N. R. CAMPBELL.

10, Harley Street, Cavendish Square,
Nov. 8, 1852.

TO THE PROPRIETORS OF EAST-INDIA STOCK.

Ladies and Gentlemen,—

THE lamented death of General Caulfeild will require the election of a new Director of your affairs in April next. While I am happy in being able to inform you that my canvass is proceeding most favourably, I do not propose to come to the ballot until the vacancy for which Mr. Marjoribanks and Mr. Morris have declared their intention of standing shall have been filled up.

I have the honour to subscribe myself,

Ladies and Gentlemen,

Your most obedient servant,

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 15th of May, 1882, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30	On or before 12th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	35 12 5

* * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE FOR SEA-SICKNESS.
Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 6d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The bristles being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2s. EACH.

Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back?
Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium, or Handless Hair-Brush."

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches.

LIFE DEPARTMENT.—Under the provisions of an Act of Parliament, this Company now offers to future insurers FOUR-FIFTHS of the PROFITS, with QUINQUENNIAL DIVISION, or a LOW RATE of PREMIUM without participation of profits.

The next division of profits will be declared in June, 1885, when all participating policies which shall have subsisted at least one year at Christmas, 1884, will be allowed to share in the profits.

At the several past divisions of profits made by this Company, the reversionary bonuses added to the policies from one-half the profits, amounted, on an average of the different ages, to about one per cent. per annum on the sums insured, and the total bonuses added at the four septennial divisions exceeded 770,000l.

FOREIGN RISKS.—The extra premiums required for the East and West Indies, the British Colonies, and the northern parts of the United States of America, have been materially reduced.

INVALID LIVES.—Persons who are not in such sound health as would enable them to insure their lives at the tabular premiums, may have their lives insured at extra premiums.

LOANS granted on Life Policies to the extent of their values, provided such policies shall have been effected a sufficient time to have attained in each case a value not under 50l.

ASSIGNMENTS OF POLICIES.—Written notices of, received and registered.

HINDUSTANI WORKS BY JOHN SHAKESPEAR, Esq.

I.

NEW EDITION, with GREAT ADDITIONS.

Just published, the 4th Edition, in 1 vol. 4to. price £5 6s. in boards,
SHAKESPEAR'S HINDUSTANI and ENGLISH

DICTIONARY, GREATLY ENLARGED: to which is added, a DICTIONARY, ENGLISH and HINDUSTANI, ENTIRELY NEW.

* * To the First Part of this Dictionary, the author has, by laborious study of Hindustani works, both printed and manuscript, made the most extensive additions. In the Hindustani and English Part, the Hindustani words are printed in their proper characters, together with the pronunciation in Roman letters. The Derivatives, which are traced from the Sanskrit, Arabic, Hebrew, Persian, and Greek, are given respectively in the character peculiar to each of those languages.

The Second Part, English and Hindustani, is ENTIRELY NEW. It comprises the most common English words, and also numerous usual phrases, with the fittest corresponding translations into Hindustani.

REVIEW IN "TIMES," Jan. 3.—"Much attention has been paid to the collecting of scientific terms, especially botanical ones, as well as to the correct rendering them into the technology of Europe." * * * "The Hindustani and English Part of it now contains upwards of 53,000 words and phrases explained, being 7,000 more than in the last edition, and 11,000 more than in any other Dictionary of the like description now extant." * * * "In India, as well as in Europe, the character of this work has long been fully established, and the present edition will greatly enhance its reputation."

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

WE have at length to report some advance made towards the termination of the lingering war in Burmah. Prome has been taken possession of by the British troops, and that city will, we suppose, be the base of the future operations.

It appears from the official despatches, which we publish in another page, that (as announced in our last Summary) the first division of the troops, amounting to 2,300 men, and consisting of one company of the Madras foot artillery, with two 24-pounder howitzers and four 9-pounder guns, H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, H.M.'s 80th regiment, the 35th regiment Madras N.I., and 119 sappers, embarked at Rangoon on the 26th September, and arrived off Prome on the morning of the 9th of October. The flotilla, on board which were General Godwin and Commodore Lambert, was fired upon from a couple of guns and musketry, as it rounded a projecting point on the hill and entered the bay; but with little effect. The enemy, consisting of three or four thousand men, occupied a very fine position on a range of hills about 1,000 yards east from the point where they first opened fire, commanding the town and the large pagoda, which they also occupied. Private accounts state that the defences of the Burmese consisted of a long stockade on the edge of the hills on the right bank, a breastwork of masonry on the point, and guns planted on every position of advantage on both sides of the river.

The troops were landed in the evening, in a suburb to the north of and beyond the town. Upon their advance towards the position selected for the night, a very smart fire of musketry and jinjalls was simultaneously opened from some jungle and houses on the left, and a small pagoda in the front. The grenadiers of H.M.'s 80th regiment, under Captain Christie, immediately advanced at the double towards the pagoda, and a party, consisting of two companies of the same regiment, under Captain Welsh, and accompanied by Brigadier Reigolds, were detached to the left, and in a very short time drove the enemy out of their position, with the loss of only one man killed and a few wounded. The grenadiers kept possession of the pagoda, and the troops had excellent cover during the night, which was passed in perfect quietude.

The following morning, when the remainder of the troops were landed, the commander of the forces advanced through the town, covered by the flank companies of the 18th Royal Irish and H.M.'s 80th regiments, and two 24-pounder howitzers, which were drawn by a party of sailors. Upon the advanced guard reaching the pagoda, it found that the enemy had abandoned that position, as well as the heights beyond it, leaving in our possession an entirely evacuated town, overrun with thick and rank vegetation, and abounding in swamps.

General Godwin thinks it evident that the enemy expected our force to land and advance up the direct road to the Pagoda, along which they had erected two or three small breastworks, as well as removing the planking of several wooden bridges, leading to the Pagoda and the heights beyond it; but by landing at the point he did, he completely turned their position. "I have been," he says in his despatch, "for a long time aware of the assemblage of a large force about ten miles east of Prome, and at which place they also had a very formidable force in the last war, which took Sir Archibald Campbell several days to disperse. I have ascertained from very good authority that they have now about 18,000 men well posted in two or more stockades. It is not my intention to disturb them at present in any way, as by their concentration at that place the fine force now assembling here will have an opportunity of striking a blow which may put an end to much future opposition. It was on this Burmese army that the enemy retreated from Prome upon our entering it." Our whole loss did not exceed one man killed and eleven wounded.

Admiral Austen died of cholera on the 8th October; his remains were conveyed to Trincomalee, where his family are. He was a great favourite with the fleet. He was in the seventy-fourth year of his age, and was believed to be under orders for China immediately.

Nothing was known of our future plans; but the fighting was considered at Rangoon nearly over. This expectation is, however, at variance with the general's information before quoted. The troops were all in the highest health and spirits everywhere.

The Friend of India observes :

The studied silence which has been manifested by the court of Ava, ever since we took possession of Rangoon, seems distinctly to indicate a determination not to make any offers of peace. It was reported at Rangoon, that there had been some recent negotiations between the King of Burmah and the Emperor of China, and that the king was buoyed up with the hope of obtaining help from the Chinese. But all accounts agree in stating that the most vigorous preparations have been made to resist us in our march above Prome. The enemy naturally expected that we should direct our main efforts against the capital, and there the resources of the empire are concentrated.

The determination to stop at Prome, of which the first authentic information was taken down by the late steamers, had therefore created a feeling of great astonishment among our own countrymen in Burmah. It was the general opinion that nothing short of the capture of the capital, which the Burmese consider invulnerable—it is Amerapore, the city of the immortals—would teach the Burmese court the necessity of remaining at peace with us. The termination of the campaign at Prome will, of course, be attributed by an arrogant enemy to the fear of their arms, and not to our moderation, and will lead to interminable attacks on our new frontier, and we may yet be constrained, in self-defence, to march on the capital, and capture it. We have only further to remark that, at the beginning of October, a native Burman, well known to foreigners in Rangoon, fled from Ava, and came down the inland route. He reported that he had seen all the prisoners at the capital. The Moguls and Mahomedans had paid a large sum to have their irons taken off, and to be restored to partial liberty, while all the other prisoners, including Mr. Spiers, the only Englishman at Ava, were in irons, but under the charge of a kind and friendly Woongee.

From beyond the Indus frontier, the Delhi Gazette hears, that Dost Mahomed, the ruler of Cabul, had settled his domestic quarrels by causing most of the inhabitants of the town of Balkh to be massacred, and that he is bent on the capture of Herat. Also that another Russian agent had found his way to Balkh, with a view of courting the allegiance of the Affghans.

A Peshawur letter, dated the 7th October, says:—"We are all very quiet here, and in spite of warlike prognostications, I do not think there will be much campaigning this cold season. The Cabul people, who foment disturbances, have other work on their hands."

There is scarcely any news from India Proper. The heats of October had been intense, and continued to an unusually late period of the season, the cold weather only commencing as November approached. There had been great sickness amongst the troops, especially the Europeans, in Malwa and Central India, in the upper provinces of Bengal, throughout the Punjab and Lower Scinde. The British provinces were universally tranquil: the season, though a most singular one, had turned out on the whole favourable for the agriculturists, and the people seem comfortable and contented. The only exceptions are a few places where the native festivals had brought the Hindoos and Mahomedans into collision. At Cawnpore the disturbances were not quelled without loss of life; two men are reported killed, and the cavalry were called out.

The Commander-in-Chief returned to Simla on the 26th of October. The visit to Cheenae had not been quite so agreeable as had been anticipated.

The Bombay relief will be found in another column.

The Bengal Hurkaru publishes a letter from a Rangoon correspondent, which states that "some momentous and critical change has come over the affairs of the Celestial Empire. What it may be exactly," the writer adds, "I cannot pretend to say; but certain it is, as far as my information goes, that the Lords of the Admiralty wrote out to Admiral Austen to use all despatch in making his way to China, and had the poor old estimable gentleman survived, he would in all probability have left on the 24th October for China as he intended."

BENGAL. BURMAH.

Fort William, Foreign Department, 23rd October.—The most noble the Governor-General in Council has much satisfaction in publishing, for general information, despatches received from Commodore Lambert and from Major General-Godwin, which report the capture and occupation of the city of Prome, after some resistance, and with comparatively trifling loss.

The steam squadron and the boats of H.M.'s ships, conveying the troops upon the Irrawaddy, anchored off Prome on the 9th of October. A fire from the shore was silenced by the fire of the steamers and of the boats. The troops, having been landed, drove the enemy, some three or four thousand strong, from the suburbs; and, on subsequently advancing to the great pagoda and to the heights beyond, they found the position wholly abandoned by the Burman force.

The Governor-General in Council desires to express in the strongest terms his obligations to Commodore Lambert, for the care, the energy, and unwearied zeal which he has shown in directing the naval preparations for advance, and which have conduced so largely to the early and successful renewal of operations in the field. His Lordship in Council begs to offer his thanks to Captain Loch and to Commander Shadwell, for their conduct of the service on the river; and to Commander Rice, for his direction of the body of seamen upon shore. His thanks are also due to Commander Campbell, of the Indian navy, whose merit has been acknowledged by the commodore. The Governor-General in Council has viewed with high approbation the services of the officers and men, who, upon this occasion and for several months past, have been employed in boats upon the river, subjected to severe exposure, and engaged in harassing duties, which they have performed with the utmost alacrity and cheerfulness, and with conspicuous advantage to the public service. To the officers, seamen, and marines of H.M.'s ships, of the Indian navy, and of the Bengal marine, who have been serving upon the Irrawaddy, and to Commander Tarleton, who long commanded them, the Governor-General in Council is desirous of offering his hearty thanks.

The Governor-General in Council has in like manner to assure Major-General Godwin of the satisfaction with which he has viewed the skill and judgment by which the major-general enabled the troops to obtain possession of an important post, without delay, and with but little loss. To Major Mayhew, deputy adjutant-general, to Major Allan, deputy quartermaster general, to Captain Smith, interpreter, to Captain Burne, military secretary, and Captain Chads, A.D.C., the Governor-General in Council tenders his thanks. Especially to Captain Christie and to Captain Welsh, of H.M.'s 80th regt., for the gallant manner in which they led their men to the attack; and to all the officers, non-commissioned officers, and soldiers of the force, the Governor-General in Council desires to give assurance of his cordial approbation.

While thus congratulating the naval and military forces on the first result of their advance, the Governor-General in Council feels it to be due to the memory of an old and gallant sailor, that he should add a public expression of the deep regret with which he has received intimation of the death of his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of H.M.'s ships in the Indian seas. Although Admiral Austen did not survive to witness the successful conclusion of the operations in which he had shared, the Governor-General in Council desires to record his admiration of the stanch, high spirit, which, notwithstanding his age and previous suffering, had led the rear-admiral to take his part in the trying service which has closed his career. His Excellency Rear-Admiral Austen has afforded to the Government of India at all times a cordial and constant aid. The Governor-General in Council has been grateful for his services, and laments his death.

To C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.

H.M.'s ship For's boat on board the Fire Queen, at Prome, 11th October, 1852.

SIR,—I request you may be pleased to inform the most noble the Governor-General in Council, that, having embarked on board the Hon. Company's steam-vessels under my order, H.M.'s 18th and 80th regiments, the 55th regiment Madras N.I., a detachment of sappers and miners, and of the Bengal artillery with their field guns, I despatched them as they were ready to rendezvous off Yangernsiab, a town situated at the upper end of the Pangland creek, which joins the Irrawaddy to the Rangoon river. The commissariat, ordnance, and engineer's stores, and about 1,000 followers attached to the regiments, were conveyed in the steamers, large Burmese cargo boats, five small schooners, and a barque. The cargo-boats, manned by Burmese crews, advanced in three divisions, under convoy of the barges and pinnaces of H.M.'s ships For, Winchester, and Hastings; the barque and schooners were towed by the steamers.

These arrangements being completed, I left Rangoon on the 24th ult., and Major-General Godwin joined me on the following day at Yangernsiab.

Having hoisted my broad pendant on board the Fire Queen, the steamer in which the major-general embarked, I weighed from Yangernsiab on September 27th with the steam squadron specified in enclosure No. 1, and proceeded up the Irrawaddy to Prome, calling at Henzadah on my way. On the morning of the 9th of October, Prome was in sight, and on the squadron nearing the city, the enemy opened fire with a couple of guns and musketry, which was returned by the steamers as we proceeded into the bay, where I anchored in a convenient position abreast of the town for the landing of troops. The enemy continuing to keep up a fire after we had anchored, I sent the boats of the squadron, under the command of Capt. Loch, C.B. of H.M.'s ship Winchester, to throw in a few shells and canister shot amongst them, which had the effect of silencing it for a time, although they kept up a very spirited fire on the boats, which wounded two seamen. They then brought a gun down abreast of the Fire Queen, but had only time to give us one shot before it was dismounted by the fire from the steamers, which effectually cleared a landing-place.

Major-General Godwin now expressed his wish to land the 80th regiment and a party of artillery with two guns, at half-past four, which was effected without any opposition, and the lower town cleared of the enemy.

At daylight next morning, the remainder of the troops were landed, and a brigade of fifty seamen being formed under Commander Rice, at the major-general's request, to assist in working the guns, the pagoda, and other parts of the city, were taken possession of, the Burmese flying as the forces advanced.

Thus the important city of Prome was occupied by British troops, with the trifling loss of one killed and three wounded on the part of the army, while in the squadron only four were wounded, which are named in enclosure No. 2.

My thanks are due to Captain Loch, C.B. for the assistance he rendered me throughout these operations, also to Commanders Shadwell and Rice, of H.M.'s ships Sphinx and Hastings, the former for his unremitting attentions to the instructions I had sent him previously to my entering the Irrawaddy, and to the latter officer for the part he took when on shore with the brigade of seamen. Nor can I speak too highly of Commander Campbell, the officers and men of the Indian navy and Bengal marine. The skill and perseverance displayed by the officers and men belonging to the boats appointed to convey the cargo-boats from Rangoon to Prome, a distance of more than 200 miles, against a rapid stream, exposed occasionally to a fire from the enemy, is deserving of my highest praise.

I have the honour to be,
(Signed) GEORGE R. LAMBERT,
Commodore 1st class, Commander-in-Chief.

To C. Allen, Esq., Secretary to the Government of India.
Foreign Department.

SIR,—The Governor-General in Council was aware of my intention, at the proper season, when the monsoon here had in some measure subsided, to break up the army at Rangoon and remove its head-quarters to Prome. I have now the honour to inform you that the 1st division of this force is in possession of that city.

After some weeks of preparation, the embarkation commenced on the 16th of September, and the 1st division, amounting to 2,300 men, and consisting of one company of the Madras Foot Artillery with two 24-pounder howitzers and four 9-pounder guns, H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, H.M.'s 80th regiment, the 35th regiment Madras N.I., and 119 Sappers, were all on board by the 25th idem. The flotilla arrived off Prome on the morning of the 9th of October; each ship was cannonaded from a projecting point on the hills as it rounded to the city with very little effect. This fire was returned with much spirit by the steamers.

The weather here is so intensely hot, that I disembarked the artillery under Brigadier Foord, H.M.'s 80th regiment, under Lieut-Colonel Hutchinson, with the Sappers under Lieut. Allen, on the evening of the same day, and by sunrise the next morning the 18th Royal Irish, under Lieut.-Colonel Coote, and the 35th Madras N.I., under Lieut.-Colonel Apthorpe.

The enemy, consisting of three or four thousand men, occupied a very fine position on a range of hills about 1,000 yards east from the point where they first opened fire, commanding the town and the large pagoda, which they also occupied.

The troops were landed in the evening, in a suburb to the north of and beyond the town. I then ordered them to advance towards the position I had selected for the night, when, upon the head of the column approaching a dry nullah dividing the suburb from the town, a very smart fire of musketry and jinjalls was simultaneously opened from some jungle and houses on our left, and a small pagoda in our front. The grenadiers of H.M.'s 80th regiment, under Capt. Christie, immediately advanced at the double towards the pagoda, and a party, consisting of two companies of the same regiment, under Captain Welsh, and accompanied by Brigadier Reignolds, were detached to the left, and in a very short time most gallantly drove the enemy out of their position, with the loss of only one man killed and a few wounded, Captain Welsh's party bringing in a jinjall. The grenadiers of the 80th regiment kept possession of the pagoda, which I made the right of my position, and the troops had excellent cover during the night, which was passed in perfect quietude.

The following morning, when the remainder of the troops were landed, I advanced through the town in a direction I had determined upon the day before, from plans of the place in my possession, covered by the flank companies of the 18th Royal Irish and H.M.'s 80th regiments, and two 24-pounder howitzers, which were drawn by a party of sailors under Commander Rice, of H.M.S. Hastings. Upon our advanced guard reaching the pagoda, it found that the enemy had abandoned that position, as well as the heights beyond it, leaving in our possession an entirely evacuated town, overrun with thick and rank vegetation, and, I regret to add, abounding in swamps.

It is evident that the enemy expected our force to land and advance up the direct road to the pagoda, along which they had erected two or three small breastworks, as well as removing the planking of several wooden bridges, leading to the pagoda and the heights beyond it; but landing at the point we did, not only gave us an excellent road, but at the same time completely turned their position, rendering it impossible for them to hold it.

I have been for a long time aware of the assemblage of a large force about ten miles east of Prome, and at which place they also had a very formidable force in the last war, which took Sir Archibald Campbell several days to disperse. I have ascertained from very good authority that they have now about 18,000 men well posted in two or more stockades. It is not my intention to disturb them at present in any way, as by their concentration at that place the fine force now assembling here will have an opportunity of striking a blow which may put an end to much future opposition. It was on this Burmese army that the enemy retreated from Prome, upon our entering it. The bravery and alacrity of the troops on this occasion was as conspicuous as it ever is.

His lordship's thanks are deserved by Captain Christie, of H.M.'s 80th regiment, for the gallant manner in which he led his company to the attack and capture of the small pagoda in our front, and to Captain Welsh, who, with two companies of his regiment, drove the enemy out of their position on our left. The general staff, Major Mayhew, deputy adjutant-general; Major Allan, deputy quarter-master-general; Captain Smith, interpreter to the force; as also my personal staff, Capt. Burne, military secretary, and Lieutenant Chads, aide-de-camp, were active in rendering me every assistance. Brigadier-General Sir John Cheape, commanding the Bengal division, came up to Prome with the portion of his division, embarked, and was present throughout the whole of these operations, and I have great satisfaction in being enabled to leave him in command upon my return to Rangoon, where I am required, and for which place I shall leave this to-morrow.

I leave Major Fraser, of the engineers, and Major Allan, deputy quarter-master-general, at Prome, to carry out the necessary arrangements for the reception of the regiments which will hereafter arrive.

To Commodore Lambert your lordship is deeply indebted for the unremitting exertions, calling forth all possible resources, and anxious solicitude which have accomplished the conveyance of the force to its destination up this noble, but most difficult to be navigated, river. To Commander Rice, for the exertions of himself and men under his command, I feel greatly indebted.

I have the honour to inclose a return of the casualties which have occurred during our operations before Prome, and to remain,

Sir, your most obedient servant,

(Signed) H. Godwin, Major-General.

Prome, 12th October, 1852.

Return of the Killed and Wounded at the Attack and Capture of Prome on the 9th October, 1852.

Engineers.—One wounded.

H.M.'s 80th Foot.—One killed and six wounded.

35th Madras N.I.—One wounded.

Total.—One killed and eight wounded.

A correspondent in the expedition gives us the following details of the attack and capture:—

"About 9 A.M. of the 9th we approached Prome. The defences of the Burmese consisted of a long stockade on the ridge of the hills on the right bank, a breastwork of masonry on the point, and guns planted at every advantageous spot on both banks. As soon as the squadron came within range, they opened fire from all points on them. The fire was returned by the Phlegathon and Maharuddes, being the leading vessels, and by all the rest, as they one by one came within range, and a mutual pounding-match took place. By noon their fire was completely silenced, being driven from all their guns. The squadron then came to anchor, and commenced shelling the place, as although their great guns were silenced, there was yet a constant battery of musketry kept up for the rest of the day from bodies of the enemy concealed behind the numerous pagodas which line the bank and the inequalities of the ground itself.

"In the evening the order was given to disembark the troops, and every available boat of the squadron, with an officer in each, was put into requisition for that purpose. At five P.M. the wing of the 80th from the Enterprise was landed; the only opposition made was by a slight dropping fire of musketry at the boats as they approached the bank from an invisible enemy. The 80th, as soon as they landed, advanced up rapidly, throwing out skirmishers as they went, and dislodging the enemy from all their hiding places, till they got up to the Golden Pagoda, which was defended by about 500 men. Here there was a slight struggle, short and sharp, but decisive, as the enemy, after receiving two or three heavy volleys, broke and fled in all directions. Prome might then be said to be ours, although a good deal more required to be done yet. By the next morning all the troops were landed, with the guns, &c., and other small defended posts were taken and destroyed. It is impossible for me to give you a list of casualties, owing to imperfect information; however, this I know, that it is not heavy, that of the enemy even not being very great. Thus ended the taking of Prome, so far as we are concerned. The land forces, however, have got some more work to do, there being a large stockade about six miles east of Prome, inland, called Yathacemion, garrisoned by 6,000 men, and well furnished with guns and ammunition. This the general will not yet attempt, but intends to await the arrival of the second division; whereas, with the forces that he has with him, about 2,500 men, including artillery, and the assistance of 500 blue jackets, which could be easily supplied by the squadron, he might storm the strongest stockade in Burmah."—Hurkaru, Oct. 23.

Rangoon, Oct. 16.—"The first night an European sentry was cut down on his post at Prome, his body was much mangled, and his head cut off and carried away. A court of inquiry was sitting when the general left Prome, to ascertain how, and by whose orders, a single sentry was posted in a position of so much danger, where undoubtedly a double sentry should have been placed.

"At a place called E-ton-mew, about six miles from Prome, the Burmans have a force of from 5,000 to 6,000 men, with some Cassay horse; they are not to be attacked, we hear, till the second detachment of troops arrive from hence—they, no doubt, will give much annoyance to our men by harassing the pickets, and potting at sentries at night; but this will not last long, for the steamers, in which the general and the commodore returned to Rangoon yesterday, will be sent up to Prome again immediately, with the second detachment.

"Nothing is known yet of the general's future plans, but it is not expected that there will be much more fighting. The order for annexation is daily expected; indeed, we heard by the Berenice, that it had actually been sent from Calcutta, to be published here on the fall of Prome, and Prome being now in our possession, little remains to be done, except occupying Pegue, and sending a force from Martaban, up the Sitang, to Tongnoo. There seems to be little chance of the army advancing to Ava.

"The general has returned in excellent health, leaving Sir John Cheape in command at Prome. Major Fraser, with his usual energy and zeal, had already commenced preparing accommodation for the troops, and arranging for the defence of the place. The troops were in the best health, and eager for work.

"The Berenice arrived yesterday morning, bringing a company of Golanauze from Dum-Dum, whose services are much required, for the duty at the Pagoda was falling heavily on the European artillerymen, now that their number has been so much reduced.

"A detachment of the 1st Madras fusiliers is in orders to-day to embark on Monday the 18th for Bassein, to relieve the detachment of H.M.'s 51st regiment now there. It will consist of two captains, four subalterns, one assistant-surgeon, and 193 non-commissioned rank and file.

"The undermentioned corps and detachments are to hold themselves in readiness to proceed to Promé at the shortest notice:—H.M.'s 51st regiment, and a detachment of Sappers and Miners."—Englishman, Oct. 23.

EXTENSION OF THE RAILWAY.

We stated in February last, that the Court of Directors had determined to relinquish the proposition originally made of carrying the rail in a direct course from Calcutta to Mirzapore, and to adopt the line of the Ganges, whenever they were prepared to sanction the extension of it to the north-west. In consequence of this resolution, the line from Burdwan to Rajmahal was surveyed during the last cold season, and recommended to the Court, and for some time after the termination of that survey, it was considered to be a settled point, that the rail would open on the Ganges at or near the town of Rajmahal. The propriety of adopting this line, however, has been brought in question in the report of Mr. Oldham, the superintendent of the Geological Survey, who "has had several years' experience in laying out, and in constructing railroads," and whose attention was particularly directed by the Court of Directors to subjects bearing on the establishment of railways in India. He has now presented his "Report of the examination of the districts in the Damoodah valley and Beerbhoom, producing iron ore," a considerable portion of which is devoted to an inquiry as to the best line for the rail from Burdwan to the Ganges, and he is decidedly opposed to the line last chosen, viz. that from Burdwan to Rajmahal and along the banks of the Ganges to Mirzapore. His proposal is to carry the rail at once by a direct line to Patna, and for this purpose to extend the present Colliery line, sixty miles farther along the left bank of the Barakur, to a point about ten miles east of the excellent coal field of Curhurbaree, and then to move up, first in a northerly, and then, in a north-westerly direction, to Patna. He gives various weighty reasons for the preference of this line over that of Rajmahal, which he regards as more than sufficient to justify the preliminary examination of the country, through which he proposes to carry the line, and there can be little doubt that no extension of the rail will be sanctioned until this line has been fully surveyed. Mr. Oldham is able to speak from personal inspection only of a part of the line now proposed, namely, "as far as some little distance north and west of Curhurbaree." To this point, the country is exceedingly favourable, and a nearly direct line might be had, on which gradients not exceeding 1 in 300 or 400 could readily be obtained. From Curhurbaree northward, for some miles, there is a "continuous plain." We then come to a hilly region some miles in extent, not yet explored, after which, the country from Guidore to Patna is a complete level. The most remarkable feature in the line thus sketched by Mr. Oldham is its shortness; from the terminus of the Colliery line to Patna, there are only about 200 miles to construct; whereas, the distance from Burdwan to Rajmahal only is about 130. But the distance from Burdwan to Patna, by way of Rajmahal, and the valley of the Ganges is, in round numbers, 300 miles. As the distance from the terminus of the line at the Collieries to Patna is only 200, the saving would therefore be equal to one-third, both as it respects time and money. We may, therefore, be certain that no definite determination will be formed at home of the farther extension of the line, till the plan suggested by Mr. Oldham has been proved to be unfeasible. He very earnestly advocates the adoption of a single line, and he cites two European examples of such lines, which cannot fail to carry much weight.

But the chief argument for a single line lies in its superior cheapness. Mr. Oldham estimates it at 6,000*l.* a mile, whereas the cost of a line, with embankments and bridges for a double line of rail, but with one line of permanent way, he estimates at 10 or 11,000*l.* a mile. We are confident, however, that in Bengal it will not be found to have cost one farthing less than 12,000*l.* a mile. We think it will be readily admitted, that, for many many years to come, a single line will be all that we can possibly need in this country; neither do we require any outlay for the purpose of giving us a higher degree of speed than 500 miles a day. If goods can reach Delhi from Calcutta in forty-eight hours, all the requirements of this presidency will be fully satisfied. It must not be forgotten, moreover, that the prospective circumstances of the country have undergone the most material alteration since the railway was started. At that period we expected to be entirely dependent for the receipt of rapid intelligence, as well as for the conveyance of goods and passengers, on the rail; letters and despatches could come no faster than the train. But the Court of Directors have since that time ordered a line of telegraphs to be laid down throughout India, and they will become the great channel of communication. We can, therefore, afford to put up with a simpler, cheaper, and less elaborate system of railways, than when the speed with which information was conveyed in this empire was to depend on the rapidity and excellence of the rail.

There will, therefore, be no commencement of operations this cold weather, and it must depend upon the completion of the surveys in the next five months, and also on their completeness, whether the Ganges section of the line is to be put in hand even in the cold season of 1853. If there be not a sufficient number of surveyors on the line, and if they are not able to complete the work, and bring the whole question to a point at which it may be considered ripe for decision in the present season, we shall also lose the year 1853-54. We think it will be found that we are as yet a full twelvemonth from the guarantee for another million sterling, and we trust that before the Court of Directors confide the continuation of the rail to the agency of the East-India Railway Company, they will perceive the necessity of infusing some new blood into the veins of that lethargic body. The company, being now assured of its five per cent., appears to have "settled down on its lees," to borrow the emphatic language of Scripture. They appear to be generally asleep, and only occasionally awake; and unless this can be secured, the experiment of laying down a rail by means of a company must be pronounced a failure. The Committee of Directors must be reorganized, or it will not answer as the instrument for the completion of the great national undertaking of the rail in India. For the construction of railways at this presidency, we require a body with more spirit and earnestness, and less encumbered with factious propensities.—Friend of India, Oct. 14.

THE FATAL AFGGHAN EXPEDITION.

Mr. Kaye's account of this transaction, in his History of the War in Afghanistan, was so clear and circumstantial, that we were strongly disposed to accept it as finally disposing of the question. But we have since been informed that this portion of his work is not entitled to that degree of confidence with which it is given, and that, notwithstanding Mr. Kaye's deep researches, and his earnest desire to discover the truth, an authentic narrative of the more early portion of the History of the Afghan War remains yet to be written, although we have forty-two volumes in our possession which have grown out of that expedition. Mr. Kaye attributes the despatch of this grand expedition across the Indus to the military genius and bold and ambitious views of Mr. Henry Torrens. As soon as that gentleman saw our review of Mr. Kaye's work, in which this opinion was embodied, he wrote to us to deny the impeachment, which he considered as injurious to his own character as it was inconsistent with the real truth. At the same time, he was so kind as to put us in possession, as he said, "for the first time, of the facts connected with the origin of the expedition." Thus we have three distinct versions of this historical transaction,—that of Mr. Kaye, in his work; that of the late Mr. Henry Torrens; and that of Sir John Hobhouse, in the House of Commons.—Friend of India, Sept. 23.

Mr. Kaye, in his History of the Afghan War, ascribes a chief part in the origination of that great national blunder and disaster to the late Mr. Henry Torrens, then an under-secretary in the foreign department of the Government of India. Mr. Torrens, as may be supposed, felt no pride in the affiliation of such a misfortune, and lost no time in recording a disclaimer, which he sent to the Friend of India, who has now published it. As we understand the account, Mr. Torrens attributes the first sketch of the scheme exhibited in India to Sir William Macnaghten, but an "analogous" one, concocted by Sir John Cam Hobhouse, was then on its way out to this country. It was on Mr. Macnaghten's draft, however, that the plan of operations was formed, though Mr. Torrens gives the credit of the scheme to Sir John, who indeed first invented it. Mr. Torrens says he wishes he could claim the authorship of the plan—as it originally stood. It was altered, however, and the alteration spoiled it. It contemplated only an expedition to, not the occupation of, Afghanistan, "and it was the change of policy which fathered our disasters." By whom the alteration was introduced does not appear, and we are therefore still left in the dark as to the real author of our Afghan disasters. The Friend appeals to Mr. J. R. Colvin, as the last survivor of those in this country engaged in the contrivance and conduct of the expedition, for a solution of the mystery; we doubt, however, his responding to this call, and perhaps it would be as well if we could forget all about that sad affair, except the lessons which it taught us.—Hurkaru, Sept. 24.

The statement of Mr. Torrens is to this effect:—

"The facts now related for the first time are simply these. Mr. Macnaghten, with me for his under-secretary, most unwillingly accompanied the Governor-General, in 1837, towards the north-west, in which his presence was not required. Mr. Macnaghten, in the conviction that with the peculiar turn of mind of the Governor-General, it were better for him to be with his Council, did his utmost to persuade his Lordship to return from Cawnpore to Calcutta, the rather that it was the famine year of 1837-38. Orders were at one time given for our return, but countermanded. Before our arrival at Cawnpore, Mr. Macnaghten, pressed by his Lordship's anxiety and uncertainties, had prepared a scheme, based upon the independent expedition of Shah Soojah, in 1832,—of which we often spoke together, with reference to the stormy aspect of the times,—which contained the germ of the famous Afghan expedition. The scope of the scheme was: 1. According to the policy of this Government in 1809, to interpose a friendly power in Central Asia between us and any invasive force from the west. 2. To exhibit the military resources of the Government, which had experienced a dangerous decline in native estimation. 3. To set at rest the frontier wars between Affghans and Sikhs, which interfered with the extension of our trade. 4. To effect these objects by means of our pensioner, Shah Soojah, acting in concert with Runjeet Sing; settling, through our mediation, the claims of the latter on Scinde, and of the former on Cashmere and Peshawur; satisfying Runjeet as to his demands for Swat and Booneer, and purchasing from the Ameers of Scinde, by relieving them of tribute and vassalage to the Duranee Crown (Shah Soojah's), the complete opening of the Indus navigation, and the abolition of all tolls. 5. To establish, in the person of a subsidized monarch in Afghanistan, so firm an ally at the head of a military people as might assure us that, in the event of Runjeet's death, the Sikhs would find occupation on the frontiers of Peshawur, for so large a portion of their army as might materially interfere with the assemblage of an imposing force on our own frontier. 6. To pass into Afghanistan, as Shah Soojah had done in 1832, by the Bolan Pass, place him on his throne, subsidized at twenty lakhs a year, and march home through the Punjab, showing our power.

"Such was the project submitted, rather to propose something to the Governor-General in his uncertainty, than to suggest a plan for absolute adoption. A few days afterwards, Mr. Macnaghten told me, that his Lordship had peremptorily rejected it, saying, 'such a thing was not to be thought of.' Some fortnight or three weeks afterwards, letters arrived, I believe, from her Majesty's Ministers in England, suggesting various schemes of diversion in the east, as respected the aggressive views of Persia in connection with a great European power; one, I believe, was analogous to that suggested by Mr. Macnaghten, and it was then Lord Auckland asked for the paper which had been previously submitted to him. I never saw it again after that time; but on it was framed a scheme in consonance with the views of her Majesty's Ministers, which was approved and acted on; but which only contemplated the expedition to, not the occupation of, Afghanistan, and it was the change of policy which fathered our disasters. My duties, which, as under and as officiating secretary, were purely executive, brought me subsequently much into official contact with the Governor-General, but not until after the policy had been decided upon as respected Afghanistan, and so thoroughly decided, that Mr. Macnaghten was ascending the hill with the tripartite treaty in his pocket at the time when 'well-credited report' represents 'somebody'—myself—as rushing down the hill to tell him of the adoption, during his absence, of the policy on which the treaty in his pocket was founded! I well recollect the subsequent discussions and difficulties as to execution, and in these Clerk, Wade, Colvin, Mackeson, Burnes, D'Arcy Todd, Lord, and others had a share. Of those curious councils it does not behove me to speak—save that, previous to one, I remember poor Burnes making his fifth suggestion within the week, to the effect that 'we had but to send Shah Soojah to the mouth of the Khyber Pass, with two battalions of sepoy, and the Affghans would carry him through it in their arms,' when I recollect saying, with some asperity, 'surely it is better not to confuse high authority with fresh plans, when all our energies are needed to carry out the one decided upon.'"

LAW.

SUPREME COURT, OCT. 8.

The Queen v. Thomas William Mostyn.—The prisoner stood charged with having feloniously and falsely forged an endorsement to a bill of exchange; and in a second count, with having wilfully and with fraudulent intent uttered the same, well knowing it to have been forged.

He pleaded Not guilty.

Mr Prinsep appeared for the prosecution, Mr. Ritchie for the defence.

Mr. Daniel McKinlay examined.—Is a partner in the firm of Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co. I know the prisoner; I first knew him on the 2nd September last. On that date he called at our office. He represented himself as an officer in H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish. He also stated that he had just returned from Rangoon, and wished to negotiate a bill for 350*l.* drawn upon Messrs. Cox and Co., army agents, against funds which he stated he had placed in their hands before he had left London. I asked him if he had a letter of credit; he said he had not, but assured me, upon his honour, that the funds he spoke of were in the hands of his agent. I told him that it was against our rules to do business in such a manner. He replied that he wanted the money to send his wife and child home. They were both, he stated, in a very bad state of health, and had been ordered by a medical man to leave this country; that he was quite friendless in Calcutta; and that if I could not, as a matter of business, do what he asked, I might as a matter of kindness. He said the only person he knew here, to whom he could apply, was Dr. O'Callaghan, assistant-garrison-surgeon; and feeling that the doctor's name would be some guarantee as to the actual existence of the funds at the agents, I told the prisoner, that if he got Dr. O'Callaghan to endorse the bill of exchange, I would negotiate it. I then to prevent mistakes got a set of blank bills made out for him by an assistant in our office, and gave them to him. They were three in number, and he took them away with him. This is one of them. The prisoner returned at 4 p.m., and stated that Dr. O'Callaghan had endorsed the bills for him. He produced them. I saw all three. I was not then acquainted with Dr. O'Callaghan. I had seen his signature. I then took the bills, fixed the rate of exchange, and gave him the equivalent in rupees. The amount was Co.'s Rs. 3,336. This is one of the bills that he brought back. I never saw the prisoner again until I saw him in custody at the police, about the 9th or 10th. It was in consequence of information that I received from Dr. O'Callaghan, that I consulted my attorney on this matter, and subsequently the police.

Cross-examined.—One of the bills of exchange is to be sent home to Messrs. Cox and Co. by this mail. I am not sure that it has not been already posted. It is sent in the hope of being paid. It is quite impossible to tell whether there are funds to his credit at the agents or not. His wife and child sailed in the Plantagenet for England. He did not propose to draw out the bills himself, they were prepared for him in my office. I am not quite sure as to whether before the magistrate I used the word "back" in my statement, or said "endorse"—I think it was "back." Yes, the latter was the term. Was not before aware that a special endorsement on the back of a bill of exchange did not restrict a previous blank endorsement.

John Brown examined.—Is an assistant in the employ of Messrs. Gillanders and Co. Remembers the prisoner calling on the 2nd of September last. He called when Mr. McKinlay was out, stated to me that Mr. McKinlay had promised to cash a bill for him, and that he was very much in want of a thousand rupees that day. He showed the bill. When I saw the signature "Daniel O'Callaghan," I said, "Oh, the doctor?" He answered "Yes."

Daniel O'Callaghan, Assistant-garrison-surgeon, examined.—I know the prisoner. He was a lieutenant in the 18th Royal Irish when I first knew him. I heard from him in the middle of August last; he had then just returned from Rangoon. He wrote to me about getting some money. I saw him personally on the 2nd September about one in the afternoon. On that occasion he said—"Here I am in a devil of a fix still about that money I want." I observed, that I thought he would not be able to get money on the security he had to offer. He answered, "I can get the money I want here, they only require a good name." I said, "You are very fortunate indeed." He answered that the only difficulty there was, was that he could not get a person to endorse his bill. I said that it was very unfortunate that he had no friend here on whom he could make a claim. He replied, "Gillanders, Arbuthnot, and Co. have agreed to let me have what I want upon your name." I said that I could not sign for him, as it would be signing a lie and a falsehood, for I was not worth 350*l.* nor 350 rupees, nor 350 pice. He replied, that the signature was a mere matter of form. I answered, "If you will bring me two or three lines to that effect from Messrs. Gillander and Co., I will sign for you." He produced three bills of exchange and a letter of advice, and asked me to endorse the former for him. Yes, accept, and not endorse, was the word. The signature on this bill is not mine. It bears no resemblance to my handwriting. I never in any way authorised my name to be put to this document. When the prisoner was leaving my place, he said, "Well, you will not do it for me?" It was on or about the 6th inst. that I made enquiries concerning where he had raised money. I do not know what induced me to do so. I never saw the prisoner afterwards until at the police.

Cross-examined.—It was on the 6th Sept. that I first heard of the prisoner's having used my name. I heard it through a friend of mine in Calcutta, that I had commissioned to make enquiries on the subject. I don't know what induced me to inquire, I had had no communication with the prisoner. I had heard it mentioned that he had got money. The prisoner's wife has left for England. She went in the Plantagenet. When she left the prisoner was in custody. Mrs. Mostyn was not present when the prisoner spoke to me about the endorsement. The conversation that I had with the prisoner on that occasion lasted about ten minutes. He, the prisoner, said the signature was a mere matter of form. The prisoner has resigned the service.

John Blessington Roberts, Deputy Superintendent of Police, examined.—Arrested the prisoner in the fort. Told him that he was arrested for forging Dr. O'Callaghan's name to a bill of exchange. He said "I can explain everything," and would have added more, but that I cautioned him.

Cross-examined.—Saw Dr. O'Callaghan next day. I had been ordered to search the residence of Mrs. Mostyn, and to take any money that might be found. I requested Dr. O'Callaghan to write to Mrs. Mostyn to request her to hand over any of the money that she might have in her possession, and so preclude the necessity for my searching her place. She sent the money, twenty sovereigns and four rupees. There was a ten rupee note found upon the prisoner when he was arrested.

His Lordship remarked upon the illegality of the search; it was illegal and actionable unless in cases of theft or the reception of stolen goods.

Mr. Ritchie, for the prisoner, stated that he was an officer of the 18th Royal Irish, a regiment as distinguished for its gallantry in the field, and now winning fresh laurels, as its officers were for the high sense of honour which distinguished them in their every transaction. He (Mr. Ritchie) hoped to be able to prove to the jury, that, as far as moral guilt went, the prisoner was not the culpable criminal, that the present indictment described him as. There may have been very blameable imprudence; but he hoped to be enabled to prove that actual guilt there was none. As to the first count, he submitted that there had not been the slightest evidence produced by the prosecution in its support. There had not been one particle of proof adduced to show that the signature, alleged to have been forged, had been so forged by the prisoner, and consequently he thought that portion of the charge must be considered as disposed of. The second count went to charge the prisoner with having wilfully, and with fraudulent intent, uttered the forged document in question; but to constitute a crime of this nature it was necessary that good proof should be forthcoming, that the prisoner had actually uttered the document endorsed with the forged signature; that the signature which was alleged to be a forged one was really such; and that the utterance of such forged document had been done with a fraudulent intent. Neither he nor his client wished to resort to any shuffling or mendacious plea, or to avail themselves of any of those quibbling extrications which the law often affords to persons so situated. On the contrary, his client sought no concealment, nor wished to evade any, even the most searching inquiry, and he was accordingly prepared to admit that the prisoner had actually uttered the document in question; and further, that the prisoner was the person who had actually appended the signature to the bill of exchange. Though he was willing to admit thus far, it must be borne in mind that he (the learned counsel) most emphatically repudiated any other culpability upon the part of his unfortunate client than what was due to a very glaring act of imprudence. Although, on the part of the prisoner, he (Mr. Ritchie) had acknowledged the occurrence of two of the three ingredients which the law declares necessary to bringing home to the prisoner the crime with which the second count of the indictment went to charge him, he must most emphatically deny, and he felt confident of being able to shew that he had substantial and convincing grounds for doing so, the existence of any, even the slightest particle, of fraudulent or dishonest intent on the part of his client. The prisoner had lately been an officer in the military service of Her Majesty, he had resigned that service, and had only returned from Rangoon immediately previous to the present unfortunate occurrence. He was a married man, and his wife and child were, as had been shewn in evidence, in very infirm health at the time that this alleged forgery is stated to have taken place. Under these embarrassing and painful circumstances, viz. in a strange city, and without the necessary funds to convey his family to England, the prisoner found himself. He had, as he well knew, funds to a very considerable amount in the hands of his English agents, Messrs. Cox and Co., the celebrated army agents, and it was upon this firm that he, the prisoner, had drawn the bill of exchange. As the jury had heard read from the letter of advice, which the prisoner had written for despatch to his agents, the funds alluded to had been placed in the hands of Messrs. Cox and Co. for the purchase of the prisoner's company. Now, under these circumstances, he, Mr. Ritchie, contended that there could not by any probable possibility have been a fraudulent intent on the part of the prisoner. The prisoner had not drawn upon persons who had no funds of his, but upon a house which held in their possession no less a sum than 1,100*l.* of his money. The prisoner could not have intended to defraud the Messrs. Cox. No; such would have been impossible. Neither could he have intended to defraud Dr. O'Callaghan, whose name had been used, for through the entire transaction the Doctor had incurred no liability. Appending his (Dr. O'Callaghan's) name to the bill did not make that gentleman responsible, consequently his client could not under these circumstances have meditated a fraud against him. Nor could he have intended the perpetration of fraud against Messrs. Gillanders, Arbutnot, and Co., for he had given them a bill for a sum equivalent to that with which they had accommodated him, which bill was drawn upon his agents at home, in whose hands he knew that a far larger sum was; indeed, as the evidence of Mr. McKinlay showed, there was now about to be despatched to England one of the bills in question in the expectation of its being duly honoured. To be sure, he was not in a position to adduce direct and immediate proof that the 1,100*l.* of which he had spoken was in the possession of the Messrs. Cox, or that that firm had any funds at all placed to the credit of the prisoner. But considering the date on which this alleged crime is stated to have been committed, the distance that the agents are from this, and the impossibility of having communicated with them in the interval between the 2nd September last and to-day, and the consequent and palpable impossibility of the prisoner at the bar having been able to adduce proof upon this most material point, the learned gentleman contended, and he anticipated his lordship would coincide with him, that the jury were bound, not only to give the prisoner the benefit of whatever doubts they might entertain, but also to regard him as one who had already proven the existence of the alleged funds at his agent's. Such a course on the part of the jury would be not only consonant with justice and law, but one that he felt assured would be also recommended to them by the learned judge. Relative to this point the jury would remember that the doctor had stated in his evidence, that when the prisoner applied to him to endorse the bill of exchange, he replied, on a principle worthy of more extensive imitation, that he was unable to do so, because he had not funds, and could not sign for what he did not possess. The prisoner's reply, it will be noted, was in the manner of a man urging the impossibility of the doctor incurring any loss, because he had funds more than sufficient to meet double such a demand. To another very important feature of his client's defence, Mr. Ritchie must call the marked attention of the jury. It was this, that Dr. O'Callaghan, to whom neither he nor his client would wish to impute the slightest item of falsehood, and who had given his evidence with the most honourable candour, may in reality have given that permission to append his name to the document in question, which he now denies, and has most probably forgotten. Recurring again to the evidence of Dr. O'Callaghan, the learned counsel finds him, on the occasion of the prisoner's soliciting his assistance in raising money to take himself and family to England, saying, when the prisoner told him that he would be enabled to raise money on the conditions that he was able to offer, if he could only get the assistance of one good name, "Then I consider you very fortunate indeed." Now, from the style of such an expression, it was not in the learned gentleman's opinion at all unlikely, but that Dr. O'Callaghan may have either given the permission to use his name to the prisoner, and now forgets having done so, or that he made use of some further expressions similar to that he had quoted from his evidence, that may have induced the prisoner to conceive that he was perfectly authorised to append it to the bill of exchange in question, more particularly as he (the prisoner) well knew that the doctor could not, by any possibility, come to any pecuniary loss by his doing so. This hypothesis seems the more likely, when we remember that the signature in question could not with any probability have been intended as a counterfeit, for it has been stated by Dr. O'Callaghan in evidence that it does not bear the slightest indication of an attempt at resemblance to his name, as on all occasions written by himself. Nor need it be forgotten, that the doctor, who is now unable to recollect the precise cause which originated in his mind the necessity for inquiring as to whether the prisoner had raised money or not, may have had such a thought suggested to him by some faint lingering trace of a forgotten permission, that he had accorded the prisoner, hovering in his mind. But there is another most important aspect in which this matter can be regarded, and which if given its due weight must go far towards exonerating my client from all fraudulent intent. Dr. O'Callaghan, it will be in the recollection of the jury, stated, that when the prisoner applied to him to endorse the bill, that he, the prisoner, stated that the signature was a mere matter of form. Now it would be for the gentlemen of the jury to decide whether they did not believe, that in this instance the prisoner gave a truthful interpretation of his own views upon the matter. Judging from the tenor of the evidence of Mr. McKinlay, it was not at all improbable,—on the contrary, it approached to a certainty,—that the prisoner, a military man, and not supposed to be acquainted with all the legal technicalities of such monetary documents, was under the impression that he was doing, what not only was not illegal, but perfectly justifiable, when he appended Dr. O'Callaghan's signature. In all probability, the prisoner considered that he was merely giving the Doctor's name, as that of one who, having before known him, would be able to speak as to the likelihood of his having funds in the hands of his agents.

Mr. Justice Colville, in charging the jury, explained the law relative to the crime with which the prisoner was charged. It was his lordship's painful duty, as a calm and dispassionate judge, to take a somewhat severer view of this case than had been given to the jury by the counsel for the defence. It had been laid down by Baron Parke, that if a man forged a bill, even with the intention of taking it up himself when due, that that man was, nevertheless, in the eye of the law, guilty of the crime of forgery, and punishable for such; and considering the similar features of the present case, the decision of the learned baron must have considerable influence upon it. As to the first count of the indictment, his lordship was not so certain that it was altogether unsupported by the evidence. The blank bills of exchange had been proved to have been given into the hands of the prisoner, and after an absence of some hours, he had returned with them to the office from whence he had originally received them, and during this interval it was that the forged signature had been written. The bills had been in the possession of the prisoner during this time at least; it had not been proved that they had passed into other hands. Relative to the second count of the indictment, his lordship commented upon the hypothesis of the learned counsel for the defence. As for the point raised by that learned gentleman concerning the claim that he had to the admission, as a matter proven, of the existence of funds, to the prisoner's credit, at his agents at the time the offence had been committed, his lordship was of opinion, that it was a point that ought to be conceded. His lordship then proceeded to review the evidence, and having done so, concluded by impressing upon the jury the necessity that existed for their giving the case the utmost attention, to enable them to arrive at such a verdict as they could conscientiously concur in.

The jury retired, and after an absence of about an hour, returned with a verdict of—Guilty on both counts. The foreman stating, that ten out of twelve of the jury concurred in most earnestly recommending the prisoner to the merciful consideration of the Court,

The Court sentenced the prisoner to seven years' transportation to Van Diemen's Land.

THE ABOLITION OF THE INVALID ESTABLISHMENT at the three presidencies is, we are told on excellent authority, absolutely decided upon, and the order for carrying out the decision of the Court of Directors will be transmitted to the supreme government in this country at a very early date, prior to the period at which it is to take effect. It is understood that officers, whose health will not allow them to remain in the active branch of their profession, will be allowed to retire on the pension their service in India may entitle them to. Any officer entitled by long time of service to a pension, and who may have become inefficient from wounds received in action or in the performance of any public duty, or who may have become so from disease contracted in the performance of his services to the state, will have his case specially considered with the view of his receiving such increase to his pension as he may be entitled to by right of service. The court are, we hear, inclined to go even further than this, and propose to consider most indulgently the case of any officer not entitled to pension by reason of his length of service in India, if it can be satisfactorily proved that he has become inefficient from causes similar to those above stated in the case of officers entitled to pensions.—Delhi Gazette.

NATIVE GENEROSITY.—Baboo Rammobun Mullik, a very wealthy native of Calcutta, repaired to the common gaol in Calcutta, and released eighty debtors who had been confined under warrants from the Small Cause Court, by paying their debts to the extent of Rs 3,000. This act of generosity has been performed by other native gentlemen in former years; but as they allowed their intentions to transpire for some time previously, there was a rush to get into gaol by those who were in debt, and who could prevail on their creditors to sue and to incarcerate them. In the present instance, the Baboo was so discreet as to conceal his designs, and he has thus been enabled to purchase the credit of releasing all debtors confined for small sums at a very moderate outlay.

DECREASE OF THE STAMP DUTY.—From the Hurkar we learn that the Board of Revenue has called upon the collector of Calcutta for an explanation of the cause of the falling off which has recently been visible in the stamp revenue of the city. The collector has attributed it to the circumstance that the Supreme Court recognises no difference between stamp and no stamp. But this will scarcely account for the diminution of the revenue, as the court have acted on this principle for many years, and have introduced no new rule of late. It must apparently be attributed to a decay of litigation, which must always be a source of sincere congratulation even to Government.—Friend of India.

H.M.'s 3rd DRAGOONS are at length ordered to return to England. The soldiers who may be desirous of extending their services in India, are at liberty to volunteer into the 9th Lancers, the 14th Light Dragoons, and the 10th and 15th Hussars.

CLOTHING OF ENGLISH SOLDIERS.—A correspondent of the Englishman, writing from Rangoon, animadverted strongly on the absurdity of compelling the European soldiers in Burmah to adhere to a uniform which would be cumbersome in Canada. A serjeant of H.M.'s 18th was struck down, on the 28th, by the sun.

A DISTURBANCE, attended with bloodshed, took place on the 17th and 18th October, in the city of Cawnpore, in which, by one account, the Mahomedans were the aggressors; by another, the Hindoos. Great excitement prevailed,—the shops were shut up, and it was feared that serious mischief would take place on the last day of the Mohurrum.

LIEUT. MITCHELL.—We learn from the Mofussilite that a court-martial had assembled at Umballa, on the 20th October, for the trial of Lieut. Mitchell, of the 75th foot, on charges arising out of a game of billiards, and that the result of the trial would determine whether another officer, then in arrest, as implicated in the same transaction should be brought to a court-martial or not.

FORGERY.—An attempt has been made to defraud the Bank of Bengal by means of forged cheques of one of the higher officers of the Supreme Court. The principal man engaged in this nefarious transaction, is a native of respectability.

NATIVE PROCESSIONS.—The petition of the Hindoos regarding their processions has been successful. Every precaution has been taken to prevent any collision or disturbance that might be expected to arise from the Hindoo and Mahomedan festivals happening together. The Hindoos are to be allowed three days only for their processions, the first being from 5 to 9 A.M., the second in the middle of the day, and the third from 3 to 9 P.M.; this, at least, was the plan proposed, and we believe likely to be carried out.—Morning Chron.

ADMIRAL AUSTEN.—The following is from Rangoon, dated 16th October:—"I have to announce, with very great regret, the decease of Rear-Admiral Austen, C.B., who died of cholera about 4 o'clock P.M. on the 8th inst. He was taken ill the day before, when off Prome, and his remains were brought down in the steamer Philo, which has since conveyed them to Bassein, whence they are to be taken to Trincomalee on board H.M.'s steam-ship Rattler. This arrangement was made by Captain Austen, of the Hastings, the admiral's nephew and son-in-law, and is said not to be entirely approved of by the commodore, depriving him as it does, for a time, of the services of one of the few steamers that can at all times go up and down the Paulang creek, for the Philo remains at Bassein till the return of the Rattler from Trincomalee. The Hastings, which leaves this in a few days for England, could surely have conveyed the poor admiral's remains to Trincomalee."

THE LIEUTENANT-GOVERNOR intends leaving Agra on or about the 30th inst. on his annual tour. Dr. Francis accompanies the camp as medical adviser, and Major Bignell, of the 69th N.I., with two companies, will compose the escort. The route is at present fixed for Allahabad, thence across to Goruckpore, returning by Ghazeeepore, Benares, &c., to Agra, which will not, in all probability, be reached before March 1853.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 9.

TRAVELLING FACILITIES.—A man may now travel from Delhi or Meerut (through the aid of one of the rival transit companies) for Rs. 170, in seven days.

THE TENTH NATIVE INFANTRY embarked for Rangoon yesterday, in excellent order and good spirits, and with not a man missing. Emissaries from other corps, it is said, had endeavoured to dissuade the men from crossing the kala pancee.—Hurkaru, Oct. 20.

A RULE has just been introduced by Government, to the effect that, when any orders are given by a Board, the individual members who suggested or insisted on the orders, are to have their names in the margin of the letter conveying the orders. This will frighten timid, peace-loving men from acting up to the best of their judgment, and lessen the respect for the Board's orders.—Ibid.

THE LANDOUR POLICE.—On the morning of the 6th inst., the corpses of four men, disfigured by ghastly wounds, were found in the heart of the Landour bazaar. The murderers escaped detection and even suspicion for several days, but they are now pretty sure of meeting their reward. There has come to light sufficient to implicate the police, with most damning evidence, as the actual perpetrators of the crime. The instigator yet lurks in congenial darkness, though there are not wanting certain rays of light to give some vague marks of his identity. Concurrent with this inquiry will run some investigations into the doings of the Landour cantonment police; and startling revelations may be looked for.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 26.

BRUTALITY.—In the course of last month, a creature named Mathwin, a British subject residing at Benares, settled a domestic quarrel by cutting off his wife's nose. The nose was sewn on again almost immediately, and under the skilful treatment of Dr. Leckie of Benares, the poor woman has suffered no permanent mutilation. The ruffian pleaded his right as a British subject to be tried at Calcutta, and was accordingly sent down with the witnesses at no little expense to Government. He was found guilty, and sentenced to ten years' transportation.—Ibid.

NEW BONUS FUND.—Brevet-major Auchmuty Tucker, 9th light cavalry, proposes a new bonus fund to his brother officers. The bonus to a colonel on retiring is to be Rs. 35,000, raised by ten regiments of regulars by contributions of Rs. 35,000 each.

THE BARQUE "NIZAM." Capt. Jarman, bound for London, was wrecked on the 14th of October, at the Miran Creek, two miles above the James and Mary. She was at anchor. The ship took a tremendous sheer, dragged her anchor, took the ground, and rolled over on her beam ends. The second mate and one seaman were drowned.

THE MOHURRUM.—We hear that some alarm has been felt at Moorsheadabad as to the peace of the place during the approaching holidays. This year the Dussora and the Mohurru coincide, and consequently the Hindoos will be rejoicing when the Mussulmans are mourning. The Nuwab's people have hitherto been accustomed to have things all their own way, and apprehensions of violence on their part are entertained. We conclude that precautions will be taken to prevent a collision. But perhaps the best method would be to leave them to themselves, and allow the different religionists to fight out their quarrels without interference.—Englishman, Oct. 23.

THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH saved opium purchasers Rs. 28,000 at the expense of Government, by giving intelligence at a critical moment of the decline of prices in China.—Hurkaru.

NAVIGATION OF THE JHELUM.—We are sorry to learn that there is no chance of steamers on the Jhelum. Lieutenant Grounds, of the Indian navy, who surveyed the river a few months ago, and we believe went up as far as the station in the Conqueror steamer, reports that there is not sufficient water all the year round for the purpose.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 13.

SICKNESS AT UMBALLA is still very prevalent. Cholera is said to have diminished greatly, and there is only a case now and then, but in H.M.'s 75th regiment the casualties are very frequent, averaging two daily, while in their hospital there are upwards of two hundred and twenty patients suffering chiefly from serious fever, and many more are convalescents, unfit for duty. A like proportion of sickness exists in the other regiments, though their mortality is but small. The 75th regiment moved out into camp on the 8th instant, to try the effect of change, and the artillery were to follow their example on the 10th. The weather is described as fine, and the mornings delightfully cool.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 13.—The sickness is, we are glad to learn, considerably abated, those men of the 75th who are in camp are described as very healthy, but a change of camp was deemed necessary, and this measure, owing to no hospital establishment being allowed, could not be carried out.—Ibid. Oct. 23.

CAPT. PHAYRE.—The Hurkaru has heard it confidently stated that Captain Phayre is the fortunate officer selected for the post of commissioner of Pegu, when that province is annexed to the dominions of her Majesty and of the East-India Company.

BREACH OF OFFICIAL CONFIDENCE.—From the Hurkaru, it would appear that in Calcutta, as well as in Bombay, the secrets of the public offices have been oozing out of the official boxes, in spite of Chubb's locks and patent detector keys. It would appear, that one of the Calcutta papers has been the recipient of facts, which ought not to have been made public, from the Accountant-General's office. The heads of the establishment "have been diligently endeavouring to discover the traitor, but hitherto without success." The authorities have threatened to stop the salaries of all the clerks employed in the office, until the delinquent, who let out the secrets, is found out.

MAHAMURREE, OR THE PLAGUE IN INDIA.—An intelligent correspondent writes from the hills:—"I have been completely successful with Mahamurree, having cured the only case I had to operate on, by adopting the hydropathic treatment for English typhus, viz., wet sheet and sweating blankets. Mahamurree is now clearly proved to be identical with the plague of Egypt and Constantinople." The last sentence would be calculated to excite alarm, were it not for the fact, that the whole of India from the foot of the hills may be considered geographically secured against the plague, this pestilence never having been known to approach the tropics. Of the identity of Mahamurree with the plague, we think no one can form a doubt who has read Dr. Rennie's valuable remarks on the subject, contained in his report on Kumaon. Owing to the scanty population of the hills, the Indian plague can never be very destructive to human life. Indeed its existence may be solely attributed to the extremely filthy habits of the paharias. Let us be thankful that the plains of India are out of the "plague latitudes." The indigenous diseases of the country, endemic and epidemic, are destructive enough without the aid of foreign importations.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 26.

CASTING IRON WITH CHARCOAL.—A letter from Roorkee says:—"The long-disputed question of the practicability of fusing and casting iron with charcoal is set at rest. There have lately been three trials at the works here, and each was successful in perfectly fusing the iron. In the first instance, owing to the cupola being damp, having only just been built, although the iron was poured into the pouring-ladle, it cooled too soon to pour; but on the second attempt the casting was excellent, and fully equal to any turned out at Calcutta. To-day they have cast again with perfect success. Of course time will do wonders in the way of improvement; for as no one on the works knows much about the practical part of casting iron, they will be more perfect as the result of each experiment becomes known. There can be no doubt that the great difficulty is overcome, as it has been hitherto maintained in Calcutta, that it was utterly impossible to fuse iron without the aid of coke, and it has been done at Roorkee with common charcoal and the broken bits of tram-wheels—the worst description of iron which is made in England."—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 27.

DANGEROUS EFFECTS OF SANITARY MEASURES.—Talking, the other day, to a native of rank, who had been forty-two years in Lahore, we asked him whether the place had ever before been visited by so much sickness? "No," was his reply. "Cholera appeared one year, but such fevers never."—"To what do the people attribute the present epidemic?"—"My firm belief," was the reply, "is, that the measures you are taking to clean the town are the cause. You are stirring up the filth that would have otherwise remained harmless!"—Lahore Chron. Oct. 6.

MR. W. T. MOSTYN, lately a lieutenant in H.M.'s 18th Royal Irish, and a member of one of the best families in England, now under sentence of seven years' transportation for forgery, had accompanied his regiment to Burmah, but in a fit of insubordination, incited by some real or fancied wrong, he broke his sword across his knee, and threw up his commission. He returned to Calcutta, with a wife and child, utterly destitute, and without a single friend. Being anxious to send his family home without delay, he applied to Messrs. Gillanders and Co., one of the most respected firms in Calcutta, to negotiate a bill of exchange on Messrs. Cox and Co., the army agents, for £350, stating at the time that he had funds in Messrs. Cox and Co.'s hands, amounting to £1,100. The merchants consented, though unwillingly, to negotiate the draft as an act of kindness, provided Mostyn could procure the acceptance of some well-known person in Calcutta, and it was agreed that the acceptance should be that of Dr. O'Callaghan, garrison assistant-surgeon at Fort William. Mostyn then applied personally to Dr. O'Callaghan, to whom he appears to have been slightly known, and asked for the use of his name. Dr. O'Callaghan replied that he could not honestly accept the bill because he had no means of paying it, should he be called upon to do so. Mostyn insisted that it was a mere matter of form, and received the very proper reply, that if he would obtain a statement in writing to that effect from Messrs. Gillanders and Co., the acceptance would be given. He then went away, supposing, as he says, but as it is hardly possible to believe, that Dr. O'Callaghan had given his leave to sign his name. He did sign it, obtained the money, and two or three days afterwards was arrested for forgery, on which charge he has since been convicted and sentenced, as we have said above. His unfortunate wife and children are on their way to England—probably not to learn the whole extent of their misfortune and disgrace until their arrival. It is not yet known whether Mostyn really has the alleged funds in the hands of Cox and Co. Should his assertion to this effect prove true, the reader will be disposed to take a very charitable view of a case which has created a most painful sensation in Indian society.—Delhi Gaz. Oct. 26.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

APPOINTMENT OF POSTMASTERS TO STATIONS.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Oct. 1, 1852.—In communication with Government, his Exc. the Com.-in-Chief is pleased to direct that the 1st, 2nd, and 3rd paragraphs of the general order of 1st May, 1839, regarding the appointment of postmasters to stations, shall be cancelled, and the selection for these situations in military cantonments is for the future to rest exclusively with the postmaster-general; the brigadier or officer commanding at such stations will therefore only provide for sudden or emergent vacancies, as directed in the 4th and 5th paragraphs of the general order above quoted, until permanent arrangements for the discharge of the duties adverted to can be made by the postmaster-general.

MADRAS.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 24th reached Madras Oct. 25th, per Hindustan.

TYRANNY OF A NATIVE OFFICIAL.—Streenavassa Row, late amildar and head of police of Nundicootoor talook, in the district of Kurnool, was tried, 15th October, 1851, before the agent to the Governor of Fort St. George, at Kurnool, upon the following indictment. With having, about April, 1850, whilst tahsildar and head of police of the Nundicootoor talook, in gross abuse of the authority vested in him, and in direct violation of the Regulations, illegally caused some peons under his orders to flog publicly, in his cutcherry, four cultivating ryots of the cusbah of Nundicootoor, with leather straps called jairbunds, kept by him for such unauthorized punishments; with having incited the peons who were obeying this order to flog them more severely, thereby causing them to flog to such a cruel extent, that one of these ryots staggered home with difficulty, remained lying down in suffering for three days, and then expired, his death having been the consequence of the brutal chastisement illegally inflicted on him by the orders of, and in the presence of, the prisoner. It was proved that the prisoner had long been in the habit of inflicting corporal punishment on the ryots in the talook under his charge, for the purpose of extorting money from them, and that, on the occasion referred to in the indictment, four ryots had been flogged in the prisoner's cutcherry, one of whom died three days afterwards from the effect of the flogging he had received. The prisoner pleaded in his defence that the charge had been got up against him by the assistant agent, Lieut. Russell, and that the deceased had died of cholera; but the latter plea was fully disproved by the evidence of several of the witnesses named by him in its support, some of whom admitted that they had been tampered with to depose falsely, and by that of the witnesses for the prosecution. The other plea urged was also shown to be altogether without foundation, the agent himself having taken the initiative in the inquiry in his magisterial capacity. In reporting upon the trial, the agent (Mr. T. D. Lushington) expressed his conviction of the guilt of the prisoner upon both counts of the indictment, and the Court of Foujdaree Udalt (present, E. P. Thompson) sentenced him to seven years' imprisonment, with hard labour, in irons.—Hindu Chronicle, Sept. 13.

GOLD IN THE MADRAS TERRITORY.—Our readers may have had their attention attracted by a paragraph in our Bangalore news (see p. 641), announcing the discovery of a nugget of gold in the vicinity of Chittledroog; and from the rapid changes of an Indian society, many may not be aware that the Madras presidency, more than those of Bengal and Bombay, has been surveyed throughout its length and breadth by Buchanan, Voysey, Heyne, Turnbull, Christie, Benza, Newbold, and Malcolmson, all of whom reported the existence of gold in various parts of the country. There are now, also, in the Central Museum, specimens of the matrix rocks and of the sands in which the gold is found; and specimens of rocks are being received said to be of similar structure to those of the gold tracts of California and Australia.—Athenaeum, Sept. 28.

ATTEMPT TO POISON.—Another attempt was lately made to poison Mr. Forsyth, the civil and session judge at Tellicherry. The poison was in his soup. It was discovered in good time. The soup being tried on a dog caused its death.

COMMOTION IN A NATIVE CORPS.—The Bangalore Herald states that a great commotion has been excited among the sepoys of the 29th regt. of Madras native infantry, now stationed at Trichinopoly, by the serving out of some undress caps which did not suit their taste, and so they became excited to mutiny. The result was a court-martial on the ringleaders, who were found guilty, and sentenced, some to transportation and some to imprisonment. The Commander-in-Chief, however, has commuted transportation to imprisonment.

THE BLACK TOWN ASYLUMS.—We have received the reply of the Directors of the Black Town Asylums to the charges (see p. 583) brought against them by the Rev. Mr. Taylor. Caring more for the Church than for the parties assailed, we could have wished that the vindication of the latter had been weak and ineffectual. But, after reading the statement now made, we feel that there is no escape from a single conclusion. The remote possibility which occurred to us, when first commenting on the accusations, has been realised, and we now find that a clergyman can turn the influence derived both from the pulpit and the press to purposes as far removed from the proper objects of the Christian ministry, as they are foreign to the habits and sympathies of society. We looked upon him as an earnest man, impeded in his efforts to do good, and casting about to obtain help for the oppressed. We knew that he might not have exhausted all the modes of getting redress; but the zealous reformer must be excused for trying to accomplish his work in the shortest and most decisive way. He has not, however, weakened our faith in clerical morals. We shall not think worse of the world in general, nor refrain from reposing belief in the assertions of the next man who appeals to the public, because a bitter necessity imposes on us the duty of saying, that the Rev. Mr. Taylor has acted a most unworthy part,—that he has defamed the characters of those with whom he ought to have been heartily glad to co-operate,—has distorted facts, and invented crimes.—Athenæum, Oct. 9.

THE CROP OF SUGAR which has gone forward during the present shipping season, amounts to about 6,000 tons, against 15,000 tons in the corresponding period of last year. Here are nine first-class ships deprived of their cargoes, and a heavy loss inflicted on the agricultural interest, the whole blame being justly attributed to the Government of India. It is not to be wondered at if the ryots are averse to enter into schemes of cultivation suggested by European speculators. So soon as their products command a favourable market, other countries, less heavily burthened, enter into competition, and drive them out of the field. Their natural advantages are pre-eminent; but these are never allowed to have fair play. It requires a vast predominance in that respect to enable the ryot to contend with the skill and capital of the West; but, in the matter of sugar-growing, he could defy all the world, if his rulers would only allow him to do so. But the Court of Directors, or the Governor-General, or Sir Henry Pottinger, or all of them put together, have determined that, for all purposes of trade, the inland districts of this Presidency shall remain as unknown and useless as the regions of Central Asia. Except in the two articles, indigo and cotton, no commerce is possible with the capital city. Sugar, brought from a distance of 120 miles, pays 25 per cent. for land-carriage; and as for oil-seeds, for which the demand at home is inexhaustible, they are totally worthless in the interior for exportation. Whatever reaches the local markets from inland sources, is doubled in price from the cost of the transit. We said last year, that the sugar trade of Madras was ruined, and the present state of things fully bears out the assertion. It was easy to foresee that no superiority of climate or cheapness of labour could compensate for the mischief done to the sugar growers by the untimely determination of the authorities to maintain Pottinger roads throughout the Presidency. Their production is of an inferior kind, such as can only pay at high prices; and whilst inseparable barriers shut them out from the rest of the world, they are not likely to make improvements. The inevitable consequence is, that the cultivation must be lessened, and the ryot left to depend upon his home market; both being results decidedly inimical to the welfare of the governing body, to say nothing of what is due to the agricultural interest in the East.—Athenæum, Oct. 7.

THE TALSHILDAR OF TELlicherry.—Mr. Strange, the Moplah commissioner, has been engaged, amongst other inquiries, in looking into the case of the ex-tahsildar of Tellicherry, P. Ramoony, who was dismissed from his appointment some months ago, at the instance of Messrs. Connelly and Robinson. The tahsildar had got the better of the collector, some time back, in the matter of the attempted poisoning of Mr. Forsyth, and his speedy fall was of course calculated by the Malabar astrologers with much confidence. The voice of the stars was duly fulfilled in Ramoony's deposition from the tahsildarship shortly after the Chavacherry outbreak. On Mr. Strange's arrival in the district, he besought that gentleman to review the proceedings which had cost him his situation and his good name; a request that, the sanction of Government having been obtained, was acceded to. The result is, an order from Madras for the instant reinstatement of Ramoony in his former post, with the payment of the arrears of salary that have accumulated during the months of his deprivation.—Athenæum, Sept. 23.

BOMBAY.

NATIVE PETITION TO PARLIAMENT.

During the last ten days the members of the Bombay Association have held another meeting, and have brought forward their petition to the English Parliament. The document is to go to England by this mail. Considerable disappointment has been felt by many when they read the details of this petition, and most persons think that a second thought will hardly be bestowed upon it when it reaches England. The intentions of the Young Bombay party are, no doubt, excellent; but they have not gone the right way to work if they wish for reforms in the administration of India. What is required for this country is to better the condition of the lower orders, and to extend education to all classes, all castes, and both sexes. The few natives who have enjoyed opportunities of mental improvement have certainly taken more advantage of these opportunities than most Europeans would have done. The native of India—like the Scotch peasant—seems to seek improvement for his own sake; but as yet the vast mass of the population are perfectly untaught, and the few who have been educated are only in stronger contrast to their less fortunate countrymen. The petition which leaves Bombay by this evening's steamer is one which will not meet the approval of the Court of Directors, nor indeed of any old Indians who have lived much in the Mofussil. We predict that it will not do much good towards the cause of Indian reform. Several thousand signatures have been obtained to this document, but we have good reason to know that not one in five of those whose names will be found attached to the petition understand anything more about what they have signed than that they imagine it is something against the Government and the English rulers of India. The document itself might have been signed with the greatest propriety by all the Government servants; but an idea has got abroad that those who receive the Government pay ought not to meddle with Government affairs, and therefore none of the native Government servants have signed the petition. The educated natives, of course, understand the nature of the petition, and many of them are acquainted with all the details of Indian government, and the reforms wanted both here and at home. These are, however, but few of the whole number. Most of them have signed because others did so; and the people of England will be sadly mistaken if they look upon the Bombay petition as containing the feelings and wishes and expressing the wants of Western India. The European inhabitants of Bombay look on the petition with the utmost indifference, and think it altogether a harmless but rather foolish affair. Among the members of the Bombay Association, more than one of the most influential supporters have declined to sign the petition—amongst these we may include Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy; Ramlal Thakorseedass Set, Esq.; Sucaramjee Luxmonjee Sett, Esq.; Mahomed Ahmeen Rogay, Esq.; Cursetjee Fudoonjee, Esq.; and Manockjee Cursetjee, Esq.; and we have been informed they intend resigning their present connection with the Association. The great majority of the original members still adhere to the society, but are cold and careless as to whether it will succeed in its objects or not. The president, Juggernaut Sunkerset, Esq., is one of the most wealthy and intelligent of our native gentry; and Bhao Dhajee, a medical graduate of the Grant College (a young man of first-rate abilities and education, who is gaining a very excellent living by the practice of his profession), is the secretary of the Association; so that it is not for want of respectable supporters that it will fail in its objects.—Telegraph, Nov. 3.

A petition goes home by this day's steamer from a large number of the most influential natives of Bombay, embodying, amongst much that is sound and sensible, a few things that seem frivolous. Though excellent in the main, it has been not a little abused and ridiculed, because, being a first attempt at petitioning Parliament, it exhibits a want of experience in such matters, and is less perfect and complete than English hands might have made it; a fault more than atoned for by the evidence these very imperfections afford of its genuineness and originality.—Times, Nov. 3.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 24th arrived at Bombay on Oct. 20th, per Achilles.

TRADE, in general, is in a most healthy state at this presidency, sales of goods having been made to a very large extent; a fair price—notwithstanding slightly checked by these holidays—and a further improvement is anticipated on the opening of the Hindoo new year on the 13th instant. Money is abundant; tonnage plentiful; but rather better freights have lately been given to Liverpool—say 2*l*. 12*s*. 6*d*. per ton. Exchange has lately fluctuated a good deal, owing to the Government notice that the Court of Directors had raised their rates for drawing on India 1*d*. per rupee above their previous rates. It advanced here, but again had a downward tendency, the present rate being 2*s*. 0*d*. per rupee.—Ibid.

THE FOLLOWING OFFICERS passed the prescribed examination in the Mahratta language, on the 20th ultimo:—Lieut. R. Bainbridge, 23rd N.L.I.; Ensign J. Havelock, 6th N.I.; Ensign A. C. Way, 7th N.I.; Ensign M. W. Parker, 8th N.I.

SCIND.—Fever was very prevalent at Sukkur [and Shikarpore. No faith is placed by the Advertiser in the rumours lately prevalent of an intended foray by the hill tribes into the plains—rumours which seem to be spread about the commencement of every cold season, and which if only repeated often enough may prove true at last. By papers from Kurrachee to the 23rd of October, the 63rd foot are reported as suffering severely from sickness, and many casualties had taken place. The Duke of Argyll had arrived from London with detachments of recruits for regiments serving in the Bengal presidency. The wing of the 64th foot had left Hyderabad for Kurrachee—more resembling spectres than human beings. Nearly every European at the station was laid up, and numerous deaths had taken place.

DESIGNS OF RUSSIA IN THE EAST.—The present writer happened at Paris, in the winter of 1845-46, to form an intimate friendship with a Russian gentleman, whose name it would be both improper and irrelevant to introduce here. This person had in his possession a vast number of papers and documents connected with the Persian invasion of Herat, the intrigues of Russia in Afghanistan, and despatches from Russian agents in that country to the various officers in the emperor's civil and military employment. At the above period—1845-46—great interest was still taken by many in the unfortunate war which began in 1838 and ended with the year 1842. The writer had returned to the British provinces in the latter year, after two years of continual military duty between the Bolan and Kyber passes, and was naturally most anxious to hear all that his Russian friend could tell him on the subject of Russia's former intentions in Central Asia. From the papers shown, we neither have nor had the slightest doubt, not only that Russia hoped, prior to 1838, to establish herself in Afghanistan, but that, up to the period of the Cabool massacre, the emperor had his spies in every British camp above the passes, and that even the move of a very inconsiderable force of English troops in Afghanistan was duly reported by the Russian agents in that country to their masters beyond the frontier. In the papers shown us at Paris in 1845, there were detailed the most minute circumstances regarding the manner in which the troops under General Nott at Candahar behaved during that eventful winter of 1841-42—circumstances which none save those who were present at the place could have known anything of,—matters which, to the present writer's certain knowledge, had never formed any part of a public despatch, nor have they ever appeared in any of the books published regarding the war in Afghanistan. These papers proved, first, that up to 1842, Russia had great hopes of planting her foot firmly in Afghanistan, and eventually on the banks of the Indus: secondly, that the point watched by the Russian authorities was Candahar, and not Cabool: thirdly, that, at a period when not a single British officer in either Candahar or Cabool had the slightest notion that a Russian spy existed in the country, there were in each of those towns more than one Russian officer in disguise. Such a tale may seem strange, but it is no less true. The present writer tried to obtain permission to publish or make use of the anecdote, but his Russian friend made him promise that he would not do so for at least six years. That period has elapsed.—Telegraph, Oct. 6.

THE "QUEEN" STEAMER.—The Bombay Telegraph reports a curious story, which is said to be exciting some interest in this presidency. It appears that Capt. Drought and the officers of the Queen, on their return from a voyage [to Aden, reported the steamer as unseaworthy, in fact, absolutely rotten. The steamer was, however, surveyed in Bombay, by several senior officers, builders, carpenters, and others, and pronounced sound, and in a few days she was again ready for sea. The commodore accordingly superseded Capt. Drought, and placed another officer in command, and the former, of course, considers himself aggrieved, and demands a court-martial.

NATIVE ENTERPRISE.—We learn from the Poona Observer that the inhabitants of Yewlah, in the Ahmednuggur district, have subscribed 15,000 Rs. for the purpose of building an aqueduct for the supply of water to the town; it is now conveyed from a great distance by means of bullock carriage. It is said that Government has granted 10,000 Rs. to the same object.

MAHOMMED LIMJEE, Esq., one of our most distinguished Parsee merchants, died at his residence in Mazagon, on the 30th October. He was the nephew of the eldest of four distinguished brothers—Limjee Cowasjee, Framjee Cowasjee, Cursetjee Cowasjee, and Rustomjee Cowasjee,—all of whom were at one time possessors of enormous wealth—the three last have died within the last five years, with fortunes sadly reduced by the mishaps of trade, but leaving behind them names for intelligence, probity, and benevolence, second to none. The subject of our present notice has been taken away at little beyond the prime of life, and in the full tide of prosperity, and when many days of happiness and usefulness might have been looked for: he was a man of great intelligence, kindness of heart, and liberality of disposition, and his removal will be deeply regretted by a large circle both of European and native friends.—B. Times, Nov. 2.

NATIVE EDUCATION AT SATTARA.—The sum of Rs. 7,000 for educational purposes in the province of Sattara having been sanctioned by the Court of Directors, the Board of Education announce the intended establishment of a first and second class school in that city, and second class seminaries in the towns of Beejapoor, Punderpore, Waiee, and Kurrar. "The board also have in contemplation the creation of a certain number of scholarships, to enable meritorious students at the second class schools to prosecute their studies at the English school at Sattara, or at the Poona or Elphinstone College."—Ibid.

FURLONGS.—We can state upon good authority, that the local government have rescinded the order—or are about to do so—which prohibited officers of this army from proceeding on furlough during such time as the war in Burmah was going on. A reference has been made to the supreme government, and the answer was, that the order did not apply to the Bombay presidency.—Telegraph.

BHAWUL KHAN, Nabob of Bhawalpoor, has paid the debt of nature. He will be succeeded by his son, Mahomed Sadik, who will, as is the custom, take the name of his father. The late Khan was a firm friend and ally of the British government. His services during the last Punjab campaign were duly appreciated and rewarded.—Ibid.

SIR E. PERRY.—The native community at Bombay have resolved to establish a "Perry School of Industry," to commemorate the services of the late Chief Justice to education.

THE RAILWAY.—Mr. Berkeley, the railway engineer, has completed his surveys, and his report is understood to have been sent home under the warm and cordial recommendation of the Bombay Government. He proposes that the railway shall be split in two near the termination of the present experimental line—that one branch shall ascend the Thul-Ghat, and stretch through Khandeish in the direction of Agra; the other, to ascend the Bhore Ghat, continuing to Poona for future extension through the Nizam's dominions towards Madras.—Times, Nov. 2.

THE NEXT MAIL.—We understand, from very good authority, that the Auckland will start with the overland mail on the evening of the 16th inst. (instead of the 17th inst., as originally contemplated), and that the after packet, to be closed about two o'clock p.m., will be despatched by the Achilles on the 17th inst.—Bombay Times, Nov. 3.

POONA.—"The Governor, the Chief, and the Bishop have left us, and Poona is likely to be dull enough till next June. It is said the 'Toughs' go to Aden, and the 'Tenders' to Scinde. Part of the 3rd regt. N.I. go to Tanna in a few days."—Ibid.

CEYLON.

The difference amongst the clergy in this island, growing out of the Buddhist question (to which we adverted in a former number *) has been carried to the indecent length shown in the following letters:—

From the Bishop of Colombo to the Governor.

" Colombo, December 22, 1851.

" Hon. Sir,—It is with extreme regret that I now address you. Were it a personal matter, however objectionable, I should let it pass, as I have done before; but the holy office I bear requires that I should vindicate it from actual insult in the House of God.

" When at St. Peter's, last evening, while sitting in the vestry, robed for divine service, I was subjected to very unseemly and wanton language from the Archdeacon, who was himself also at the time robed for the ministrations of the Church. He declared himself glad to 'have the opportunity of telling me his mind to my face' (even in the House of God!). He called me a 'time-server,' and accused me of 'deserting the clergy,' in reference to their late Memorial, forwarded by me to your Excellency last week. He asserted that he owed no obedience to me, but to you; that he should answer your Excellency's Minute to Mr. MacCarthy, and not to me; that my object was to deprive him of his bread; that he would not submit to be admonished by me, &c. &c.

" To language of this kind I was constrained to submit in silence for ten minutes, until, on the entrance of the church servant, with the Rev. B. Boake, I rose and walked into the church, to prevent its longer continuance. Although I was able to brook this puerile ebullition of ungovernable temper without the utterance of a single word in reply, and am not unwilling, if required, to bear more, rather than be myself a party to the most sad breach of peace in our Church, I beg to submit to your Excellency, officially, that it ought not to pass without my grave censure, that the bishop of the diocese cannot repair for divine service to his own cathedral church without being subjected, in the House of God, and in his sacerdotal robes, to positive insult from the officiating clergyman. It cannot contribute to the maintenance of discipline and due subordination, that he should be compelled to take refuge within the very church from abuse as a 'time-server,' and a betrayer of his trust, because he differs in opinion from some of the clergy on a very complex and difficult question, and simply records that opinion.

" Common decency and propriety of feeling having been so outraged, and ecclesiastical authority wholly set at nought, I lay the matter, divested of all personal feelings, before your Excellency, and claim from you, in the discharge of my duties, that protection which is extended to the head of every department of the state.

" I have, &c.

(Signed) "J. COLOMBO."

Reply from Archdeacon Bailey.

" Colombo, January 10, 1852.

* Sir,—I have the honour to acknowledge your letter of the 7th instant, annexing a copy of a letter from the Bishop of Colombo to his Excellency the Governor, calling for explanation on the charge brought against me by the Bishop.

I took a note, as soon as I reached home on Sunday night, the 21st of December last, of the remonstrance I made to the Bishop of Colombo in the vestry room of St. Peter's Church, and not 'the House of God' (as most inaccurately designated by the Bishop), wherein the Bishop of Colombo calls upon his Excellency the Governor to 'vindicate him (or his office) from actual insult.'

"The whole of the bishop's letter is full of these exaggerated misstatements. The vestry room—which the Bishop calls the 'House of God,' rather profanely than reverently—a part of the present vestry having formerly been a room of an antiquarian society, and a headless statue of Buddha, once its occupant, yet lies in the yard behind the vestry, the vestry-room is the place wherein, on all ordinary occasions, robed or unrobed, on Sundays, before or after church, as well as on other days, the Bishop and clergy have been in the habit of discussing any questions relating to the church or clergy. I shall simply content myself, therefore, with stating that whatsoever may have passed between the Bishop of Colombo and myself was strictly private, and without witness.

"At a proper season, I will not shrink, if it be necessary, from going over the whole, as far as I remember it, that passed between us. But, in the present shape of an unjust and personal accusation on the part of the Bishop, I respectfully protest against any interference on the part of the Governor, upon the single assertion of the Bishop, unsupported by any evidence, in matters which simply concerned the Bishop and myself. I do, however, emphatically deny (and I consider it but another of the many injuries of the Bishop of Colombo to myself, that I am accused of) having used 'unseemly and wanton language' to his Lordship; I deny that I was guilty of what the Bishop—as indecently as untruly—has designated 'a puerile ebullition of ungovernable temper,'—another of the many insults I have received from his Lordship, which is his usual style of language, when his ill usage of his clergy exceeds the bounds of forbearance, and he is told of his conduct. He knows that the truths I felt compelled to tell him were manly, straightforward, and manfully spoken; and he could not answer them; he did not 'utter a single word in reply.'

"I deny that St. Peter's Church is 'his own cathedral church.' This question of colonial bishops using our churches has been decided in other colonies. The Bishop has certain rights over St. Peter's, as the church where, for the time being, his throne is placed. He has no legal right whatsoever over that church which can supersede my right as incumbent,—not merely the 'officiating clergyman,' as the Bishop, set now for the first time, has chosen to designate me. I have possessed this right within one month of twenty years, nearly fourteen years before the Bishop came into this diocese. I emphatically deny that I was guilty of 'abuse' towards the Bishop of Colombo, calling him a 'time-server' and a 'betrayer of his trust.' This is exaggeration and distortion of what was said. Nor have I,—in the offensive terms of the Bishop of Colombo,—'outraged common decency and propriety of feeling, and set at nought ecclesiastical authority.' I have never refused to acknowledge his Lordship's ecclesiastical authority in matters purely ecclesiastical; but I deny that the fact of my publishing a series of letters on the Buddhist question has anything to do with my subordination to the Right Reverend Dr. Chapman, as the bishop of the diocese of Colombo.

"More than in these general terms, in justification of myself against the odium which, let the Bishop disclaim personal feeling as much as he may, I am persuaded, by six years' experience, he intends to throw upon my character, I decline to notice his gross and extravagant charges.

"And, once more, I respectfully decline his Excellency the Governor's interference in a matter most strictly private, the Bishop being in his own cause my accuser, and being incapable of adducing any evidence of the assertions he has made.

"I have, &c.

(Signed) "B. BAILEY,

"Archdeacon of Colombo."

"The Honourable the Colonial Secretary."

Our readers will be aware that a despatch of the Secretary of State rendered compulsory the retirement of the Archdeacon.

AUSTRALIA.

Advices from Port Phillip (Victoria) are to the 2nd September. The rapidly accumulating wealth of all classes was manifested in a growing disposition to undertake important and costly enterprises. A bill had been introduced in the Victoria Legislature for a railway to run from Melbourne to Mount Alexander, which it was anticipated would cost near 1,600,000L. It was also projected to connect Melbourne with the port at Hobson's Bay by a short line, and to construct a pier where the largest vessels could unload, the proposed capital being 100,000L. A new bank, to be called the Bank of Victoria, with a capital of 1,000,000L, had at the same time been projected. There was a scheme, moreover, before the New South Wales Legislature, for a railway from Sydney to Melbourne, a distance of 600 miles. From Sydney the latest accounts are to the 23rd August. A motion for establishing a small Mint was to be brought forward on the following day, and was expected to pass immediately, so that the materials might be obtained from England forthwith. Port Jackson had been declared a free port, the Royal assent to the requisite Act having been received. From South Australia news had been received that the long-desired discovery of gold had taken place in that colony, a very extensive field having been pointed out about fifteen miles from Adelaide to the south-east.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

There is a chapter in Ibn Isâ'âq which leads us to suppose that the nineteenth Sûrah of the Qorân, which contains a poetical history of John Baptist and of Christ, and which Mohammad sent with his fugitive followers to Abyssinia, was purposely written to please the Najâshy or king of that country. This is the more likely, as many other Sûrahs were composed for special occasions. It is, therefore, not improbable that the five letters which stand at the head of the Sûrah, viz. كهيعص, and the meaning of which is an enigma for the commentators of the Qorân, are a Christian symbol. In Roman Catholic countries, the letters I. N. R. I., meaning Jesus Nazarenus Rex Judæorum, the words which were written over the cross of our Saviour, in three languages, are frequently used, sometimes as an ornament, sometimes as a charm, &c. Should these Arabic letters have the same import? viz. عيسى الناصري ملك.

اليهوديين. I need hardly to mention that, in Arabic, the most striking or conspicuous letter or letters of a word are used in abbreviations, but seldom the first; thus, آخر is expressed by خ in الخ. Travellers in the Levant might inquire what the Christians in Syria, or in the 'Irâq, or in Upper Egypt, write instead of our I. N. R. I.

We usually write,
I. N.
R. I.

In this way, good Roman Catholics write it every morning on the foreheads of their children with their thumb dipped into holy water, and I dare say the Arabic letters were originally written, and read from below, as legends in coins are read.—Dr. A. Springer.

كهيعص i.e. R. I.

عص i.e. I. N.

Thirty miles south of Bhâgâlpur, and partially surrounded by jungle, stands a hill, named Mandâr, or Madsûdan, a mass of naked granite (gneiss), about 800 feet in height; this hill, from its extraordinary appearance, its fearful precipices, and altogether singular position, appears to have attracted, at a very early period of history, the notice of the half-wild races then inhabiting the valley of the Ganges. Viewing the hill from the south, it presents on the eastern flank a convex profile of naked granite, measuring about 600 feet over the curve, and forming a deep precipice, which terminates in a debris, composed of heaps of loose rocks, that have exfoliated and fallen from the rounded mass above. The southern face of the hill is composed of numerous smaller rounded and naked masses of rock, and on them are inscriptions, sculptures, remains of buildings, flights of stairs cut in the solid rock, tanks, and other evidences to show that this now deserted spot must have been, at some very distant period of time, a scene of activity, industry, and intelligence.

At the southern foot of the hill is a large tank, named Manohar Kûnd, around the banks of which are numerous fragments of pillars, capitals, scrolls of flowers, and mutilated images—all cut in a rude style from the rock brought from the hill; the gneiss being composed of highly contorted and minute strata, and being filled with innumerable garnets—the stone has a very beautiful appearance.

From the base of the hill to near the summit, are numerous flights of steps, connected with broad landing-places, cut out of the solid rock; the steps amount to about 400 in number; the rocks, in several spots, have inscriptions carved on them, the letters of which are seven inches in length; about 200 feet from the base, a groove, broad enough to lay the foundation of a wall, has been cut in the rock, and extends for several hundred yards along the face of the hill; but if it was ever used for a wall, no ruins or trace of such a defence are anywhere to be seen.

Numerous heaps of carved stones appear on the hill, but they have evidently belonged to, or were intended for, a temple, which probably was never erected; this last conjecture appears to be the more likely one, as everything connected with the half-finished works on the hill leads to the belief that the workmen must, from some unknown cause, have been disturbed in their work, which was never resumed; this remark particularly applies to the colossal figure, which has been partially carved from one of the rounded masses of granite. This figure is about half-way up the hill, and measures 52 feet 8 inches in height, although in a sitting posture. The image, in Dr. Buchanan's time, 1810, A.D., was called Madhu Kaitabh, but by the versatility of the Hindu religion, it is, in 1851, called Bhîm Sen, although still attributed to the Kol Râjâs. It is a pity the learned doctor did not visit the image himself, as he or his pandits would probably have settled by whom it was made, and whom it is intended to represent.

The likeness to Egyptian sculpture must, I think, be acknowledged by every one. The forehead of the image is crowned with three pyramidal ornaments; removed back from which, and on the crown of the head, is a cylindrical ornament or cap, surmounted with three smaller but imperfect pyramids, surrounding a smaller cylinder. The whole face is in an unfinished state, and still retains the marks of the chisel.

Roughly hewn steps lead up to the chest, a smaller set lead up to the left ear, numerous square and oblong holes have been perforated through the overhanging cornice of rock, for the purpose of attaching an awning, to protect the workmen from the sun, and to the right, low down the rock, a huge cauldron-like looking hole has been excavated, for the purpose of holding drinking water for the same people. To the left, at the base of the rock, is a small excavated cave; its dimensions are that of a cube of six feet, and it was probably used as a receptacle for the tools and clothes of the workmen.

This image is not worshipped by the Hindus; but numerous pilgrims, during the month of January, visit the hill, and pay their respects, and perform their worship in a small temple built on the summit of the hill, which contains the likeness of two feet similar to those placed over the spot where suttee has been performed.

The following measurements, taken on the spot, will perhaps give an idea of the labour that must have been expended upon this gigantic piece of sculpture:—

	Ft.	In.
From top of forehead to bottom of chin ...	6	7
Length of nose	2	0
Ditto ditto eye	2	10
Ditto ditto lips	4	2
Across the forehead	8	4
Base of nose	2	6
Circumference of face, measuring across the forehead, down the right cheek, under the chin, and up the left cheek ...	21	6
A line, following the profile, from the summit of the triangular ornament on the head to the throat	14	4

Taking the head as $\frac{1}{10}$ th of the entire body or figure, we have 6 ft. 7 in. \times 8 ft. = 52 ft. 8 in. as the height of the figure.

This piece of sculpture, although within thirty miles of the Ganges, is seldom visited, and has not been seen by more than half-a-dozen Europeans.—Capt. Sherwill's paper, Journ. As. Soc. Bengal, No. 220.

The account which Buchanan gives of Madhusudan and the hill Mandâr is as follows: "I visited Madhusudan, concerning which I had heard so much, and it was by mere accident that, in passing, I saw some of the ruins that are near the hill; nor did I discover that it contained anything interesting until I was far too removed to be able to visit it. I was, therefore, under the necessity of contenting myself with sending an intelligent person, who brought me a fac-simile of an old inscription, and some account of the place. Mandâr hill is an immense detached rock of granite, like those on which the hill forts of the south of India have been erected. There is said to be a book, called the Mandâr Mahatma, which gives an account of the place. At some little distance from the upper inscription is said to be a very rude outline of the human face, which the people call Madhu Kaitabh, and say that Madhu and Kaitabh were two Asûrs, or infidels, who were killed by Vishnu, before that god was incarnate. Some way above this is a small temple of Siva."

A letter from Athens states that, during a hurricane of wind and rain, on the 28th October, one of the columns of the temple of Jupiter Olympius (the centre one of the three isolated columns) fell prostrate, though it had survived the storms and vicissitudes of twenty centuries! "You can have no idea," the writer says, "of the majestic proportions of this fallen column. The effect is truly sublime. The column was thrown down by the pressure of the wind causing the base to leeward to sink into soft ground. Thus it toppled over, and lies like a pile of bricks or cards, one layer behind the other, exactly in a line due north and south; the capital, split exactly in two pieces, horizontally, lies upon its upper side; the tambours on their respective sides, detached from each other, and separated at almost equal distances of about three or four inches. There are 17 pieces, including the capital, but exclusive of the base, which is not uprooted, but inclined at an angle of 70 degrees, from which the remaining part of the column slipped and toppled off. Two of the columns of the Erechtheum on the west side have also fallen, and are broken in pieces."

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

FRIDAY, December 3, 1852.

THE ministerial crisis has passed. The result is, that the party in power, thanks to the unskilfulness of their adversaries, their own dexterity, and, above all, the timely help of a neutral, have got through their first trouble, and will tide it over, at least until after the recess. A majority of 80, in a house of 592 members, upon a vital question, put in such a form as to allure the votes of those who dislike extreme measures, preferring middle courses and compromises, is no great victory. It is undoubtedly a success, which may be improved into a triumph by ulterior operations; but it is a success purchased by the abandonment of a position which constituted the strength of the party. The present administration, it is now understood, by the vote of last Saturday, have formally assented to the doctrine that the establishment of the principle of unrestricted competition and the abolition of taxes imposed for the purposes of protection have improved the condition of the country, and they profess their readiness to maintain and prudently extend this policy. Lord Derby, in the House of Lords, on Tuesday, declared that he was quite prepared to agree to a resolution, in a form of words "as binding as the most cordial advocate of free trade could desire," which should adopt the recently-established policy for the future. This is a distinct renunciation of the theory of protective duties; and whether this renunciation be the spontaneous effect of conviction, or the reluctant surrender of their own opinions to the verdict of the country, practically, the result is the same; we have no longer a protectionist, but a free-trade administration, intent upon working out the principle of unrestricted competition hereafter to its fullest extent.

It is somewhat amusing to trace the history of the several sets of resolutions submitted to the House of Commons, and to consider the conflicting motives of the various individuals who, it appears, were employed in their manipulation. The motion of Mr. Villiers was evidently prompted by the late government party, whose leader, however, declined the dangerous office of heading the attack upon his antagonists, though prepared to take advantage of its success. With this view he revised the wording of the resolutions, which he adapted to his purpose. His ally, Sir James Graham, was consulted, and, his little party having views of their own, he also tampered with the resolutions. Another small but influential party, with which Lord Palmerston appears to be identified, were likewise to be conciliated, and his lordship had a finger in the culinary operation. The anti-cornlaw party, pure et simple, had to incorporate all these several ingredients into one mass, that, whilst it exhaled nothing but the free-trade flavour, and suited the palates of the greatest number, should prove a nauseous pill to the protectionist party. The event, as might have been foreseen, even had there been no disturbing causes, would have been disappointment.

But all the parties concerned in concocting Mr. Villiers' resolutions, though apparently working in concert, seem, whether designedly or not, to have been counterworking each other. When the éclaircissement took place, Mr. Villiers, Lord J. Russell, Sir J. Graham, and Lord Palmerston, professing to have the same end in view, were all at loggerheads. The last-named moved an amended resolution, differing so little from that of the Ministers, that it was immediately adopted by them. Sir J. Graham, subscribing to the resolution of Mr. Villiers, preferred and voted for Lord Palmerston's, and Lord J. Russell would have done the same only Mr. Villiers' motion stood first! How the bulk of the members contrived to make up their minds which way to vote when the division took place it is not easy to comprehend. We suspect that some of them would answer a querist like Sir Francis Wronghead in the play, "I doubt I said aye when I should have said no." One new member has, indeed, avowed that he made this mistake.

One conclusion, we think, may be drawn from the result of this political struggle, namely, that the present Ministers are not likely to be displaced by the Whig party, which seems in a fair way of becoming, in the language of Mr. Disraeli, "exhausted and obsolete." There must be some new combinations, and as the protection question, which has hitherto divided the House and the country, has now been formally set at rest, there is no reason why public men, hitherto kept apart by discordant views regarding our commercial policy, should not unite, and act in concert. The weakness of the administration has, of late years, permitted small factions to gain dangerous strength, upon religious as well as political questions, which can be kept in proper subordination only by a strong government.

ONE of the subordinate "agencies for administering" the government of India is the institution for training civil servants of the East-India Company at home, namely, Haileybury College, which has been therefore properly made a subject of inquiry by the two Parliamentary Committees of the last session. We shall take the evidence of the witnesses who have been examined upon this point in order, beginning with the minutes of the Lords' Committee.

Mr. Melvill, the Company's secretary, and a near relative of the Principal of Haileybury College, states that there was formerly a great difference of opinion, even amongst the Court of Directors, as to the beneficial results of the institution, and a proposition was made to abolish it; but he thinks it works well, though he has strong doubts in his own mind, he says, whether the education which an English gentleman receives in this country at our public institutions would not answer quite as well, independently of the Oriental languages, of which Haileybury affords the opportunity of acquiring the elements. It has been the case, he admits, that young gentlemen, who have passed with tolerable credit through Haileybury, have been dismissed at Fort William for want of competency; but this, he says, is of rare occurrence, and arises from the fact that the examination at Calcutta assumes a more practical shape than here, with reference to the languages in general use in India. The principal, though not the only, advantage of Haileybury is, in his opinion, that the rudiments of the Oriental languages are taught there, and it is necessary for a young man to obtain those rudiments before he leaves England to undergo further instruction in the native languages in India. He likewise acquires instruction in law and political economy, which are important objects for persons destined for the civil service in India. Whether Haileybury be continued, or any other system introduced, he is of opinion that the civil servants should receive a public education. If the system were that of a private examination, the candidates, as was the case at the London Board (which was commenced in 1826, was in force for five years, and was discontinued after two years), would be crammed for examination, and would also lose the manliness and mental enlargement which public instruction is fitted to produce. Mr. Melvill subsequently expressed in more decided terms his opinion that, if the young men were educated at either of the great English Universities, and were sufficiently grounded in the Oriental languages to stand examination before a board of examiners, and were instructed in law and political economy, they would form as good public servants in India as those educated at Haileybury.

Mr. Reid considers the education given at Haileybury defective to a certain extent; that too much attention is paid to the study of the native languages, which could be much more quickly acquired in India. He would recommend greater attention to jurisprudence and history; and that some attention should be paid to mechanics, surveying, geology, chemistry, and other branches of science, for which purpose it would be desirable, he thinks, that young men should join the Indian service later in life than at present. Students at Haileybury, he admits, enjoy the benefit of very able instructors, superior to those now to be obtained in India; but he has no doubt that, under a proper system, ample means of instruction might easily be procured in that country. He thinks it very desirable that the rudiments of the vernacular Eastern languages should be studied at Haileybury.

Mr. Stuart Mill has great doubts of the necessity or expediency of an exclusive system of education for the civil service, and should be much more inclined to fix a standard of qualification, and admit all persons to receive appointments, if, upon examination, they are found to come up to that standard; placing the standard high, but allowing them to acquire the knowledge in any way and at any place. He is not inclined to think that it should be a necessary preliminary that the candidates should have been educated at Haileybury; he is inclined to think the contrary, and is not aware of anything necessary for the candidates that can be learned nowhere except at Haileybury. His opinion, he says, is decidedly against, in any case, requiring as a qualification for employment that the person should have acquired his knowledge at some particular place, and in some particular way.

These are all the witnesses questioned by the Lords' Committee upon this point, and their evidence seems to militate against the College. The objection of the last is general, and founded upon principle. All such exclusive institutions Mr. Mill thinks inexpedient. Mr. Melvill considers the chief advantage of the College to consist in its grounding the students in the Oriental languages, which

Mr. Reid is of opinion could be much more quickly acquired in India. In his evidence before the Commons' Committee, Mr. Melvill acknowledges that the exclusiveness of Haileybury is an objection to it, and that there would be an advantage, considering the important duties these young men have to perform in India, in two or three years' communication with men of talent in this country.

The following additional evidence upon this point was taken by the Commons' Committee.

Mr. Shepherd, a director, thinks more time is devoted to the study of Oriental languages at Haileybury than is necessary, and should prefer leaving them to be acquired in India more than at present, and devoting more time to law, political economy, and even classics. The native languages can be got in India, whereas knowledge on other subjects cannot. He doubts the advantage of a system of competition in the appointment of civil servants; it is not always the most brilliant young men that make the most efficient public servants hereafter.

Sir T. H. Maddock, who considers the Indian civil service a body possessed of very great efficiency, is not aware of any great improvement that can be proposed in the nature of the education which is given to the young men who are appointed to that service. All that can be done in this country, he thinks, is to endeavour to send out to India high-minded gentlemen, with enlarged minds and liberal views. He acknowledges that the young men attain generally at Haileybury a very slight acquaintance with the native languages; but he does not think that those languages should be rather acquired in India. With the exception of Sanscrit, the great attention paid to which might, in some degree, be modified, he is not aware that so much time is wasted at Haileybury in the study of the native languages as to render it necessary to change the system.

Mr. Willoughby confesses a deep debt of gratitude for the instructions he received at Haileybury; he knows of no place where the same amount of general knowledge can be acquired within so limited a period. But it has always appeared to him, he says, that too much attention was paid to Oriental literature, for the acquisition of which there are greater facilities in India than in this country, and that he could have been much more profitably employed in acquiring knowledge in the European branches taught there, especially history, political economy, and law, which cannot be acquired in India. It is a defect in the system at Haileybury that there is no means of acquiring a knowledge of such sciences as mineralogy, geology, chemistry, land-surveying, and civil engineering; for all which there is a great field for the civilian in India, and the Government feels the great want of those who are capable of directing scientific researches.

Colonel Sykes is not sure that any amount of intellectual standard which might be prescribed for the civil service might not be obtained, without the intervention of Haileybury, from the Universities, and without that exclusiveness which is the result of young men being educated together for a particular branch of the public service. His opinion is, that the mode of education at Haileybury, upon the whole, is useful; but he thinks it is probably carried too far in the branches of Oriental languages: it would be quite sufficient if the students acquired a grammatical knowledge of the prescribed languages, and in India they could much sooner acquire a colloquial knowledge than in England. He also thinks there should be extended instruction in law and political economy at Haileybury. Being asked whether he would propose to abolish the College, he repeated that, in his opinion, the same amount of acquirements in knowledge could be obtained without the College, and its expense would, in that case, be saved.

Mr. Millett's impression is, that too great attention is given at Haileybury to the Oriental languages, and that the knowledge which it would be more useful for public servants in India to acquire at the College is history, political economy, and jurisprudence, which they will never have an opportunity of acquiring in India; therefore, he thinks their principal time should be devoted to those general subjects, and he would give them only such an elementary knowledge of the vernacular Indian languages as should facilitate future proficiency in India, where they can be best acquired.

Lord Elphinstone and Lord Hardinge, speaking rather from what they have heard than from their own observation, confirm the opinion of Mr. Millett.

The evidence of the Commons' witnesses, therefore, tends to the same result as that of the others, namely, that the cost of the College is unnecessary, since the degree and quality of the instruction required for those who enter the civil service may be obtained from other sources. This is a question not, perhaps, essential to the main object of the inquiry, and which we shall not be surprised to find left undecided by the Committee.

THE UPPER INDIA RAILWAY.

Before proceeding to describe in detail the plans of the Upper India Railway Company for the supply of railway communication in the north-west provinces, or the Agra Presidency, a few remarks appear desirable as to the communication between Calcutta and Allahabad, the latter being the starting point of the Upper India Railway Company.

Some years ago two modes were brought before the public for connecting Calcutta and Mirzapore, the latter being fifty miles below Allahabad; viz. the Mirzapore direct line, the original project of the East-Indian Railway Company and the Gangetic Valley line advocated by Mr. Andrew; but for the formation of which no company was ever before the public. The line of the East-Indian Railway Company from Calcutta to Burdwan, and Shiroty to Mirzapore, has been already described and objected to, the other from Rajmahal by all the various populous cities in the fertile valley of the Ganges, we describe in the words of the railway commissioner, Captain Western, of the Bengal Engineers: "From Rajmahal along the banks of the Ganges, with the exception of one point, where a shoot from the Rajmahal hills extends into the Ganges at Siclygully, no difficulty occurs; indeed the only engineering difficulties at all would be the passage of the rivers, and these I trust would soon be shown not to be insurmountable, for it has already been proposed to build bridges over the rivers Jumna and Ganges at Delhi, Agra, Allahabad and Benares; and plans and estimates for a masonry bridge across the Jumna at Delhi were in preparation when I was at that station; besides, the bridges could be built of sufficient width to allow of the construction of another road alongside the portion marked off for the rails, for the passage of the ordinary traffic of the country."

The actual length of the line to Mirzapore by the valley of the Ganges would be about one hundred miles more than by the direct route; but to make the latter of any commercial utility it would require several branches of great length, which would act as feeders to the trunk line, but fail to accommodate the great intermediate traffic, and it will be seen that going to any intermediate point, Patna for instance, the difference is very trifling, while the facilities for constructing the line by the valley would be great, as it could be commenced at all the stations simultaneously, the river being available for carrying the material of the road to so many points: the internal traffic also between the various towns on the route would form no immaterial portion of the receipts of this line.

Another very material point would be the difference in expense of the two lines—on the direct line we are assured the summit level gives a rise of eight hundred feet at several points, while the other, for all engineering purposes, is a level almost throughout. Those well entitled to give an opinion state, that the cost of the one would be, per mile, twice as much as that of the other.

The railway commissioners reported in favour of the direct Mirzapore line, the principal commissioner not having seen, or at all events not having surveyed any other.

Although the direct Calcutta and Mirzapore line shows a gain of about one hundred miles in its lineal distance over that of the Rajmahal and Gangetic valley, considering the relative distance in a mechanical point of view, we shall find that but a very slight difference really exists.

We are informed by the commissioners in the 27th section of their report that the gradients on the former line will be so steep as to require assistant power to work the trains, and we know, from the undulatory nature of the country between Burdwan and Mirzapore, that a heavy working line will necessarily occur, requiring a considerable expenditure of power to maintain a given velocity. Whereas the line by the valley of the Ganges, outflanking the hills, will have no difficulties to encounter, if we except a portion of the route between Rajmahal and Bhaugulpore—the inclination of the country being about twelve inches per mile, of necessity, therefore, the line will approach nearly to a level. If we suppose the gross weight of load propelled on both lines to be the same, and we take the amount of power expended in travelling over both lines to maintain a given velocity. If then the relative amounts be spread over a level plane in both instances, we shall find that the increased expenditure due to the more steep and undulatory line from Calcutta to Mirzapore would produce an equivalent of level nearly equal to that of the more level line by the Gangetic Valley; hence the mechanical distance and the comparative time occupied in making the journey on either line will be nearly the same.

The gain in time by the shorter line, if any, would be too inconsiderable to be taken into account in a country where time occupied in travelling is estimated by months instead of hours, or to be a just compensation for so great an amount of expenditure.

Let us return for a few moments to the original projects intended to carry out the grand desideratum of connecting Calcutta with the North-West frontier, when it will be seen which are the best adapted to achieve this object with the smallest expenditure of time and money.

"The East Indian (from Calcutta to Mirzapore) declining all co-operation with the river, would have done this in a slow and most expensive manner if allowed to carry its plans into effect, and be entirely dependent on the through traffic between the termini.

"The Great Western (from Calcutta to Rajmahal), and the line from Allahabad to Delhi (originally projected by the Great North of India Railway Company), passing many towns and villages, and taking advantage of the river navigation where it is available (instead of superseding, would stimulate corresponding improvements in the river), they would, at half the cost, and in one quarter of the time, supply this now indispensable desideratum.

"By adopting the river from Rajmahal to Allahabad the average cost of construction would be reduced one half, as that portion between Burdwan and Allahabad, which comprises all the difficulties, would not be included in the general estimate for a complete communication between Calcutta and the Sutlej, and the outlay would be saved for making 400 miles of railway, through a barren, desolate, and difficult country.

"On the whole, then, it is our conviction that the Great Western of Bengal (from Calcutta to Rajmahal) and the line from Allahabad to Delhi, co-operating with fleets of river steamers from Rajmahal to Allahabad, would at once be not only the most judicious, the easiest, the least costly, the soonest constructed, and in every other point of view the most advantageous mode of introducing the railway system into India—but most probably the only practicable mode that is at present before Government."

The soundness of these views is now universally admitted.

What, then, has been done to connect Calcutta with the north west frontier? The East Indian, or Mirzapore direct, having abandoned its own plans, and having squandered large sums of money and much valuable time, is amusing the authorities and the shareholders, year after year, by holding out hopes of getting to the Burdwan coal pits in 1854. However, it will get to Rajmahal some time or other, but certainly not for many years, or before it has another 1,000,000, guaranteed to it in addition to the two already granted. From Rajmahal we have the open river navigation all the year to Allahabad, and this brings us to the Agra Presidency, or north-west provinces, the territory to be traversed by the Upper India Railway Company.

"Allahabad is an ancient and populous city, of great fame and importance in the East. Crowds of pilgrims resort to its sacred shrines and temples; it is the entrepot for the traffic by the steamers and the larger country craft, and is one of the principal civil and military stations. Cawnpore is one of the largest military stations in India.

"There is, both by steamers and country craft, a continuous permanent water-communication between Calcutta and Allahabad. The yearly tonnage of the Lower Ganges is 1,500,000 by the country craft alone. The number of passengers is also very great. Deep water ceases at Allahabad, and, consequently, it is at this important city that the real difficulty and expense of transit begin. The sandbanks of the Upper Ganges, and the sharp ledges of rock of the Jumna, rendering the navigation by even the smaller country craft slow and precarious.

"The insurance of merchandize and property from Agra to Allahabad, by the river route, in consequence of the danger and difficulty of the navigation, is as high as from Calcutta to England, the distance in the one case being 300, in the latter 15,000, miles.

"Above Allahabad, notwithstanding the defective river navigation, and the rude and expensive land carriage, which costs from 4d. to 8d. per ton per mile, moving at the slow rate of ten miles in twenty-four hours, there is an officially ascertained traffic of above 1,000,000 tons, and a land passenger traffic, by various conveyances, exceeding 100,000 per annum, beside passengers by boats, and about 300,000 travellers on foot.

"Having a great and navigable river connecting Calcutta and Allahabad, a railroad would, by beginning at the latter city, and proceeding by Agra and Delhi to Lahore, establish a steam communication from Calcutta through the fertile and populous Doab, in the north-west provinces, 'occupying the great line of Indian traffic with Central and Upper Asia.' This is the great line of military as well as of commercial intercourse, more than three-fourths of the Bengal army being cantoned above Allahabad, and almost all the emergent movements of troops and stores taking place to the north-west, or in advance of that town.

"One of the directors of this company, so far back as 1846, in a work of his on Indian railways (Indian Railways, by an Old Indian Postmaster), stated that he had seen 'no large portion of territory present the like facilities for the introduction of a railway, as from Allahabad to Delhi.'

"This line would have no rival, for the river steamers, instead of competing with it, would form a powerful basis, and keep up a continuous communication between the railway and Calcutta, and our great military stations and magazines at Allahabad, Cawnpore, Agri, and Delhi, would all be in close communication with each other, and by means of the steamers, have a free and rapid access to Calcutta."

"Subsequently, the Indian Railway Commission confirmed, from actual survey, the accuracy of this opinion, pointing out the peculiar eligibility of the first section of the proposed line in the following terms:—'We beg to suggest that there is a line in the north-west provinces which would answer admirably as an experimental line, viz., from Allahabad to Cawnpore; and still more recently, Major J. P. Kennedy, late Director of the Railway department to the Government of India, in his report to the Marquis of Dalhousie, Governor-General, expressed himself as follows:—'Between Allahabad and Delhi there is no engineering question of difficulty whatever, as the beautiful flat bed (extending for several hundred miles in the direction of the line, in the Doab, between the rivers Ganges and Jumna), with its numerous commercial towns, offers, perhaps, the most singularly inviting district for laying down a railway that can be found in the world; free as it is from inundation, from hills, from river-crossings, and road-crossings; in short, from any impediment, and almost every ordinary source of expenditure in railway construction.' Slight as the whole amount of labour is that would be required to carry a single line of railroad from Allahabad to Lahore and the Indus, it is the intention of this company to proceed in a gradual manner, opening short sections, having an important town at either terminus.

"The route consists of component parts, each complete in itself, possessing a local as well as thorough traffic."

The late distinguished Deputy-Governor of Bengal, Sir T. Herbert Maddock (now M.P. for Rochester), has placed on record how strongly he was impressed with the importance of this line for political as well as general purposes. "Above Allahabad," says Sir Herbert, "the line might be divided from that place to Cawnpore, from Cawnpore to Mynporee or Allyghur from either of those places to Agra, and from Agra to Delhi, and each of these divisions would form a valuable communication between the places named."*

Mr. Campbell Robertson, late Lieutenant-Governor of the Agra Presidency, or Upper India, Lord Hardinge, and many other eminent individuals, personally acquainted with India, entirely concur in the opinion expressed in the above minute.

Mr. Robert Stephenson has, we are informed, assured to the company his active support, with advice and assistance whenever they may be required, although having for some time past resolved on declining any new professional engagements, he cannot become the engineer of the company. This is an encouraging circumstance, and has contributed to strengthen the confidence of those taking an interest in the improvement of India, in the present management and future prospects of the Upper India Railway Company.

"Whilst deploring (says Major Kennedy in his letter to Lord Dalhousie) that the characteristic energy of Englishmen, which has produced such marvellous results at home, should as yet have made so little progress in the physical improvement of India, there is still one small consolation. If India has been deprived of the benefits which energy has conferred upon England, she may now profit by the experience of England, and may save a vast amount of that progressive investment of wealth, which the results we now enjoy in England have cost. There no fewer than four successive investments have occurred to effect nearly the same object, each in its turn superseding and rendering almost useless that which preceded it. We have had—

"First. The defective roads of intercourse of our forefathers, crossing hill and dale, and accessible only to back-loads, or lightly laden carriages.

"Secondly. The more civilized and profitable carriage-roads of the present generation, which set the former aside.

"Thirdly. The network of canals for carriage of merchandize.

"Fourthly and lastly. The railways of the present day, capable of doing the work of all, and with much greater profit and economy, if the errors at their introduction had been avoided.

"The position of India at this moment, therefore, enables her to save the three first progressive classes of investment, and to effect at once the fourth and perfect class.

"The national character of England, as well as the interests of about 150 millions of people, calls for an exertion both of judgment and energy in reference to this subject. It requires that the grievous impediments should be removed which affect Indian travellers of all classes, and which limit their progress to three miles an hour, in traversing the level and burning plains of this country, even in the neighbourhood of the great capital of India, and in the 19th century.

"There is fortunately in India, one exception to this paralyzing rule, and the Post-office department have proved between Benares and Meerut, that a merchant or man of business may be conveyed in India at a pace suited to the exigencies of his calling.

"It is there shown that an admirable road can be constructed in India, as in other countries, and that upon it horses can be made to draw carriages at rates of seven, eight, or ten miles an hour.

"If ever there was a set of circumstances, combining the highest motives to action, and the best opportunities for beneficent action, they exist at present in India.

"I cannot close this paper without expressing to your lordship my firm and daily increasing conviction that in whatever view one regards the interests of India—whether in respect to the application and consolidation of its military power; the efficiency of its civil government; the development of its industrial and mercantile resources; the advancement of its native population; or the health and security of its European residents, the first effectual impulse must consist in giving facilities to intercommunication through the instrumentality of railways, which I have not the least doubt, if properly managed, may be introduced with great profit to their undertakers."

There being no natural obstacles to surmount, and the public having declared in the most emphatic manner its confidence in the undertaking of the Upper India Railway Company, and the importance, not to say necessity, of the railway to the government being very clear, from the testimony of officers who have held in India the highest places in the government of that country, what delays the good work? If there are no physical impediments, are there moral barriers in the way of this grand element of commerce, wealth, and power—of this harbinger of civilization, Christianity and peace?

Is England for ever to remain dependent upon America for her cotton? Are the populous cities and busy marts of India for ever to remain hermetically sealed, from the want of roads, to the exclusion of the products of the manufacturing science and skill of our home artisan?

In fine, is India to be opened to the genial influence of private enterprise and capital, or abandoned to the nightmare of a sterile and blighting monopoly.—Extracted from "The Colonial and Asiatic Review."

EXPEDITION INTO CENTRAL AFRICA.

Three years ago an expedition left England under the direction of Mr. James Richardson, with Messrs. Barth and Overweg, charged by the English Government to make commercial treaties with the chiefs of the countries between Tripoli and Lake Tsad. In 1850 the travellers crossed the Sahara, in a very circuitous westerly direction, and explored a great portion of Northern Africa which had never before been visited by any European. Their route from Ghat to Kano, in particular, was highly interesting. A long stay was made in Alr or Asben, one of the most powerful kingdoms of Northern Africa, the capital of which is Agadez. In 1851, the travellers explored a large portion of Sudan in different directions; for this purpose they separated on their arrival at the northern frontiers of that country, each pursuing a different route—their plan being ultimately to meet at Kuka, the capital of Bornu. Barth and Overweg safely reached that place, but poor Richardson died on the way to that place, six days' march distant (see last vol., p. 584). This event fell hard upon the two remaining travellers, who had undergone many hardships, and whose small means had met with unexpected losses by robbers in the desert. However, they accomplished two highly interesting journeys—Barth penetrating 350 miles to the south, as far as Yola, the capital of the kingdom of Adamana; and Overweg navigating Lake Tsad. In September, 1851, the two travellers set out together on a journey to Borgu, a mountainous country lying to the north-east of Lake Tsad, about midway between it and Egypt.

Despatches have been just received, by which we learn that the travellers have hitherto escaped all dangers, and are in possession of the best health and spirits, making great progress in their explorations.

The Sheikh of Bornu and his allies sent forth in the latter end of 1851 an army to invade the countries situated eastward from Lake Tsad, and that army the travellers accompanied, hoping, under their protection, to explore the region as far as Borgu and Wadai. At no great distance from Lake Tsad, however, they were met by the enemy, defeated, and put to flight so suddenly, that Barth and Overweg saved their lives and instruments only by a quick retreat. Having again reached Kuka, they learnt that another considerable ghazzia was to be despatched, led on by the Vezier of Bornu himself, directed against the Sultan of Mandara, a country to the south of Bornu, already known through Major Denham, who there met with so narrow an escape on a similar occasion. The two travellers set out again with the Bornuese army, which consisted of about 10,000 horse and the same number of foot soldiers, with innumerable trains of camels and other beasts of burden. On this occasion the army was more fortunate, the enemy retreating as it advanced, and no regular battle ensued. The army—and the travellers with them—went a considerable distance beyond Denham's furthest, and were only then stopped by the Serbenel,—a very considerable river running into the Shary. The ghazzia thence returned with a booty of 5,000 slaves and 10,000 head of cattle, having been absent two months (December, 1851, and January, 1852). The regions visited are described as most fertile and rich.

From the end of March to the end of May last, Dr. Overweg made a successful journey from Kuka in a south-westerly direction, and reached to within 150 English miles of Yacoba, the great town of the Fellatahs; while Dr. Barth went south-east on a journey to the powerful kingdom of Baghirmi. On the 15th August, the date of Overweg's latest letter, the former had not yet returned from that country to rejoin his companion at Kuka, their intention then being to push on to the south, towards the Indian Ocean, which to reach is their ultimate goal and the grand object of their gigantic journey, and which other three or four years will be necessary to bring to a close.

One huge and venerable mango tree alone remains of the grove, 800 yards in length and 300 in breadth, under shelter of which the small band of British troops encamped on the night preceding the memorable battle of Plassey.

LAW.

COURT OF QUEEN'S BENCH, Nov. 23.

Ex-Parte Sir Charles Napier.—Mr. M. Chambers, Q. C., moved for a rule, calling upon Mr. John Murray, the publisher of the Quarterly Review, to show cause why a criminal information should not be filed against him for a libel on Sir Charles Napier, published in the October number of that Review. Sir Charles Napier entered the army in the year 1794, and had gradually raised himself by his services to the high rank which he now occupied. He had served during the Irish rebellion, in the Peninsular war, in the American war of 1815, in the Ionian Islands, and afterwards commanded in the northern district in this country. In 1842, when Lord Ellenborough was Governor-General of India, Sir Charles Napier was sent to Scinde. At that time, Scinde was governed by chieftains of the Beloochees, the conquerors of Scinde, styled Ameers of Scinde. These chieftains were ascertained to have been in correspondence with the Affghans during the war, and it was the duty of Sir Charles, under the directions of Lord Ellenborough, to investigate all these facts. The result of these investigations was, from time to time, communicated to Lord Ellenborough. Sir Charles, so far from hurrying on the attack, had committed the fault of being rather too slow and cautious in leading forth to the attack the force which he commanded. At Meanee, after a furiously contested battle, he gained a brilliant and decisive victory, followed by the capitulation of Hyderabad. In conformity with military rule, he issued an order enforcing the most careful discipline, and particularly directing that the women of the zenana of the Ameers should be treated with the greatest delicacy, and should be allowed to leave, carrying with them their jewels and other property. Possession of the place was taken in the most orderly manner, and so entirely were the directions of Sir Charles Napier carried into effect, that the women contrived, under their privilege, to carry off with them between two and three millions of public money from the treasury. For his services on this occasion Sir Charles received the thanks of Lord Ellenborough, and was appointed to the military and political command of Scinde, and subsequently, on his return to England, he received the thanks of Parliament. He was afterwards again sent out to India as Commander-in-Chief. Under these circumstances the Court would, no doubt, be surprised that an article should be published in the Quarterly Review, charging Sir Charles Napier with disgraceful conduct in his career, both as civil and military commander in Scinde. The article was not confined to a mere comment upon facts, but it stated facts untruly. It was headed, "Dry Leaves from Young Egypt, by an ex-political: Speech of Viscount Jocelyn in the House of Commons on the case of the Ameers of Upper Scinde: Parliamentary Papers relating to Scinde." Mr. Chambers read several passages from the article, in pages 389 and 390, which the affidavit made by Sir Charles Napier showed to contain untrue statements of facts.

Lord Campbell said, that assuming that the statements there made would mislead the public, they would not be a ground for a criminal information.

Mr. Chambers said, here was a high officer charged with incompetence to discharge the duties of his office.

Lord Campbell observed that there was not a newspaper published in London in which a high officer of the Government was not, from time to time, charged with utter incompetence for his office.

Mr. Chambers said it was more than that; the article charged Sir Charles Napier with unbecoming conduct in his office.

Lord Campbell.—Sir Charles Napier swears truly that he was highly complimented for his conduct. There is no doubt he is one of the most distinguished generals that ever commanded an army in the field.

Mr. Chambers asked for the rule, not for mere comment, but for false representations, that the war had been rendered inevitable by "the harshness of the demands" made by Sir Charles Napier. The article went on in these words:—

"The plunder of the palaces at Hyderabad, even to the women's wardrobes and jewels—are not all these matters of notoriety that have been talked and written about till the public is nauseated with the discussion?"

"No one believes at this day that the Ameers of Scinde, by their conduct before, or during, or after the Affghan outbreak, deserved more than friendly advice and warning. We doubt if the Governor-General originally intended more; yet what have they received through Sir Charles Napier's ungovernable determination, at whatever cost, of confounding the innocent with the guilty, to achieve a conquest?"

Here was an untrue charge that Sir Charles Napier had plundered a place which had capitulated, which would have been disgraceful conduct, and contrary to the Articles of War. That was a libellous paragraph.

Lord Campbell.—If you can persuade us that the article was written with the intention of calumniating Sir Charles Napier, that would require an answer.

Mr. Chambers contended that such an intention must be inferred; that the statements were false, when the slightest care would have enabled the writer to avoid the misstatements.

Lord Campbell said that, giving the most implicit credit to Sir Charles Napier in all he had sworn, he felt he should not be justified in interfering in the manner desired. If there had been anything in the article to show that it was written with an intention to calumniate Sir Charles Napier, it would have been a proper case for a criminal information; but Mr. Chambers had failed to show anything of the sort. The article seemed to be an historical essay upon a disputed passage in history, as to whether the Amere were treated with harshness or with generosity. Upon that question he (Lord Campbell) would express no opinion. He entirely believed everything which had been sworn by Sir Charles Napier in his vindication, but he thought it would be encroaching on the liberty of the press to say that a criminal information ought to be granted under such circumstances as the present. The Court sat here to repress, under constitutional principles, the licentiousness of the press, but not more. Whatever might take place elsewhere, he (Lord Campbell) trusted this country would still continue to boast of a free press, and that questions of history, modern or ancient, might be freely discussed, without any apprehension of a criminal information. The authorities cited from the old books, when the law of libel was either not settled, or tyrannically settled, in which it was laid down that to impute to any high officer of the Crown, that he was incompetent for his office, was a libel on the Government, had long been exploded. There was no impropriety in calling in question the competency of any public functionary for the due and efficient discharge of his duty. Sir Charles Napier was one of the most gallant, most distinguished, and most meritorious generals that ever led the British armies into the field; but, believing all this, and that what was imputed to him was the result of a mistaken judgment as to one who in the hour of his country's peril was always ready to render his most valuable services, and who, in case of any emergency, would be zealous to do so again, he (Lord Campbell) still thought this was a case in which a criminal information ought not to be granted.

The other judges having expressed their opinions to the same effect, the rule was refused.

AUSTRALIAN GOLD.—On the 23rd of November, three vessels arrived in the river Thames from Australia with the extraordinary quantity of upwards of seven tons of gold on board. One of the ships, the Eagle, was freighted with the largest amount of the precious metal ever known to arrive in one vessel, viz. 150,000 ounces (upwards of six tons), and of the value of more than 666,000*l.* The Eagle also made the most rapid passage on record, having done the voyage from Melbourne to the Downs in seventy-six days. The other ships are the Sapphire, from Sydney, with 14,668 ounces on board, and the Peaham, from Sydney, with 27,762 ounces. The Matiland also arrived a day or two since from Sydney, with 14,326 ounces. Great, however, as has been the wealth brought over by the Eagle, the ship Dido is expected in a few days, which will far surpass it, having on board 280,000 ounces, or about ten tons and a half of the precious metal. The Neptune, with 17,000 ounces; the Andromache, 42,051 ounces; and other ships, with as valuable freights, are nearly due.—Times.

THE UPPER INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY have received a reply from the Court of Directors to their application, which states that the Court are not at present prepared to enter into any new engagements for the construction of a railway in India.

EASTERN STEAM NAVIGATION COMPANY.—The half-yearly meeting of this Company took place on the 1st inst., when the report presented was unanimously adopted. The chairman (Mr. H. T. Hope), in explaining the position of the undertaking, stated the thorough conviction of the board that the plan of constructing vessels of sufficient capacity to carry their own coals for the voyage is feasible, and that the traffic to be secured by an independent line of steamers to the East, unfettered by a Government contract, would prove remunerative. With the accession of several new directors, whose connections in trade are extensive, it was anticipated that the project would be carried out successfully. The importance of opening further communication with Australia, the ample powers possessed by the charter for all necessary purposes, and the desirableness of proceeding with vigour in the completion of arrangements, were the points severally urged,

COLONEL RAWLINSON.—The Royal Academy of Berlin has recommended Colonel Rawlinson, the decipherer of inscriptions in the arrow-headed character, as a candidate for the medal of the Prussian Order of Merit, vacant by the death of the late Thomas Moore. The nomination is made by the king.

THE Zion has been engaged for the freight of stores to Madras.

BOOKS.

The Ceremonial Usages of the Chinese, B.C. 1121, as prescribed in the "Institutes of the Chow Dynasty strung as Pearls," or Chow-le-kwan-choo; being an Abridgment of the Chow-le Classic. By HOO PRIN SHANG. Translated from the original Chinese, with Notes, by WILLIAM RAYMOND GINGELL, Interpreter to her Majesty's Consulate, Foo-chow-foo. London. Smith, Elder, and Co.

THE Chow-le is an ancient classical work on the ceremonies of the Chow dynasty (B.C. 1121), said to have been composed by the celebrated Chow-kung, brother of the founder of that dynasty, and regent of the empire during the minority of his nephew, Ching-wang, as a manual of instruction for this young prince in the rites and ceremonies which would secure the national peace and tranquillity. The original work, which is in six volumes, is written in an ancient, obscure, and almost obsolete style. It has been translated into French by the late M. E. Biot. The present is an abridgment of the work, and is likewise difficult to be understood, still more to be rendered into English. Mr. Gingell, with the assistance of his able instructor, Lin-kow-hwaie, has triumphed over all impediments, and has furnished an excellent translation of a very curious work, which throws much light upon the usages of the ancient Chinese. The text, as rendered, is elucidated, to students of the original language, by the introduction, where necessary, of the Chinese characters (our letters being incapable of supplying the necessary distinctions), and by copious explanatory notes.

It would appear that, at that early period, the use of silk was known in China. It was the function of certain officers to announce to the queen the arrival of the season when she and the ladies of the palace "put in order the silkworms in the north suburbs, that the dresses used at times of sacrifice might be manufactured from their produce." A particular carriage was used by the queen when she went "to pluck the mulberry-leaf." Silk thread, as well as cotton thread, is spoken of, and the robes of the empress are described as having "white silk lutestring lining."

It affords some considerable presumption in favour of the high antiquity of the Chow-le, that, whilst it contains constant references to rice and other grains, fruits and agricultural produce of various kinds, tea, an article which has been in universal use in China for some centuries past, is not mentioned.

"Mourn for the Mighty Dead." Song on the Death of Wellington. Composed by SIR HENRY R. BISSHOP. Cocks and Co.

THE characteristics of this piece are simplicity and pathos.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30		£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30	On or before	1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40	12th of May,	1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6

60	1847.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

*. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assureds to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

HOLLOWAY'S OINTMENT and PILLS have ef-

Smith, of Yarmouth, to Mr. Dixon, Norwich:—Mr. John Hatton, late in H.M.'s service in the British fleet at Malta, had an ulcerated wound in the ankle, for which he was in Malta Hospital six months, afterwards in Portsmouth Hospital for four months; here, as at Malta, refusing to have the limb amputated, he was turned out incurable. Smith's recommendation, he tried Holloway's Ointment and Pills, which in three months cured him, and he is now in perfect health, and coast-guard officer at Newhaven.

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE for SEA-SICKNESS."

Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS

HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The bristles being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2s. EACH.

Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back?
Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium," or Handleless Hair-Brush.

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches.

THE TEETH and HEALTH.—A good set of Teeth ever insures favourable impressions, while their preservation is of the utmost importance to every individual, both as regards the general health by the proper mastication of food, and the consequent possession of pure and sweet breath. Among the various preparations offered for the purpose, ROWLANDS' O-DONTO, or PEARL DENTIFRICE, stands unrivalled in its capability of embellishing, purifying, and preserving the teeth to the latest period of life. Prepared from Oriental herbs with unusual care, transmitted to this country at great expense, this unique compound will be found to eradicate all tartar and concretions, and impart a pearl-like whiteness to the enamelled surface; remove spots of incipient decay, render the gums firm and red, fix the teeth firmly in their sockets, and, from its aromatic influence, impart sweetness and purity to the breath. It is important to observe that, when used early in life, it effectually prevents all aches in the teeth and gums, effaces spots and discoloration, eradicates scurvy, and, in a word, soon realises the chief attribute of health and beauty.—A FINE SET OF PEARLY TEETH.—Price 2s. 9d. per box.

CAUTION.—The words, "ROWLANDS' O-DONTO," are on the label, and "A. ROWLAND and SONS, 20, Hatton Garden," engraved on the Government stamp, affixed on each. Sold by them, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

SECRETARY (pro tem.)

R. CHAUNCEY, Esq.

THE CHARTERED BANK OF ASIA is founded to carry on the general business of Banking and Exchange in our Eastern Possessions on a scale commensurate with the wants of that great division of the British Empire. For this purpose it is proposed to establish Banks of Issue and Deposit in the most important British and Foreign Settlements, co-operating with such subordinate Agencies as the interests of the Bank may require.

The great success which has attended the operations of existing banking establishments in the East, and the increasing means for the employment of capital in similar undertakings afforded by the great extension of commerce, has led to the formation of the CHARTERED BANK OF ASIA.

The CHARTERED BANK OF ASIA will confine its operations to Banking Business exclusively, that is to say, receiving Deposits and keeping Cash Accounts; the issue of Notes payable to Bearer on demand; granting Cash Credits for limited periods, on approved security; Discounting Bills; the Purchase and Sale of Bills of Exchange; issuing Circular Notes payable in Europe, and at the principal Stations on the Overland Route to India; granting Drafts and Credits; and, in general, to all other legitimate Banking business.

The Bank will also undertake the Agency of the Civil and Military Services, as well as of private individuals including the Receipt and Remittance of Pay, Pensions, Dividends, &c.; and the Purchase and Sale of Indian and European Securities.

The large amount of the capital stock of this Bank will open a safe and advantageous channel for the employment of a portion of the redundant capital of this country, and will likewise afford an undoubted medium of investment and deposit for the Eastern community; at the same time, the growing requirements of trade, and the large Civil and Military Establishments in the East, together with the progressive increase of commerce, which will be developed by the Indian Railways, projected and in progress, are daily enlarging the field for the profitable operations of the Bank.

The objections which were formerly entertained to the management in England of Banking Establishments connected with distant countries, have been removed by the rapid means of intercourse now established through the agency of steam, railways, and electric telegraphs; and the principle is now fully recognised, that the commercial interests of the East will be most efficiently advanced by the introduction of English capital, and its employment under the combined influence of European and Eastern enterprise and experience.

It is also considered that the recent gold discoveries in the Colonies of Australasia will exercise a beneficial influence upon the commerce of the East, and must greatly extend the means for the advantageous employment of banking capital.

Application has been made to her Majesty for a Royal Charter of Incorporation, to limit the liability of the Shareholders, which has been referred by the Privy Council to the Board of Trade. Power will be taken to increase the capital of the Company to £2,000,000 sterling, in which event the new Shares will, in the first instance, be offered for distribution amongst the existing Shareholders, and such parties as, from their local connections and other circumstances, may be considered likely to extend the business of the Bank.

Applications for Shares may be made in the annexed form to the SECRETARY (pro tem.) at No. 4, Adams Court, Old Broad Street; to Messrs. FOSTER and BRAITHWAITE, No. 68, Old Broad Street, London; or to the following Brokers:—Mr. EDWARD ASHWORTH, Manchester; Messrs. D. and J. B. NEILSON, Liverpool; Mr. HENRY MAITLAND, Edinburgh; and Messrs. AITKEN and MOFFATT, Glasgow.

FORM OF APPLICATION FOR SHARES.

To the Directors of THE CHARTERED BANK OF ASIA.

GENTLEMEN,—

I request you will allot me Shares of £25 each in the above undertaking, the whole of which, or any less number that may be allotted to me, I hereby agree to accept, and when required, to pay the deposit of £5 per Share, and to execute the Subscription Contract and Deed of Settlement of the Company.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

THE war in the Burmese territories is of course the chief object of present attention in Indian affairs. But the recently-received mail contains little to gratify curiosity. We are still standing fast at Prome. With regard to the capture of that place the Indian papers contain some grumbling intimations of mismanagement. The larger steamers, it is said, were pushed forward first, when the smaller ones should have had the precedence as pilot vessels, and the alleged consequences were, that the Enterprise got on shore on one side of the river, and the Fire Queen on the other. Then it is said, that instead of clearing the bank by the thirty-two and sixty-eight pounders, by which it was completely commanded, the landing-party were sent on in gun-boats with only light twelve-pounders to make their way under the fire of the enemy. We leave these matters to the criticism of professional readers, having performed our duty by putting these statements before them. Notwithstanding our old acquaintance with the Irawaddy, we have not been on our guard in respect to its fitful movements, but have suffered it to discompose us, and confound our operations, by the sudden subsidence of its waters, which, it is said, will leave our steamers at Prome high and dry, or something like it, for many months to come. General Godwin, who had returned to Rangoon, was on his way back to Prome, with a second division of his force, on the arrival of which, it was understood, the General would attack the Burmese force, which was stockaded at a few miles' distance. This force would, probably, not offer any very formidable resistance. The chief command was held by a son of the famous Bandoolah, of the former war, who, however, had given so little satisfaction, that he had been ordered to be dressed in woman's clothes, and sent to Ava on a donkey. He preferred a different course, as well as a slightly different mode of conveyance, and surprised the British army by suddenly trotting into their camp upon a pony, with his wife, in true primitive Darby and Joan style, mounted behind him. Other officers are, it is said, ready to follow the example of their chief, and it is believed that a demonstration only is wanting on our part, to afford the troops an opportunity of running with all celerity. The fugitive general, who has been placed on board the Sesostria, for safety, has, it is said, furnished information of much importance to the quartermaster general's department. To aid in future operations when any shall be undertaken, two hundred and fifty elephants have been despatched overland from Bengal. It is reported that a Burmese force is stockaded at Aeng pass, for the purpose of arresting the progress and possibly of making prisoners of the sagacious animals, and the troops in Arracan have been hastily ordered to move for their protection. The elephants are intended to convey the ordnance-carriages and ammunition over the country, for the purpose of keeping the horses fresh until they are required in the face of the enemy. The 1st division of the 10th Bengal native infantry had arrived at Rangoon. The 1st division of H.M.'s 51st foot had left that place for Prome, and the remainder were immediately to follow. A portion of the 4th Seik local infantry has been embarked at Calcutta for the Burmese territories, and the remainder will follow shortly. Those whom no former occupant of India could ever compel to yield, have now acknowledged the supremacy of the British rule, and seem likely to render valuable service to it. While quartered at the Anglo-Indian capital, the conduct of these men is said to have been most exemplary. But on one point they have committed themselves, and have earned the everlasting hatred of that formidable body, the teetotallers. The men,—heretics that they are, and ignorant of the decrees of George Cruikshank, Dr. Jabez Burns, and the magnates of the Crystal Palace,—had the audacity to petition for grog, and their prayer has been complied with. It is thought, however, that they may prove good soldiers, notwithstanding this lamentable failing.

Small as is the amount of the above intelligence, it is all that is furnished relating to the seat of war,—except that the annexation of Pegu is speculated on. The course of events is slow—let us hope that it will be satisfactory. The local papers, however, it must be mentioned, are fierce in their denunciations of delay.

The rest of the vast expanse of India scarcely furnishes anything in the way of news to make up for the deficiency of intelligence from Burmah. That from the north-west is, for the most part, of common-place character. But the following extract from the Bombay Times may not be uninteresting to some of our home readers:—

"THE NORTH-WEST FRONTIER.—The Lahore Chronicle, of the 3rd inst. supplies the following in reference to the expedition into the Huzara district:—'The following troops were to start on Saturday morning last (the 30th of October) from Rawul Pindiee for Huzara, in pursuance of the plans sketched by us in our last issue:—two six-pounder guns of Maj. Fitzgerald's troop of horse artillery, in charge of Lieut. Swinhoe; the 16th irregular cavalry, under Capt. W. Davidson; and the Kelat-i-Ghilzie regiment, commanded by Capt. Mackean. The impression at Rawul Pindiee was, that the object of the force, besides bringing the Saluds of Khagur to terms, was to reinstate Jehandad Khan in his frontier fort of Shoonghee, wrested from him by the Husunzaies, and also to punish that tribe for the murder of Messrs. Carne and Tapp: our version of the cause of the march may be depended upon. Our correspondent adds—"The force proceeds direct to the Puklee valley, and will be aided by the well-disposed, already called out by Abbot: all this must be done sharp, as the season of operations ceases by the 10th of December,—the mountain territory to be operated on being very high.'" The following from Peshawur the 1st and 2nd inst. appears in the Delhi Gazette of the 10th instant:—'Brigadier Carnegie arrived here yesterday under a salute of eleven guns. Lieut. Hodson, the new guide commandant, joins the corps to-day. It is probable that some of the guide companies will proceed to the disturbed districts in Huzara. We hear that the Kelat-i-Ghilzie corps, Davidson's Irregulars, and two guns, had marched for Rawul Pindiee to settle the affair,—November 2nd.—The whole of the guide infantry leave Aboozai to-day for service in Huzara, under the adjutant. Lieut. Hodson is to overtake them at Noushera. They have orders to proceed by forced marches. Four companies 29th N.I. a squadron 16th irregulars, and two H. A. guns, the whole under Capt. Whist, proceed to Aboozai on the 5th to relieve three companies 71st, two troops 7th light cavalry, and two guns, now stationed there under command of Capt. Maclean.'" "

Sickness prevails in the Jullunder Doab. H.M.'s 60th Rifles have suffered severely. The artillery are healthy. The number of sick in the 43rd Light Infantry is falling rapidly. Sickness appears to be very prevalent in Scinde.

Some very wild rumours are afloat as to Dost Mohamed. One of these is, that he is about to attack Khelat; another, that he intends to march upon Herat, and capture it. It is said, moreover, that he has perpetrated an almost general massacre of the inhabitants of Balkh, to which place a Russian agent was reported to have found his way.

The territories of the King of Oude, and those of the Nizam, appear to be in the same happy state as usual.

The Presidencies yield actually nothing in the way of intelligence. At Bombay, the only matter thought of seems to be the exit of the Chief Justice, Sir Thomas Erskine Perry. Here the retirement of a judge is a very simple affair. The Attorney-General, in the name of the bar, assures the retiring functionary that his judicial career has manifested a union of all the admirable qualities displayed by Hale, Holt, and Mansfield. The learned judge (much affected) returns a suitable answer; bows are exchanged, and there the matter ends. In India, the native community and the British community, literary associations and associations not literary at all, seem to think it absolutely necessary to fling an address at the head of a departing lawyer, and even the people of Madras feel called upon to fire a paper salute in honour of the Chief Justice of another presidency. It is, however, an "untoward event," that the head of the Bombay bar, the Advocate-General (Mr. Le Mesurier), abstains from swelling the general burst of laudation; not only does he take no part in it, but he has published a letter in which he disclaims all agreement therewith, though he says he wishes the judge's welfare and happiness.

BURMAH.

General Godwin is moving at a pace so fearfully tardy that it is hard to see when he contemplates the completion of his work at all. Meanwhile the larger steamers are shut up at Prome by the fall of the river—they can neither go on nor return, and should an advance on Ava be determined on, it must be made by the help of the smallest-sized steamers alone! One would imagine that the period and height of the inundation, in place of being things familiar to us for thirty years, had come upon us quite as discoveries—taken us by surprise as events never to have been looked for! The intelligence supplied by the Englishman's correspondents comes down to the 21st ultimo from Prome, and to the 29th from Rangoon. The young chief, Bandoole's son, had been placed on board the Sesostria for safety,—and had, it was reported, furnished information of much importance to the quartermaster-general's department. An attempt had been made, on or about the night of the 18th, by the enemy to destroy the town of Prome: they succeeded in setting it on fire in three or four places, but had been driven off before they could accomplish their purpose. Large numbers of people were returning to the city,—but they had not brought in any supplies with them, and the country people around seemed to be in dread of doing so. The sun was fearfully hot, but the troops did not appear to be suffering in any way from sickness beyond what they would in any part of India at this season of the year. The 35th N.I. had a wing posted in the north-western portion of the town for its protection. The force was to remain inactive till the return of General Godwin with the second division, a strong party of the enemy, some 4,000 in number, with a gun and thirty jinjalla, being within eight miles of them at a place called E-thlay-mew, and a still larger body some distance further off at Mecaday! Such procrastination was probably never before heard of on the part of a British general with a force at his disposal sufficient to put to route all the Bandoolas and their followers in the Burman empire! The commander is said to have it in contemplation, on the second division reaching Prome, to attack the enemy in their stockades from more points at once than one, so as to prevent their escape, the probability being that enemy there will by that time be none to attack. From Rangoon there is little news of importance. Commodore Lambert was still absent at Maulmain. The first portion of the 10th Bengal N.I. had arrived from Calcutta by the Feroze. The first division of H. M.'s 51st foot had left in the Phlegathon on the 20th for Prome, and the remainder were to follow in the steamers which returned from that city on the 23rd and 24th.—Bombay Times, Nov. 15.

Rangoon, Oct. 26.—The 80th regt. has had cholera at Prome; five men have died and one officer. Poor Major Sayers, he went out riding on the morning of the 16th instant, was taken ill at 9 A.M., and by 10 P.M. was no more. He obtained his majority only in May last by the death of Major Lockhart. On the 20th cholera had decreased, as there was only one fresh case on that date.

"Bundoolah, son of the man of that name who was commander-in-Chief in the last war, has given himself up to Sir John Cheape, at Prome. It appears that after Captain Tarleton took the guns at Prome in July last, he was suspected of being favourable to us, and his head was to be off, but preferring to keep it on his shoulders, he wisely surrendered himself. The nephew of the governor who defended Rangoon has also surrendered himself with his wife, because he could not hold his place against the British, and bolted with the others. Orders had been issued for his decapitation, so he, like a sensible man, followed Bundoolah's example, which will doubtless be followed by many others."

The second instalment of troops commenced embarking for Prome on the 19th Oct., on board the Phlegathon, Proserpine, and Mahanuddy.

The Hugh Lindsay has arrived with troops from Madras.

Mr. Ewin, mate of the H. Co.'s steamer Damooda, fell overboard while he was dosing in a chair. The chair was found, but the body has not yet been discovered.

General Godwin, according to all accounts, will proceed to Prome by the end of next week, to disperse the 15,000 men supposed to be posted in the interior of that place. After accomplishing this, the third and final advance is to be made to Ava. In the interim, the Feroze will run to Calcutta and back, and it is expected that the Governor-General will be a passenger on board.

October 27.—The Mozaffer, with the Havering in tow from Calcutta, and the Pluto from Bassein, arrived here. The former brought round the English mail. On the 11th the body of the late admiral was transhipped from the Pluto to the Rattler, to convey it to Trincomalee. The Pluto will be put on the line to convey troops to Prome.

I hear that the Siamese are becoming mischievous, owing to the absence of the admiral's ship. Commodore Lambert will soon have to turn his attention to those fellows.

Preparations are being made to repair all steamers that have suffered damage, instead of sending them round to Calcutta for that purpose.

Instructions have been received here to the effect that, on the advance of the troops, Capt. Latter is to accompany the general in his capacity of interpreter. An assistant-commissioner from the Arracan coast, who is shortly expected here, will take up the magisterial duties of Capt. Latter. The commissioner of Arracan is also expected here.—Hurkaru, Nov. 3.

Stringent orders are given at Prome, not to destroy or injure the pagodas or other buildings. This order, it is said, is issued by the express desire of the Most Noble the Governor-General.

Published by order of the Most Noble the Governor of Bengal.

G. T. MARSHALL,
Secretary to the College of Fort William.

THE LONDON MAIL of Sept. 24 reached Calcutta Oct. 28.
MOURNING FOR THE DUKE.—The Governor-General has signified his desire that the Bengal army shall go into full mourning for the death of the Duke of Wellington.
THE 38TH N.I., at Dacca, are suffering severely from illness.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF was to return to Simla on Oct. 26.

THE 4TH SIKH LOCAL INFANTRY embarked on board the steamer Zenobia, for Rangoon, Nov. 2. The regiment, having no costs to care for, have petitioned Government for grog, and have got their wish.

LIEUT. CAMPBELL MITCHELL, H.M.'s 75th regt., is being tried by a court-martial, on a charge of cheating at billiards, and giving the lie to a brother officer.—Hurkaru.

RAILWAY.—The ground at Howrah for the railway terminus has at last been finally secured by Government, after two years' negotiation.

MR. LUDLOW, a confidential clerk in the Lahore Board's office, has been dismissed for offering for sale certain official information.

ORPHAN SCHOOL.—A committee of officers at Simla have passed a unanimous resolution in favour of transferring the Upper Orphan School to that station.

MUTINY.—The Penang Gazette of Sept. 25 gives an account of a mutiny on board the barque Sarah, bound from Maulmain to Liverpool. The captain was placed in confinement, but no lives were sacrificed. The ship was run into Penang, the crew first forcing the captain not to prosecute them.

MR. R. S. WALKER, one of the superintendents of the Peninsular and Oriental Company at Calcutta, has been appointed agent to the same company at Shanghai.

INDIGO is now offered at Ghazepore and Benares at Rs. 150 to Rs. 160 per maund.

THE BANK OF BENGAL has lowered its rates one per cent. all round, except on Company's paper.

CAPT. PHAYRE has returned to Calcutta from Arracan, having been sent for by the Governor-General. It is believed that he is to be made governor of Pegu on its annexation.

THE Charlotte, of 535 tons, from Madras to Whampoa with cotton, was lost on the Paratta Shoal. The commander and crew were saved in two Chinese fishing-boats. H.M.'s steamer Hermes immediately proceeded to the wreck, and brought back word that the vessel was little damaged, and if lightened of 150 tons of cargo might easily be got off the reef. The agents of Lloyd's immediately sent off the most effectual assistance to it.

A STEAMER leaves Mooltan regularly on the 4th of every month for Kurrachee, and quits that port for Mooltan on the 24th of the month. The freight on all goods has been reduced, and is only ten annas a maund for a distance of 800 miles. The Government is doing everything in its power to encourage traffic on the Indus.

MEDICAL RETIREMENTS.—The following is the list of the surgeons to whom the retiring pensions of the year have been awarded:—Dr. Jackson, S. S., Umballa; Dr. Ross, civil, Delhi; Dr. Turnbull, 2nd light cavalry; Dr. Mockler, retired; Dr. Brander, 64th native infantry; Dr. Berwick, on furlough.

THE 37TH N.I.—The Englishman mentions that orders have been issued from head-quarters, altering the destination of the 37th N.I. from Burmah to Barrackpore, to which latter station it will march on or about the 20th inst. On its arrival at Barrackpore, the 30th will proceed to Dacca, and the 38th L.I. will move on to Sylhet. This order countermanding the 37th might have been expected.

ARTILLERY.—The Mofussile mentions that the head-quarters and 6th company of the 7th battalion of foot artillery, and the European recruits, who have passed the hot season at Meerut, marched out of that station on the morning of the 1st inst., in progress towards the north-west; Lieut. col. Garbett commanding the whole party, and Lieut. D. C. Alexander, of the horse artillery, has charge of the recruits as far as Umballa.

LIEUT.-COL. G. FARQUHARSON, who lately arrived at Meerut to command the 46th N.I., is compelled to proceed to Europe immediately for the recovery of his health: Capt. Caulfield is thus again left in command of the regiment.

H.M.'s 83RD REGT. is to remain at Kurrachee for another year, and the wing of the 64th is ordered to return at once from Hyderabad to Kurrachee on account of the prevalence of sickness at the former place.

THE 3RD REGT. N.I. and 9th Irregular Cavalry, were to march from Jhelum to Rawul Pindee about the 28th ult., to replace the troops withdrawn from the former station. These regiments will move fully equipped for service, leaving sick and weakly, and heavy baggage, behind at Jhelum. Lieut.-Col. J. Christie, of the 9th Irregular Cavalry, commands them. The only troops remaining at Jhelum will be Major Gaitskill's light field battery and the 47th N.I., under Brevet-major Bolton, but several relieving regiments will soon be passing up: the 10th Light Cavalry, the 1st N.I., and the 1st Irregular Cavalry are expected there about the 5th instant.

THE 72ND N.I. left Bareilly on the 16th October, and arrived at Futtoghur on the morning of the 22nd. They were to resume their march on the 23rd, expected to be at Allahabad on the 12th November, and Benares the 20th.

APPOINTMENT OF MAJOR JAMES RAMSAY AS COMMISSARY GENERAL.—The appointment of Major James Ramsay as commissary general in succession to Colonel Hawkins, proceeding to Europe, cannot but be productive of good to the department of which he is now the chief officer. We do not allude to his long practical experience in the commissariat in time both of peace and war, nor is it our intention to point out the peculiar fitness of his constitution for those onerous duties of the new office which, according to the suggestions of the commissioners, will entail much personal exertion upon the head of the department; but we wish to dwell particularly upon the fact, that no officer in the commissariat has ever before shown so much desire and zeal in pointing out to Government the defects of the present system of commissariat management, and to impress upon it the absolute and immediate necessity of thorough reform. This fact has been well known to the Military Board, and is now corroborated by the report of the commissariat commissioners, in which there is hardly any point discussed without quoting the opinion of Major Ramsay on the subject, in which the commissioners generally coincide. As it is proposed that the whole of the commissariat management and expenditure should be placed under the entire and sole control of the commissary general, and as the details thereof could not by anybody be better understood than by the person that first suggested them, Major Ramsay is without question the most suitable officer to carry out at once the reform which is so much needed. There is no doubt that the appointment will give umbrage to several parties, who, according to the system of seniority, might have considered themselves entitled to the office, but if ever an exception to that system was justifiable this surely is.—Hurkaru.

THE UNION BANK.—We understand that a suit in equity is about to be instituted against the Executive Committee of the Union Bank, by Aushoots Dey and others, for the purpose of winding up the bank and submitting the committee's accounts to the master's office of the Supreme Court.

FROM BENARES we learn that the 26th N.I. arrived on the 31st October, and marched on the morning of the 3rd November. The 6th N.I. were expected on the 5th November, and the 16th grenadiers were to march in progress of relief on the 6th, and expect to reach Delhi about Christmas-day. The corps gave a grand entertainment to the 26th on the evening of the 1st instant.

BERHAMPORE.—A gentleman just arrived from Berhampore describes the sickness prevalent at that station as fearful. Both in cantonments and in the native parts of the city there was much mortality. Berhampore has for some years past been known as an extremely unhealthy place, and it was the conviction of this alone which latterly forced the Government to abandon it as a station for European troops. There are three regiments there—the Sikhs, the 37th, and 7th N.I., and the place is quite crowded. The Sikhs are said to have made anything but a favourable impression on the minds of the people there. They are described as a most turbulent and riotous set, always in rows and disturbances in the city, very noisy and almost unmanageable. If this description be correct, the Sikhs now at Berhampore must be a very different set of men from those we have in Calcutta.—Hurkaru, Nov. 5.

DOST MAHOMED.—A correspondent of the Delhi Gazette sends some "startling intelligence" from Scinde touching Dost Mahomed and Afghan politics. The Ameer is said by rumour in the bazaar to have joined the Candahar people, and to be marching rapidly on Khelat. The belief seems to be that the Scindians are seeking, by the aid of the Afghans, to shake off the yoke of British power. The story is not a very probable one, and we are not inclined to believe it. Not that we are, with our contemporary of Delhi, "disposed to think more highly of Dost Mahomed's judgment and experience"—these did not suffice to keep him from the manifest folly of aiding Shere Sing,—but that we do not believe the Scindians are at all likely to have combined for the purpose alleged.—Hurkaru.

CASHMERE.—A correspondent, who has just returned from Cashmere, writes as follows:—"None of your sporting friends appear to have given you any account of their sporting adventures in the Cashmere and Ladakh districts. I was on the point of going to the Gilgit country last July, but luckily I changed my mind, as I should have run some chance of having my throat cut. Cashmere was denuded of troops last month; they were all off to Gilgit, to check a rebellion which had broken out there. I met some on their way to Sreenuggur from Jummo, who had been sent to supply the place of those pushed on." It is only necessary for us to say that our sporting friends are very remiss in their attentions. We shall only be too happy to learn something of their adventures.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 27.

DEATH OF LIEUT. KENNEDY, 64TH REGIMENT N.I.—The lamented death of Lieut. Edward Saunders Kennedy, 64th regiment N.I., is fully noticed in our obituary of this date. The saying, "He left no enemy behind him," however trite, is strictly true as applied to this officer. We write not on hearsay, but from personal knowledge of the fact. We beg to express our cordial sympathy with the grief of that numerous circle of near relatives, not to speak of friends and mere acquaintances, who will mourn for the amiable deceased.—Mofussilite Oct. 19.

THE 36TH N.I., under command of Lieut.-Col. T. F. Fleming, marched into cantonments on Wednesday morning. This corps occupies the lines vacated by the regiment of Ferozepore. The 64th N.I., we understand, will not move until the 2nd proximo. The object of this delay is, no doubt, to enable them to receive another month's pay before starting,—a very proper and considerate arrangement in a case where no necessity exists for any very urgent dispatch. The 64th will march with about ten lacs of treasure in charge. This sum will be conveyed from Kurnaul to Umballa by a detachment under Major Thomas and Lieut. Snell. The main body of the regiment goes on to Ferozepore by the most direct route.—Ibid. Oct. 29.

THE 10TH N.I. has just embarked for Rangoon, nearly 1,200 strong, with 21 officers. We question whether any native regiment has been sent into active service so strong in numbers; and seldom has a regiment embarked in such fine spirits, or in better order. The native officers and men uttered loud and repeated cheers as they marched down to the ghaut—which we hope they will have an opportunity of renewing as the British ensign rises over the battlements of Amerapoora.

UNCOVENANTED SERVICE PENSION FUND.—It quite escaped us at the time to notice that a question was circulated lately among the subscribers to the Uncovenanted Service Family Pension Fund, whether an orphan should be admitted to the benefit of the pension originally subscribed for, when the father had fallen into arrears a few months before his death. We are happy to find that 324 out of 384 voted in favour of the proposition.—Friend of India.

THE INLAND TRANSIT COMPANY have improved their carriages and reduced their fares. For Rs. 52 a person may now proceed from Meerut to Allahabad, and an additional sum of Rs. 68 will convey him to Calcutta. Nine hundred miles in the week for Rs. 140 is almost as wonderful an innovation for India as the express train on the Great Western is for England.

SEALKOTE and Ferozepore are hereafter to be first-class brigade stations. The number of brigade commands in the Bengal presidency has been fixed at fifteen, of which four are to be first and eleven second class.

THE CIVIL SERVICE BONUS FUND.—We have been requested to intimate to our readers of the civil service, that the Bonus Fund is at an end. It appears that there are 134 civilians attached to the north-west provinces, whose votes were solicited as to the continuance or abandonment of the scheme, and on the 20th ult. the secretary of the fund announced that unless five-sixths of the members of the service, that is to say, 112 or 113 in number, recorded their votes by the 15th instant for a renewal of the scheme, it would be abandoned. We learn that up to the 15th instant, only sixty-eight votes in favour of the renewal were received at Agra, and the committee have announced that the Bonus Fund is at an end. This is certainly a pity, as the success of the scheme for the year that it has been in operation is undoubted. No fewer than fifteen steps have been obtained during the past ten months, owing almost entirely to the existence of a Bonus Fund. Bonuses varying in amount, we believe, from Rs. 5,000 to Rs. 25,000 have been assigned to these fifteen retired seniors, of whom probably not two would have left without such an inducement. The greatest penalty has been the difference of nine months' salary which the promoted have given up, and they will come into their full allowances at least three or four months sooner than they would otherwise have done. But we cannot altogether look upon the Bonus Fund as defunct. Sixty-eight members have voted for its renewal; only four have declared themselves opposed to any scheme, while no fewer than sixty-two members have not voted pro or con. Something prompts us to the conclusion that more than two-thirds of the sixty-two silent ones, or at least forty-five in number, are not opposed to a Bonus scheme, and have neglected to answer Mr. Money's call, either from apathy or forgetfulness. The forty-five doubtless know on which side their "bread is buttered," as well as we do, but we nevertheless would urge them to reflect for a few moments, and to throw themselves into the scale with the sixty-eight years, and the Bonus Fund is re-established. Having said so much, we would further recommend the gentlemen forming the Agra Committee, to whose public-spirited and zealous exertions the service is so much indebted, not to be too hasty, but to give the scheme fifteen days' more grace, or say to the 1st of November.—Delhi Gazette, Oct. 20.

POST-MASTER-GENERAL N.W. PROVINCES.—We have been informed on what ought to be good authority, that the present Postmaster-General of the N.W. Provinces will shortly be gazetted as Magistrate and Collector of Agra, in the room of M. R. Gubbins, Esq., who, so it is said, will succeed Mr. Barnes at Lahore. Mr. Robert Spinkie, we believe, has been spoken of as Mr. Riddell's successor, and, if so, we trust that he will walk in the footsteps of his predecessor.—Agra Messenger, Oct. 30.

THE RULER OF BAHWULPORE.—The Lahore Chronicle announces the death of Nawab Bahwul Khan, the ruler of Bahwulpoore, and a faithful ally of the British Indian Government. It will be remembered that during the Mooltan campaign this prince did all his little possible in aid of our arms; and we do not know that he has ever been very munificently rewarded for his good offices. His third son succeeds, by arrangement, to the office and dignity, in supercession of the eldest, who is in prison on suspicion of conspiracy against his fortunate younger brother. There is to be no change of ministry at Bahwulpoore for the present.—Bengal Herkaru, Nov. 5.

HOSHARPORE, Nov. 1.—"Our station will soon be devoid of troops, for the 7th irregulars marched this morning to Rawal Pindee, the Sikh regiment leaves on the 7th for some place on the frontier, and the 17th N.I. left on the morning of the 25th ultimo, so that we have only the 58th N.I. in, and a wing of the 14th irregulars outside. Colonel Lawrence joined yesterday from Simlah to command the 58th. Report says, the 9th N.I. are to come here.

MR. COURT.—The Delhi Advertiser of the 5th Nov. gives an account of a very unusual occurrence having taken place in the Shajehanpore district, on the night of the 30th October. The joint magistrate of Budson, Mr. Court, has been waylaid and severely beaten by a party of men supposed to be of the Musulman caste; he had lost three of his fingers, and had been otherwise severely maltreated. Mr. Court was wholly unarmed, and was travelling by palkee dawk when set on; the ruffians owed him a grudge apparently, but could not have had any intention of killing him, or they might easily have effected their purpose: he was by last accounts doing well. It is to be hoped his assailants may be discovered and severely punished for their cowardly conduct.

ROORKEE, Oct. 30:—"Our works here are advancing at a furious rate, and they are now becoming of extraordinary interest. In a few months the aqueduct on the Solani will be arched over; and unless heavy cold weather rains interfere with progress, I see no reason why we should not admit water over it early in 1854. The earthen part of the aqueduct, however, will require time and great care to place it in a proper state of consolidation."

AGRA AND U. S. BANK.—Proceedings of an adjourned special general meeting of shareholders held at Agra, on Friday the 29th October, 1852. E. H. Longden, Esq. in the chair. The assistant secretary (in the absence of the secretary) stated that the present meeting had been adjourned from the 28th of September, to afford time for the receipt of proxies from the home shareholders. The greater portion of these had now arrived, and the vote paper stood as follows:—For the removal of the head-office to Calcutta—237 shareholders, owning 7,633 shares, and entitled to 1,079 votes. For the retention of the head-office at Agra, with a paid direction—23 shareholders, owning 447 shares, and entitled to 74 votes. With regard to the proposed change of location, the directors had learnt that an impression had gone abroad that some alteration in the nature of the business transacted by the bank at Agra was intended, and inquiries on the subject had been made. They therefore deemed it necessary to intimate that the existing lines of business, proved by long experience to be safe and profitable, would be continued here precisely as heretofore. The loans more especially, constituted the staple business of the bank, and—so far from curtailing—their desire was to extend operations in that department at Agra. The following resolutions were then duly passed:—1. That the head-office of the bank be removed to Calcutta after the half-yearly general meeting in February next, and that the present office at Agra be continued as a branch from the date of such transfer. 2. That the foregoing resolution be brought forward for confirmation at the next half-yearly general meeting. Auditors for the current half-year were then duly elected.

Court of Directors having, in their despatch No. 81, of the 16th of July, 1851, para. 2, recognized as the authorized establishment at this presidency 15 brigade commands, of which 4 are to be of the 1st and 11 of the second class, the most noble the Governor-General in Council is pleased to constitute the commands of the troops at Sealkote and Ferozepore respectively 1st class brigade commands, to complete the proportion sanctioned.

MADRAS.

THE EXPRESS of the London Mail of Oct. 8 reached Madras Nov. 11.

THE BISHOP OF MADRAS has arrived at the presidency from the Neigherries.

THE HEAD-QUARTERS and right wing of H.M.'s 25th regiment, now stationed at Bangalore, have received orders to hold themselves in readiness to march to Cannanore. The right wing and head quarters of H.M.'s 94th regiment at Cannanore, have been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to march to Bangalore, which will be as soon as the outpost detachment at Mallipooram joins.

SMALL-POX.—A correspondent of the Athenæum, writing from the Malabar district, gives the startling information that since January last in that collectorate there have been no less than eight thousand and odd cases of small-pox, of which no less than four thousand proved fatal! In one talook alone it is reported that upwards of one thousand fell victims to this disease within the space of three months. The disease continues prevalent.

NIZAM'S DOMINIONS, Oct. 29.—HYDERABAD.—The Sikhs have received a lakh of rupees, the sum which the Government had some months back promised to pay them, and Sahoocars have been released; but as the money has been subscribed by the leading Sahoocars, the Nizam's government may in so much be the gainer. The minister will certainly try to evade the payment, and we shall see the dignity and authority of the Government, regarding which its friends have been very sensitive, called into action to pick the pockets of the Sahoocars, to engraft a second injury upon the first.—Madras Spectator, Nov. 5.

A BOARD of medical officers assembled on the 26th October at Ootacamund, when the following officers appeared before it. Lieut.-Col. Clough, 44th regiment N.I., recommended for leave to Tranquebar and the eastern coast, on sick certificate, for the remainder of the time already granted. Surgeon C. Paterson, 48th Ret. M. N. I. recommended to remain on the Neigherries for the period of one year. Lieutenant Elphinstone, commanding the detachment of sappers and miners at Jagatalla, to proceed to Cannanore and the western coast, and eventually to Europe on sick certificate.—Athenæum.

WE HEARD that very heavy showers of rain have fallen to the northward. In the Cuddapah and Nellore districts the rivers and tanks are full to overflowing, and in several villages serious damage has already been occasioned. At Budwall the walls of an indigo manufactory, and several of the villagers' huts, have been swept away by the bursting of a tank bund.—Ibid.

A LETTER from Ootacamund informs us that the Court of Inquiry appointed to investigate the charges brought by Major Ottley, of the Bombay army, against Lieut. col. Brown, H.M.'s 94th regt., Major Wright, 10th M.N.I., and Capt. Stevens, 18th M.N.I., is still sitting. It seems to be thought likely that these proceedings will terminate ultimately in a court-martial.—Ibid.

SKETCHES OF 29TH N.I.—The General Orders by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief of the Madras Army, contain the results of a series of courts-martial held at Trichinopoly on a number of sepoyes belonging to the 29th Regt. N.I., for mutinous conduct in forming a combination to resist a stoppage of pay on account of a new description of cap which the commanding officer had caused to be issued. We subjoin Sir Richard Armstrong's remarks:—"The result of the foregoing trials will serve to show to the army at large the peril which soldiers incur when, in forgetfulness of their duty, they think to obtain redress for any real or imaginary grievance by refusing submission to authority; and fancy that they can carry their point by engaging others to do the same. I have dealt as leniently as my duty permits with the offenders, feeling that most of them were not aware of the magnitude of the offence they were engaged in; and those only have been selected for punishment, who from length of service ought to have shown a better example to their younger comrades, or who were more audacious in their language and conduct than others. Soldiers well know they have a safe and easy mode of making known their grievances, which will always meet with attention; and they have no excuse to resort to measures inconsistent with their duty and subversive of all discipline, as they have done in this instance, and brought upon themselves condign punishment."

THE SUGAR CROP.—The crop of sugar which has gone forward during the present shipping season, amounts to about 6,000 tons, against 15,000 tons in the corresponding period of last year. Here are nine first-class ships deprived of their cargoes, and a heavy loss inflicted on the agricultural interest, the whole blame being justly attributed to the Government of India. It is not to be wondered at if the ryots are averse to enter into schemes of cultivation suggested by European speculators. So soon as their products command a favourable market, other countries less heavily burthened enter into competition and drive them out of the field. Their natural advantages are pre-eminent, but these are never allowed to have fair play. It requires a vast predominance in that respect to enable the ryot to contend with the skill and capital of the West, but in the matter of sugar growing, he could defy all the world if his rulers would only allow him to do so. But the Court of Directors, or the Governor-General, or Sir Henry Pottinger, or all of them put together, have determined that for all purposes of trade, the inland districts of this presidency shall remain as unknown and useless as the regions of Central Asia. Except in the two articles indigo and cotton, no commerce is possible with the capital city. Sugar brought from a distance of 120 miles, pays twenty-five per cent. for land carriage, and as for oil seeds, for which the demand at home is inexhaustible, they are totally worthless in the interior for exportation. What ever reaches the local markets from inland sources, is doubled in price from the cost of transit. We said last year that the sugar trade of Madras was ruined, and the present state of things fully bears out the assertion. It was easy to foresee that no superiority of climate or cheapness of labour, could compensate for the mischief done to the sugar growers by the unalterable determination of the authorities to maintain Pottinger roads throughout the presidency. Their production is of an inferior kind, such as can only pay at high prices, and whilst inseparable barriers shut them out from the rest of the world, they are not likely to make improvements. The inevitable consequence is, that the cultivation must be lessened and the ryot left to depend upon his home market, both being results decidedly inimical to the welfare of the governing body, to say nothing of what is due to the agricultural interest in the East. The Mauritius papers say that sugar can be made in that island for two dollars per cwt., which is at the rate of Rs. 17 per Madras candy. We wish some of our friends would help us to a few statistics with regard to prices in the Mofussil, and the average produce per cawney, together with the presumed rates of profit shared between the grower and the native dubash. The subject is one of much importance, and a perfect knowledge of the details may be turned to great account for the benefit of the public.—Athenæum, Oct. 7.

AFGHANISTAN.—The Scinde News of the 5th inst. tells us that Dost Mahomed had quitted Candahar for Cabool, he having succeeded in settling matters to his own satisfaction with his brother Kohun dil-Khan, ruler of that city, and saddled the Ghilzie with a chief of his own choosing. All very satisfactory to the old Ameer, provided it continues,—but, as a matter of course, neither his brother nor the Ghilzies will submit to his arrangements a moment after they find it to their advantage to upset them.—The Khan of Kelat is represented as having felt rather uncomfortable during the time Dost Mahomed was in his neighbourhood, but the Ameer does not seem much inclined to fly at such small game as our ally of Kelat.—Bombay Times.

COURT-MARTIAL.—Two field-officers from Bombay, Colonel Stuart of the 14th, and Major Morse of the 8th N.I., have been placed at the disposal of the commander of the troops in Scinde for court-martial duty; and the general impression seems to be that Major Shawe, of the 22nd N.I.—recently removed from the command of that corps for having had some dealings with Meer Ali Moorad,—is the party on whose trial they are to sit at Kurrachee. From the Poona division we observe that Colonels Cragh, 86th foot, and Tritton, 10th hussars, with Majors Brown, 27th N.I. O'Brien 86th, foot, and Drummond, 11th N.I., have been directed to proceed on the same duty.

SALT AND OPIUM.—We understand that on the 15th Nov. the salt and opium branches are to be taken out of the charge of the land revenue department, and placed under the collector of customs.—Bombay Times.

MR. NORMAN OLIVER is, we understand, the party determined on to act as Third Magistrate of Police during the absence of Mr. Thornton, who proceeds on two years' sick leave to the Neigherries. Mr. Oliver is a nephew of a former commander-in-chief of the Indian navy: he does not belong to the covenanted service, but had the command of one of the iron steamers sent to China in 1842—the Ariadne, which was wrecked in a typhoon. He was promoted, some time after his return, to the post of first assistant to the master attendant, and has always borne the character of an excellent officer, and an eminently intelligent and very worthy man. His name has not heretofore been mentioned as amongst the applicants for the office—that which he now holds will of course be filled up provisionally.—Ibid.

"HYDERABAD, Nov. 7th, 1852. Fever still continues its ravages within six and eight miles of the banks of the Indus. It is really a wasting, gnawing, miserable fever. In how many cases would death at once be far more welcome to the sufferers, than a chance of recovery with the expectation of a return of days of pain and torture, when the mind for days together is a strain of fancies filled with visions of happiness and bliss—then all of a sudden the ideas turn to scenes of anguish and despair! It is the same wherever you turn;—the European and the native, the bunyah and the bhora, the boatman and the kettaywalla, all show their yellow colours, and it is expected the epidemic will continue for some months. The order for the reliefs has come when much needed. The 28th, who are suffering very much, will leave in a few days. The Beloches have been obliged to add about a dozen of tents to their hospital; the artillery are nearly as badly off. It is to be hoped the 64th will not remain much longer; they seem to be well infected, and a speedy removal to Belgaum may prove beneficial to them. Old residents at this station, who had not once had the fever since their settlement here, have not escaped it this season, although it has been remarked that the higher order of the community do not appear to have suffered very severely. The cause of their better fortune may be attributable to their precaution in not exposing themselves in the heat of the day."

PROFICIENCY IN THE NATIVE LANGUAGES.—Fifteen young officers of the Bombay civil service passed the prescribed examination in the native languages, on the 9th and 10th of November, at Bombay.

SURGEON PETER GRAY.—We regret exceedingly to have to announce the death, on Wednesday night, the 10th of Nov., at the presidency, of Surgeon Peter Gray, in medical charge of the 2nd bat. art., quartered in Fort George. The deceased gentleman entered the service in 1831, and obtained his surgeoncy in June, 1846. He was for some time surgeon to the marine battalion, and was universally esteemed by those who had the pleasure of his acquaintance, as a perfect gentleman and well-informed man. He has left a wife and large family to deplore the loss of one of the best of husbands and kindest of fathers. He was a brother of Dr. William Gray, of the Bombay service, who died in 1846, both being sons of an able and estimable Scotch clergyman well known in this presidency.—His death gives promotion to senior Assistant-Surgeon C. R. O. Bloxham, 2nd grenadier N.I., who entered the service in July, 1839, and has thus been upwards of thirteen years getting his surgeoncy.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDER.

OFFICE OF LIEUTENANT OF POLICE.

Bombay Castle, Nov. 3, 1853.—The right hon. the Governor in Council is pleased to direct that the office of lieutenant of police in Scinde be added to the list of appointments (vide code, page 858, article 36) to be vacated on promotion to major regimentally.

COURT-MARTIAL.

LIEUT. WM. LITHGOW, I.N.

Bombay, Nov. 10, 1852.—At a court-martial assembled on board the Hon. Company's ship Hastings, in Bombay harbour, on Oct. 5th, 6th, 7th, 8th, and 9th, 1852, Lieut. William Lithgow, of the Indian Navy, was tried on a charge exhibited against him by Commodore Sir Henry John Leeke, K.H., Commander-in-Chief of the Indian Navy, for that he, "the said Lieutenant William Lithgow, of the Indian Navy, being in actual service and full pay, did, on or about the 23rd day of August, 1852, on board the Hon. Company's ship Elphinstone, take indecent and improper personal liberties with Robert Lovelock, boy, No. M. A. 406, belonging to the said ship."

Finding.—Not guilty.

MILITARY MOVEMENTS.—Capt. Graham, C.R.R. has been ordered to take the command of the detachment of his corps at Badulla; and Capt. Steele, C.R.R. from Badulla, to join headquarters at Colombo. Capt. Vanderspar, C.R.R. to Galle, from 23rd October to 31st December.

EXPECTED INTRODUCTION OF THE ELECTRIC TELEGRAPH.—A committee has been appointed by Government to consider the practicability of a telegraph between Colombo and Galle. The members are Dr. Lamprey, Master Attendant Steuart, and Major Cole. Government have also asked the Chamber of Commerce to furnish their views on the subject.

DREADFUL EARTHQUAKES IN CHINA AND MANILLA.—In a number of the Peking Gazette there appears an account of a terrible earthquake, that occurred a few months ago in the province of Kan-suh, in the north-west of China. The governor of the province, Shoo-hingah, states in a memorial to the emperor, that the shocks commenced in the city of Chung-wei, and its neighbourhood, on the 26th May last, and were repeated many times during a space of fifteen days from that date. The devastation and loss of life caused was frightful. Upwards of 300 persons were killed, more than 400 seriously hurt, and several thousand houses destroyed. The public offices, granaries, prisons, and also the ramparts of the city were thrown down. These calamities having reduced the people to a state of the utmost want and distress, the emperor has ordered immediate assistance to be rendered to the sufferers, and their payment of the land-tax for the present year to be remitted.—We learn from Manilla, that a fearful earthquake had taken place on Sept. 16, at half-past six p.m. The shock lasted about a minute, and was the strongest ever felt at Manilla. The whole of the roof of a large church fell in; several other churches were injured. Two of the barracks are so much shaken that the troops have to be removed out of them. Some old houses fell, and nearly all suffered more or less damage, so much that another similar shock would be likely to throw them down; several other shocks were felt up to four o'clock this morning, but none were like the first. Many lives were lost by the falling of the houses, stores, &c.

To England, are dull at £2. 2s. to £2s. 5s. per ton, and to the United States at 8 to 10 doll. for teas, and 23 to 25 doll. for silks.

SIAM.

From the Singapore Free Press of the 17th Sept. we learn that an army of between 15,000 and 20,000 men, with 150 elephants attached to it, was assembling. It was to be despatched to the frontiers of Burmah, under command of a near relative of the King, who was court physician in the last reign, and is minister of war in the present. The well known Shan state of Zimmay, which, like some of the adjacent states, has alternately been Burmese and Siamese, and has latterly been suffered to maintain a kind of neutral position by acknowledging the supremacy of both its powerful neighbours, has declared itself Siamese exclusively, and will co-operate with the Siamese army against the Burmese, should active operations take place. Should we annex Pegu, it is probable that all the southern Shan states will throw off the Burmese yoke, and in that case it may soon happen that under the influence of the Siamese, the upper basin of the Menam will be completely opened to traffic with our possessions on the sea board. The present movement may prove the precursor of revolutions which will completely dismember the Burmese empire. The Shans are aliens in blood and language to the Burmese, and are spread from the N.E. corner of Bengal on the one side to Kedab and Cambodia on the other, swarming in the Burmese territories, and giving their name to Assam and Siam, at the two extremities of their range, and to the Shan states in the centre. When this settlement was formed, they constituted a portion of the population of Kidha, modified by mixture with Malays, under the same name, Sam sam, and the Malays of Kidha themselves are a partially Shan people.

The Burmese are an intrusive race, and if the empire be mutilated by the loss of Pegu and the sea board and be thus sealed up from foreign influence, it is far from improbable that the Anglicised and enlightened government of Siam will succeed in extending its power to the borders of Assam, re-uniting the scattered tribes of its race under its sway, and reducing Burmah to very narrow limits, or even blotting it out from the map. The dispersion of the Shan people is either very recent, or they had attained considerable civilization before it commenced, for they have everywhere preserved the same language. This circumstance will greatly facilitate the ambitious projects which the Siamese court appears to be now cherishing. The Shan tribes are too fond of independence, and too hardy, compared with the Siamese on the lower basin of the Menam, to allow of their being assimilated in political position to the latter. But the Burmese were hated by the native tribes over whom their sway extends, whether Talien, Karen, or Shan; the Siamese rulers have a hereditary revenge to gratify, and there can be little doubt that if the Shans saw a favourable chance of throwing off the Burmese yoke, they would willingly join the Siamese, and acknowledge the supremacy of the southern potentate of their own race, the ally of the conquerors of Burmah for the second time, and the actual rulers of Pegu. The Siamese, like our good neighbours the Dutch, are very accommodating in their notions of dominion. A nominal fealty, the acceptance of a Siamese or Pail title, and the transmission once in three years of a gold flower, satisfy them in most cases, until an opportunity occurs of driving the nail home.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

CAPE CONSTITUTION. — The following resolution has been passed at a public meeting held at Cape Town: "As the information received per the late mail steamers, respecting the Constitution granted to this colony, by her Majesty's Letters Patent of May, 1850, is highly unsatisfactory; and as there is every reason to believe that her Majesty's present advisers contemplate to propose a Bill to Parliament for the purpose of altering those Letters Patent by introducing a nominative, instead of an elective, Legislative Council as now guaranteed; and as any such alteration will vitiate the Constitution, the colonists having, moreover, determined not to accept, but to repudiate the same; this meeting resolves that a committee be appointed to prepare an address and petition to the Parliament and people of Great Britain, for the purpose of duly representing all the circumstances in reference to this matter, and of obtaining the speedy completion of the details of a Constitution, in terms and in the spirit of her Majesty's Letters Patent of May, 1850."—Zuid-Afrikaan, Oct. 11.

COAL.—Another coal deposit is said to have been discovered somewhere in the neighbourhood of Cape Town, a sample of which has been forwarded to the Lieut.-Governor for inspection. This coal is said, however, to partake more of the ligneous than the bituminous character, and is therefore not of the description required. A rumour having got abroad that a deposit of actual coal has been discovered on the farm of Mr. Jessup at Eljeskraal, and it is believed that it is on the same spot indicated in the extract from the Travels of Sir John Barrow, lately published by the local Government, an inquiry upon the subject would doubtless give considerable satisfaction.—Ibid.

RAILWAY TO GRAHAM'S TOWN.—It is confidently reported in Mr. Jaffray's Trade Circular, that a railway between Graham's Town and Port Elizabeth is seriously contemplated, and that several gentlemen in both places are about to try whether it cannot be successfully accomplished. From the liberality with which the inhabitants of Graham's Town came forward to subscribe towards the Kowie project there will be no want of funds, if the people of this place will bear willingly their share of the expense. We have certainly hopes of the success of this scheme, whereas we never had any of the other.—Ibid.

CIRCULAR.—The very favourable remarks regarding gentlemen of the East-India Company's service which have appeared from time to time in the public journals at the Cape of Good Hope, excite the hope that the accompanying address will be noticed by these journals so favourably as to induce other inhabitants of Cape Town and its vicinity to sign it. It now lies for signature at the Commercial Exchange; and the list of names already subscribed will no doubt draw the attention of the public to it:—"To his Honour the Lieutenant-Governor of the Cape of Good Hope, &c. &c. Sir,—We, the undersigned inhabitants of Cape Town and its vicinity, having learned that privileges have been held out by H.M.'s Government to induce officers to settle in H.M.'s colonies, and that it has been intimated to the East-India Company by H.M.'s Government, that officers of their Indian army shall be admitted to these privileges in the colony of Van Dieman's Land, request that you will kindly lay before H.M.'s Secretary of State for the Colonies, our respectful request that the officers of the East-India Company's army in India be admitted to the same privileges in the colonies of South Africa, where we cannot but think that there are stronger reasons for granting such privileges to them than exist with regard to Van Dieman's Land, on account, more particularly, of the greater importance of attracting to the Cape as settlers men who have a small fixed income and a little capital, possess sentiments of loyalty, habits of order and subordination, with the military knowledge and experience which give self-possession in troubled times, and enable men to excite confidence in others, and make them ready with courage and skill to defend life and property. The very numerous existing connections of marriage with families at the Cape of Good Hope of such officers, would greatly enhance their value as settlers, affording greater assurance of their permanence of settlement and of their becoming identified in feeling with their adopted country."—Zuid-Afrikaan, Oct. 25.

LITERATURE AND SCIENCE.

At a meeting of the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, on the 14th October, a letter was read from Major Le Grand Jacob, accompanied by a translation of a Persian MS., entitled An account of Bokhara, which, at the suggestion of Sir Alexander Burnes, had been given to him in London in 1834, for this purpose; but which Major Jacob, after having perused a little, considered too puerile and inane to deserve further notice. This having been represented to the Oriental Translation Committee, they were of a different opinion, and requested Major Jacob at his leisure to complete the translation: from various hindrances, however, Major Jacob had not been able to fulfil his task until the present time, and he now forwarded the original, with translation complete, for transmission to the parent society.

A letter was received from the Rev. Murray Mitchell, respecting the printing and translation of the Parsi religious books by Professor Spiegel, of Erlangen, and the Zend dictionary under preparation by Dhunjeebhai Framji. In reference to his edition of the Zendavesta, the Professor writes as follows:—"The printing of my work is going on without interruption. The original text of the Vendidad is completed, the printing of the various readings has proceeded to the 6th fargard (chapter) of the Vendidad. Also the first five fargards of the Pehlevi translation are out of the press. In the course of the autumn of this year the first volume will be ready. As for the English translation, I shall gladly undertake it; and I shall enlarge the introduction for the use of English readers who have not the means of consulting the works referred to in the German edition. The Imperial Press of Vienna is willing to print the work in the same size as the edition of the original text."

A paper "On the Historical Names and Facts contained in the Kenery Inscription," by the Rev. Dr. Stevenson, vice-president, was read. The first name noticed was that of Chairakya, the celebrated minister of Chandragupta, the Sandracottus of the Greeks, who has a cave dedicated to his memory under the name of Dramila. The name Rohinimitra, found in one of the inscriptions, he endeavoured to connect with the royal family of which Pushpamitra was the founder, and the name of whose descendant, Deva Bhuti, written there Bhoti, appears at Carlee as the constructor of the elegant cave-temple near that place, and the name of one of whose sons is inscribed on the pillars in front of it; leading us to infer that the cave must have been constructed about B. C. 70, at which time that sovereign reigned over Magadh, which he conceives received about that time the name of Maharashtra, "the great kingdom." He next mentioned that the names of two of the kings near the end of the Andhra dynasty, Gautamiputra, and Yaduya, and Srisatkarni, are found both at Kenery and at Nassik. This is the dynasty of kings mentioned by Pliny as powerful in his time, and which swayed the sceptre for 456 years. The latter of the two above mentioned kings is mentioned in the annals of China, where he is called Yuegnai, as having sent an embassy there in A. D. 428. The great satraps of Western India, first the deputies of the Græco-Bactrian sovereigns, and afterwards independent monarchs, are also mentioned. A minister of one of them constructed a cistern at Kenery, and the son of one of them excavated a cave at Nassik, the date of which Dr. Stevenson makes out to be A. D. 484. Buddhaghosha, the Buddhist apostle of Pegue and the eastern peninsula, who left India for Ceylon in A. D. 410, is also mentioned as having been at Kenery, and having dedicated there an image to Buddha.

The caves, as mentioned in the inscriptions, were intended to be, some of them Buddhist temples, others convocation-halls for the priesthood to meet in, others lodging-houses for monks, others refectories and almshouses. They were constructed by relations and connections generally of the above-mentioned persons, or by rich goldsmiths of Callian and the neighbouring cities, or by devotees, who, having abandoned secular pursuits, seem thus to have bestowed their property. The most curious fact, however, regarding the caves at Kenery mentioned was, that in the great tope, opened a few years ago by Dr. Bird, there was originally deposited a Buddha tooth-relic. The date on the copper-plate accompanying it is plainly stated in words to have been the year two hundred and forty-five, which was A. D. 189. This relic is also mentioned in some of the rock inscriptions. The great cave is mentioned as then in existence, though it was not probably excavated long before that period.

Another curious fact in reference to the cave at Carlee is, that a Greek is mentioned in two of the inscriptions; and though there it is not expressly stated, Dr. Stevenson thinks it highly probable that he was the designer and superintendent of that excavation, which, as being the first, served as a model for the rest of these curious and laborious works.

At a meeting of the Asiatic Society of Bengal, on the 6th October, a letter from Major Baker, accompanying two sculptured heads, given to him by Lieut. Colonel Napier, engineers, and found (he believes) in the northern districts of the Punjab, was read. The following extract from his note describes the heads briefly as follows:—

"One of the heads appears to be of Grecian origin; the other is decidedly oriental in its character, and is said to be Buddhist. The substance of these sculptures is not stone, but a species of lime-cement or plaster; and it seems wonderful that one of them, at least, has so well retained its sharpness of outline. It seems probable, from the specimens having been found together, and from the similarity of their composition, that they may have ornamented the same building; and in that case they would further illustrate the mixture of Grecian and Indian forms, which characterizes so many of the sculptured remains from the same locality."

The address of Agrippa to the Jewish nation, in order to divert them from their design of making war with the Romans, as reported by Josephus, affords some valuable statistical data respecting the power and resources of some of the African and Asiatic states at the beginning of the Christian era. Of the neighbouring country of Egypt, he says that it extended as far as Ethiopia and Arabia Felix, and bordered upon India; that its population numbered 7,500,000 men only, not including the inhabitants of Alexandria, a large, wealthy, and populous city, for the accuracy of which computation he appeals to the revenue derived from the poll-tax. He states that the Romans then held in subjection all the nations of the African continent from the Atlantic Ocean and the Pillars of Hercules to the Red Sea. He describes the Parthians as lords of many nations and maintaining a mighty military force, and notices that, in their territory, in Adiabene, beyond the Euphrates, a number of Jews were settled who were subject to the Parthians: so that that remarkable people, as we know from other sources, did not commence their migratory habits after their dispersion, but sent out not only merchants and traders throughout the world, but founded colonies, which, indeed, has ever been the practice of all commercial nations. Had not the policy of the ancient Egyptians, like that of the ancient Chinese, been adverse to foreign commerce, their colonies would have spread over Asia and Africa, and their arts, sciences, and literature would not have been confined to the narrow strip of territory watered by the lower stream of the Nile.

The same speech refers to England as an island of vast size, and the other British islands as little known. It describes the Germans as tall and strong, having minds greater than their bodies, with souls that despise death, and as in rage fiercer than wild beasts. The Gauls are represented as distributed into no fewer than 305 nations, who were kept in servitude by 1,200 Roman soldiers, whereas the Germans required eight legions for the same object, which the king thought a comparatively small force.

PECULIARITIES OF BRITISH INDIAN LAW.—"I remember well," says Mr. McLeod, in his evidence before the Lords' Committee on Indian affairs, "when I was secretary at Madras, the case of a European soldier in one of our regiments, who was not a British-born subject, who committed murder; he killed a native. The question arose, how this man should be tried. The Advocate-General gave it as his opinion, that he could be only tried by the Mofussil Court. Not being a British-born subject, though a soldier in the British army, he could not be tried by the Supreme Court, and he could not be tried by a court-martial. That man, a European and a Christian, was tried in the Mofussil Court by the Mohammedan law, as modified by our Regulations, and was sentenced to perpetual imprisonment."

PUNISHMENTS IN BRITISH INDIA.—Whenever a prisoner is ordered to be imprisoned for life, unless there are reasons to the contrary, he is always transported: in fact, there is scarcely ever imprisonment for life. The prisoners are transported to the Tenasserim provinces, and, to the Straits' settlements, Penang, and Singapore. The convicts have grades of employment: at first, they are kept strictly, being worked in gangs on the roads; afterwards, and by degrees, they have great indulgencies allowed them. Transportation for life is reckoned a very severe punishment; the natives fear it even more than death, which is inflicted only in cases of murder.—Evidence of Mr. Millett.

NOTICE TO SUBSCRIBERS.

Some misapprehension appears to exist as to the time at which our Journal ought to appear. To obviate this it is requisite to call to mind that the brief outline of the more important Indian intelligence of a public nature which is furnished by the morning papers a few days earlier than our issue is (and is stated to be) IN ANTICIPATION OF THE MAIL, being received from Trieste or Marseilles by telegraphic communication or by express. The great mass of news cannot be transmitted by such means, and consequently cannot be received until the Mail itself in due course reaches this country and its contents are delivered from the Post-office here. No delay then takes place, but as soon as the materials furnished can be arranged and transferred to type our Journal is issued; every exertion being made to insure its transmission to country subscribers by the earliest post after the arrival and delivery of the Mail in London. As far as we are concerned, we can further affirm that the circulation is effected not only with the greatest promptitude, but with perfect regularity.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

TUESDAY, December 21, 1852.

THE Burmese war still "drags its slow length along." When or how it is likely to terminate, seems not to be within the power of European foresight to determine; although, perhaps, as among the Burmese are great astrologers, those learned persons may have a keener vision. Without much more minute acquaintance with details than private persons in this country at least possess, it is not easy to determine whether the war has been conducted with all practicable celerity or not. The war between twenty and thirty years ago was a slow affair, and in this fast age matters are not much mended in this respect. The knowledge formerly gained of the country and the people seems to stand us but in small stead. The latter, indeed, do not appear to have undergone much change as to their habits of warfare. They still prefer a skulking course to an open one, and manifest, as before, an extraordinary aptitude for disappearing at the moment when unpleasant results are likely to attend their stay; never forgetting, practically at least, the adage which describes the comparative happy lot of the man "who fights and runs away." There is something almost ridiculous in the return of casualties on these occasions. Three or four thousand men are driven from a strong position with a loss of one or two men killed and a few wounded. It is well, indeed, that the lives of our brave men are thus spared; but the enemy might as well exercise still greater forbearance, and depart quietly, without subjecting us to either trouble or loss.

When the war will end, as we have already said, it is not possible to predict; but, without presumption, we may confidently hope that it will end in our favour. Let us hope that, when this result shall be obtained, we shall be prepared to demand and to enforce the equitable principle of "a fair day's wages for a fair day's work." We did not enter the Burmese territories as tourists on a party of pleasure; we were forced into war, as has been the case in almost all the wars which we have waged in India. Aggression and outrage required to be put down; this took us to Promé, and may possibly lead us further; but wherever we may be led, let us keep two objects steadily in view, and never withdraw till they are secured: first, that we are rendered secure from further annoyance; secondly, that we are amply indemnified for the cost and inconvenience to which we have been subjected. No trifling with our just claims—no parade of magnanimity or liberality, and half a dozen other showy qualities, by which too often villany escapes punishment, and the national honour and national interest are alike sacrificed. We have learned—at least, we ought to have learned—something from our recent experience in Lahore. Let us now, in regard to Ava, do our work so effectually, that there will be no occasion to go over it again some year or two hence. As we have already said, we must provide for our own security, and we must be remunerated for all our outlay, whether moral or pecuniary. How are these objects to be accomplished? We can see but one course—that indicated by the word, Annexation; to some, a very distasteful combination of syllables; but, in the present instance, the only policy which can be followed with safety. Annexation, we are told, is unpopular; when was it otherwise? From the time when Great Britain first acquired standing on the soil of India, every successive acquisition has been pronounced a step in the direction of ruin; and this view has been solemnly affirmed by the British Legislature. Thus much for speculation—now for fact. After almost a century of progress in this ruinous course, are we ruined? Have we been banished from India? Have our power and influence there decreased? Is our position worse than when our countrymen were shut up in the Black-hole at Calcutta, or when Hyder Ali appeared before the gates of Madras? Worse than when the French contended with us for supremacy in India, or when the Mahratta confederacy aspired to the same object? Compare our present position with that of seventy years ago, when these terrors were at their full height, and say whether the gloomy predictions which then passed current as oracles of political wisdom have been fulfilled or not. One who indulged in these predictions for the edification of his countrymen was the Marquis of Hastings, afterwards Governor-General of India. Did he find his vaticinations confirmed by the course of events? did he find the British interests in India ruined, or did he leave them so? An historian of the first Burmese war* tells of astrologers who were believed to be invulnerable, and upon the strength of this belief exposed themselves without hesitation to the fire of the British. They were of course occasionally knocked over, but these mishaps effected no diminution of the popular credulity. The men were seen to be killed, but were still believed to be invulnerable. Our astrologers, indeed, unlike these men, predict disaster, confusion, and ruin; but surely this is not a reason why we should imitate the credulous Burmese in disbelieving the evidence of facts, because it contradicts preconceived notions. The Burmese astrologers acted under the influence of opium, ours under that of no more powerful stimulant than port-wine, or at the most brandy; but the effects on themselves and the operation of the prophetic manifestation on their adherents are much the same.

We are not counselling injustice. The last of conquest is not a British feeling. Our weak point lies in the contrary direction; and it is most important to guard it. In the narrative of the former Burmese war to which we have already referred, a passage occurs which may be regarded as adumbrating that which we have to expect from the exercise of forbearance. The passage runs thus: "Humanity might prompt a British soldier to pass a fallen or vanquished foe, but when he found his forbearance repaid on all occasions by a shot the instant that his back was turned, self-preservation soon taught him the necessity of other measures." * Here is individually shadowed out that which nationally we may expect. As certainly as we withdraw, leaving the Burmese empire in its integrity, so certainly shall we be rewarded by the shot so soon as our backs are turned. Let us then not neglect the moral which the historian presents to us. Let the instinct of self-preservation impel us to adopt "other measures," better calculated to promote the interests of permanent peace and security.

And now a few words on two points not to be disregarded. We have received indications of friendly feeling from those to whom our withdrawal would be the signal of prompt and certain destruction: are we prepared, not only to spare our foes, but to deliver up to their vengeance those who have incurred the penalty by favouring us? Let magnanimity and liberality answer this; if they be silent, as they probably will, let honesty and common justice answer, and their answer may be trusted. The other point is one which has already drawn some degree of the attention which we are anxious to direct to it. We may if we list, say, Let the Burmese dominions remain intact; we will have nothing to do with them; but will all of our race display the like prudence? Brother Jonathan, like the first Napoleon, has a taste for "ships, colonies, and commerce." He has the first and third, and is something more than willing to add the second. He is looking about to the eastward for the gratification of his desire in this respect, and the maritime and commercial advantages of the country which we now command may, in the event of our abandonment, prove a temptation too strong for his virtue to resist. Our brother has many points in his character which may render us proud of the relationship; but it is proverbial that, in many cases, relations agree best at a distance; and this probably is one of them. We are engaged in chastising a troublesome neighbour: it were folly to give room for the settlement of another, who might, perchance, prove more troublesome, and would certainly be far more formidable.

How easy is it to get up a grievance! how easy is it, when the grievance is got up, to enshrine it in a petition or memorial, and canvass for signatures thereto! But more, and more wonderful, how easy is it to obtain the signatures thus solicited! Could it be believed—if the facts did not stare us in the face—could it be believed, that gentlemen of most honourable character, of mature age, in many cases of high position, and in some of eminent distinction in one of the noblest of professions—could it be believed that such men could be found to attach their signatures to grumbling documents without ever taking the trouble to inquire whether the contents were true or not—whether or not the object sought were desirable, or even practicable—whether the ground of complaint were real or imaginary—whether the alleged grievance were a fact, an invention, or a delusion—in short, without either knowing or caring anything about matters in regard to which they pledged their deliberate opinions and convictions by affixing their names as petitioners or memorialists? Would prudent men act thus under any other circumstances? would they indorse bills or incur pecuniary liabilities with the same levity? And surely honour should by a soldier be guarded as watchfully as money. Politeness is certainly carried to an extreme when gentlemen lend the sanction of their names to unfounded, perhaps libellous statements, solely because they are asked to do so. Such a custom, if ever it could become a custom, must annihilate petitioning altogether. Who would regard petition or memorial when it became known universally that those who accredited the documents with their names knew no more of the contents than did the paper on which they were inscribed, and were as heedless of the results as is the gun which acts at the bidding of the artilleryman.

These reflections have been called forth by facts recently made public. During the late inquiries by Parliamentary Committees into the mode of administering the Indian Government, a memorial professedly from certain officers of the Indian army to the Court of Directors was submitted to one of those Committees, sustained moreover by the evidence of its chief promoter, the tendency of both being to show that the claims of servants of the Company to patronage in favour of their sons are inadequately considered. The Committee took some pains to inquire into the memorial and into some of the alleged facts, and, although this collateral investigation must have consumed much time, it was not time altogether thrown away, inasmuch as the result showed how necessary it is to exercise great caution in receiving such statements. A distinguished officer said he had authorized the affixing his signature to the memorial, under the impression that the Court of Directors had cognizance of it, and assented to its prayer, and in consequence of a letter which he received from its chief promoter, who told him that the memorial was unobjectionable, and had been signed by a number of officers; but he (the witness) had since had reason to regret that he did sign it, because his idea was that it merely related to the way in which persons had access to the Court of Directors to obtain appointments, and nothing further, never intending anything like a complaint that the patronage was distributed in an improper manner; and he believed many persons who had signed the memorial had the same impression. Another officer who had signed, stated to the Committee, that he told the gentleman who applied to him in regard to the memorial, that he did not concur in all its views, and he now said he should be prepared to find that the Indian army had about its fair share of the patronage. A third who had also signed the memorial, would not have done so if he had had any idea of its going beyond the Court of Directors, and he now believes the scheme contained in it to be quite impracticable, and of no service to the officers of the army. Such is the value to be attached to "got-up" memorials!

Then the cases of alleged hardship and disappointment adduced were summarily disposed of by a gentleman in the Company's service, than whom no man is better informed, who went through the list before the Committee, and showed, where any clue was afforded, that, in some cases, the parties, said to have been refused appointments, had actually obtained them, and that in none was there any real ground of complaint. With respect to all the cases, moreover, it is worthy of notice that the parties themselves did not appear as complainants, but were put forward by others.

Before quitting the subject of petition and memorial manufacturing, we may be permitted to draw attention to the uniformity of mode in which the trade is carried on by all who follow it. In the Bombay intelligence contained in our last number will be found some account of a native petition concocted at that presidency, and now, we suppose, in this country. The more intelligent and respectable among the native population appear, indeed, to have declined to sign it, showing in this respect more caution and more consistency than their Anglo-Indian brethren; but thousands have signed, of whom it is believed the vast majority know no more of the document to which they have made themselves parties, than do some of the subscribers to the memorial first adverted to. Most of the Bombay petitioners, it is said, have signed "because others did so;" a comparatively excusable course for them to follow, seeing that, for the most part, they are steeped in ignorance; but for which no apology can be offered when taken by educated Englishmen, and especially that class who, as "officers and gentlemen," are bound to yield a most punctilious regard—a superstitious one, if such were possible—to the claims of truth and propriety. But agitation is ever a most corrupting trade; and its evil influence extends to all who tamper with it even for an instant. It is unnecessary to point out how incongruous is its practice with the military character, and to what fatal consequences it may lead in teaching lessons which may not only be learned and remembered, but improved upon. If officers may combine to agitate, why not the men in the ranks? Who shall say where the privilege is to stop? Think of the illustrious man whose recent death has clouded the face of Europe—think of the Duke of Wellington, at any period of his glorious career, in the character of an agitator! The bare thought is almost treason to the memory of the mighty dead. "Agitate—agitate—agitate," was the recommendation of one of the most successful adventurers of modern times; and the advice well became the lips from which it proceeded. But gentlemen should turn a deaf ear to it, and eschew a course which, whatever its result in other respects, must inevitably lead to their own degradation; and this under whatever form the discreditable art may be pursued. Memorial-mongering will be found to exercise upon those who dabble therein an influence not less fatal than the practice of spouting frothy nonsense and moving bombastical resolutions at public meetings. Both should be left to professional artists—to the Jellybys, the Pardiggles, the Gushers, the Wisks, and the rest of the wedding-party immortalized in the last number of Bleak House. Gentlemen should keep aloof from such occupation. "He that toucheth pitch shall be defiled therewith."

It appears from the evidence of Mr. Melvill before the Lords' Committee on the East-India Charter Act, that the Bishop of Calcutta has represented the importance and necessity of a division of that see, in view to the erection of a bishopric at Agra; and that the Court of Directors have not encouraged this wish, thinking it more desirable to increase the clergy than the bishops, in the present state of India.

CORRESPONDENCE.

TO THE EDITOR OF ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL.

Sir,—In the Blue Book of the House of Commons (29th June, 1852), it appears, at p. 477, para. 88, that there has been "an aggregate increased expenditure for military charges of 30 crores of rupees" since the Afghan expedition. The excess of extraordinary charges from the year 1839-40 to 1841-42 was Rs. 1,67,76,934, or, at 1s. 10½d. £1,572,837

the Court of Directors' letter of 3rd June, 1852 15,000,000

Mr. J. Campbell, in his Modern India, p. 418, ducting cash balances in India and in London, and adding £8,500,000 for East-India Stock, unredeemed by the guaranteed fund of

£2,000,000, at 45,640,028

Debt above war £942,191

The war expenses seem to be £942,191 less than the debt. The years 1839-40 to 1841-42 do represent the cost of the Afghan war. The President of the Board of Control, in April, 1852, in the House of Commons, put down all the wars from 1838 to the end of the Punjab war (1849) at £36,000,000. Add for the Burmese war £15,000,000, and we have £51,000,000. So that the wars have cost much more than the amount of debt, without adding a fraction for interest! We must recollect that the £12,000,000 of cash balances in the Indian treasuries cost the East-India Company above £500,000 a year for interest; and part of that loss must be estimated as part of the expenses for the defence of India. The Afghan war was not a war originating with the East-India Company, but was forced on them by the Board of Control. Lord Broughton (in 1851, when Sir J. C. Hobhouse) declared in the House of Commons that the war originated with him. If the President of the Board of Control can order a war in India, he should be answerable for the expenses. In 1851, there were £400,000 due to the East-India Company for money expended in the China war. Surely, the East-India Company are not to pay for that war.

A BENGAL OFFICER.

THE LATE WILLIAM EMPSON, ESQ.

Our present publication announces the death of William Empson, Esq., for twenty-eight years Professor of Law at the East-India Company's College, Haileybury. Little is known of his earlier years, save that he received his education at Winchester, under Dr. Goddard. From the venerable foundation of William of Wykeham, he passed to Trinity College, Cambridge, where he was the contemporary of the late Marquis of Northampton, the Dean of Ely, Lord Cranworth, Sir James Stephen, Mr. Wrighton, M. P. for Northampton, the Master of the Temple, and others, with whom he maintained relations of friendship until the tie was severed by death. His career at Cambridge was creditable, but he does not appear to have attained any distinction; whether or not he sought for any we are unable to state. Entering himself at Lincoln's Inn, he was, during part of the period of preparation for the bar, a pupil of that eminently learned lawyer Mr. Tindal, in after years the ornament of the Court of Common Pleas, where he presided as Chief Justice. When called, Mr. Empson for some time went the Midland Circuit, ranking among his legal friends Mr. Fynes Clinton, Mr. March Phillips, subsequently Under Secretary of State, Mr. Parke, now Baron Parke, and Mr. Denman, now Lord Denman. The failure of his health compelling him to relinquish the active exercise of his profession, and a warmer climate being thought desirable, he proceeded to Italy, where he for a time resided. In 1824, he succeeded Sir James Mackintosh as Professor of Law at Haileybury, which appointment he held until his death. The duties of his office he discharged perseveringly, and in a manner which commanded the respect both of his colleagues and of his pupils. The course of reading which he prescribed and superintended appears not to have been a contracted one, regard being had to the limited period of collegiate residence and the necessary demands of other studies. In his evidence, given before a committee of the House of Commons in 1832, he stated his usual text books for the first and second terms to be the principal chapters of Paley's Moral Philosophy, with the corresponding chapters of Blackstone, constituting a parallel line of observation between the nature and extent of moral duties and legal duties; for the third term, Kaimes's Essay on Criminal Law, Dumont on Rewards and Punishments, the last volume of Blackstone, Russell, and Archibald, and a portion of Harrington's Analysis of the Bengal Regulations; for the last term, Dumont's work on Evidence, Stephen upon Pleading, the first volume of Phillips's Law of Evidence, and the chapters on Testimony in the Mahomedan and Hindoo Law. This course was occasionally varied by lectures on Selwyn's Nisi Prius and Strange's Hindoo Law; with, for the two senior classes, Pothier on Obligations, and for the two junior, the parts of Domat's Civil Law relating to succession and inheritance. According to the memoir published in the Times, the sphere of study was still wider, extending to the works of various philosophical jurists, British and foreign; among them Kent, Story, Wheaton, Wildman, and that bright legal luminary, Sir William Scott (Lord Stowell), whose name is perhaps the only one of modern times fit to be associated with that of Justinian. At a time when there is reason to apprehend that law will ere long cease to be regarded as a science, it is gratifying to find respect for it as such lingering anywhere.

Mr. Empson's literary reputation is identified with the Edinburgh Review, to which, between 1823 (when his connection with the work commenced) and 1849, he contributed between sixty and seventy articles. Sydney Smith, on becoming a dignitary, withdrew from the practice of reviewing by which his fame had been raised and established; either because he no longer regarded its emoluments, or thought its exercise inconsistent with his elevated position in the church. Mr. Empson evidently did not think the office of a critical censor inconsistent with that of a collegiate professor; for not only did he contribute largely to the pages of the great northern review, but on the death of Mr. Macvey Napier, he accepted the editorship. It is but due to Mr. Empson to say, that in the exercise of the power thus placed in his hands he displayed a rare measure of fairness and kindness. Mr. Empson belonged to the party termed liberal, and he showed himself liberal in something more than profession by admitting into the review under his management an article laudatory of Southey, to whose political opinions his own were diametrically opposed. It is remarkable, that although a layman, the number of theological articles in the Edinburgh Review increased after he acquired its control, and certainly manifested a depth of feeling previously unknown to the work. Their tone and spirit no one can question: the judgment passed on the opinions maintained will of course be modified, perhaps dictated, by the opinions of the judge. Ultras of no party will be satisfied with them; but those who look to Scripture, and to Scripture only, for the rule of faith, will find their views confirmed and supported with ability, knowledge, and good feeling.

Mr. Empson's private character is represented as highly amiable; and a saying ascribed to him, on good authority, may well be recorded as indicating that his sympathies were not (as there is too much reason to fear is sometimes the case) confined within the social circle in which his place in society was allotted. He regarded his neighbours beneath him in place and fortune as having nevertheless a claim upon the kindness of those situated like himself, the observation to which we have referred being,

"We who represent the College should consider ourselves the rich squire of the place, and we are bound to consider the condition of our poor neighbours."

He married the only daughter of Francis Jeffrey, who swayed the critical sceptre during the palmy years of the Edinburgh Review, raised chiefly by himself, Brougham, and Sidney Smith, to the highest summit of popularity. Mr. Empson's age, at the time of his death, was 62.

The Chairman, on presenting the sword, addressed the fortunate competitor as follows: "Mr. Trevor, the prize of a sword has been established by the Court of Directors for that gentleman cadet whose conduct has been exemplary during the entire period of his residence at this institution. On the present occasion, you are the cadet thus honourably distinguished. I have now the greatest satisfaction in presenting to you this testimony of the approbation of the Court of Directors; and whatever honours may await your further career, believe me, that as age and reputation increase, you will the more deeply value this early trophy, won by good conduct—the foundation of all that is true and permanent here and hopeful hereafter."

The Chairman, on presenting the Pollock Gold Medal, in addressing Mr. Trevor, said: "Mr. Trevor, having already delivered to you the sword which bears testimony to your exemplary conduct, it affords me peculiar gratification now to present to you, in the name of the inhabitants of Calcutta, the prize medal established by them 'as a token of their high sense of the great and successful military services and private worth of General Sir George Pollock, to be conferred upon that cadet who ranks highest in the scale of general merit, and who is also reported by the lieutenant-governor as being worthy by his conduct to receive this high mark of honorary distinction.' You, sir, may well be proud of being thus honourably distinguished. I regard it as a presage of your future fame; and fervently hope that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, you may fully realize the promise afforded by your brilliant career in this institution."

Fortification Department.—After the cadets' dinner, the Chairman, committee, and visitors proceeded to the sand modelling hall, which was filled, as usual, with interesting models. The first (explained by Gentleman Cadet Finch) was a tête de pont, strongly supported in the rear of the river by fortified heights. The second was a model of the Great Dagon Pagoda of Rangoon, with its three elevated terraces, recently captured, on a scale of one-eighth of an inch to a foot; explained by Cadet Trevor. The third was a fortified position, consisting of houses on the near side of a river, pierced with loopholes, and prepared with the usual appliances of sandbags in the windows for musketry defence, to resist the passage of a bridge in front against the attack of infantry, unaided by artillery; which, with a handsome specimen of one of Napoleon's model towers, was explained by Cadet Newmarch. The fourth exhibited the attack of the city of Valenciennes by the Duke of York in 1794; explained by Cadet Beckley.

Afterwards was exhibited a new system of ventilating hospitals, barracks, churches, and public buildings in tropical climates, as proposed by Lieut. Cook, R.N., F.R.S., Professor of Fortification at Addiscombe, sixteen punkhas in number, of full size, all worked by a single pendulum; explained by Cadet Sewell.

The usual examination in the fortification hall had preceded the cadets' dinner. It was remarkable on this occasion by the actual construction of a two-gun battery, with a traverse, on a scale of one inch to a foot, properly rivetted with gabions and fascines, by Gentlemen Cadets Trevor, Finch, Traill, and Jackson.

The plans and drawings in this department were all of the usual high order. Some of these were especially interesting, as exhibiting the systems of Carnot, Dufour, Chaumara, and Coehorn, according to the system introduced by the senior Professor in Fortification at Addiscombe, by which both plan and elevation, with the whole interior of each system, are at once exhibited upon a scale at one view.

And several minor, but very promising subjects, in the two junior terms.

After the reports had been read by Mr. T. R. Clarke, of the cadet department, East-India House, the Chairman addressed the cadets in the following terms:—

"The report which has just been read is highly satisfactory, and it is most gratifying to me to state that the conduct and progress of the students merit the warmest approbation of the Court of Directors. Such results afford the best evidence of the efficiency of the discipline and system of instruction pursued at this institution, and reflect honour on the talent, skill, and untiring zeal of the lieutenant-governor, the public examiner, and professors in their respective offices; and it is my gratifying duty to tender to them the warmest and most cordial thanks of the Court of Directors. Gentlemen, we meet at the usual period, but not under usual circumstances. There are times when events, whether gloomy or cheering, cast their tinge over the passing scene, communicating to every one some portion of the feeling which they are calculated to inspire, and for a while almost absorbing universal attention. Such has recently been the case throughout England—throughout Europe; I may say, throughout the civilized world. The voice of affectionate encouragement to perseverance in all military, social, and moral duties has often been heard within these walls, and my own feeble exhortations have not been wanting. It would be vain to attempt either to add anything to the judicious addresses of my predecessors, or to place in a new light what they have so anxiously inculcated. Rather let me dwell on the event to which I have alluded, and which affords me an opportunity of setting before you truths often before repeated, but which may now be appropriately exhibited, not in a form merely didactic, but more powerfully as embodied in example. Since we last met in this hall, the hand of death has removed from among us the great captain of the age. The character of that great man has been so frequently, so ably drawn, that it would be superfluous in me to dwell upon its excellencies. You will find them recorded in history, and reflected from every page of his own perspicuous and unrivalled despatches. But there is one consideration connected with the renown of the departed hero so cheering to those who are striving for eminence, and so full of promise to those contending with difficulty, that it must ever be regarded in this institution with feelings of intense interest. When listening a few evenings ago to the eloquent and powerful address of the Chancellor of the Exchequer, I was much struck with the force and truth of an observation he made with reference to the successes of the illustrious Duke. He said that it was "his character that created his career." Doubtless this was the case; and all who are familiar with that career will remember that he was not the creature of accident, but one who dealt with circumstances, good or evil, so as to render them in all cases auxiliary to his designs. But let me lead you a step still further, and point out to you that noble as was his character, the Duke was himself its chief architect, and this is the consideration to which I alluded, and to which I would prominently draw your attention. Clive, it has been said, was born a soldier. With regard to the great man over whose dust the tomb has just closed, it was not so much to native genius, as to mental discipline, that he was indebted for the higher order, I may say, the perfection of his military attainment. If we go back to the commencement of his career we see how strenuously he must have laboured to qualify himself for the arduous command then about to be confided to him. The plan of military operations drawn up by him in anticipation of the first Mahratta campaign proves how thoroughly he understood his enemy, and how carefully he had weighed the various contingencies under which he might possibly encounter him. He sketches the leading features of the Mahratta character with the fidelity of a native of India, and describes the physical circumstances of the country as though he had been familiar with its scenes from childhood. In his first great battle (that of Assaye) he brought to his aid not only a quickness of apprehension, but a judgment rendered sound, rapid, and discriminating by constant exercise and vigilant attention, and the result of that battle was the triumph of science and mastery skill over enormous physical superiority. Throughout his subsequent career we trace the same qualities of mind that had conduce to his earlier successes—perseverance, sagacity, forethought, self-command—but each marked at every successive step by that progressive improvement which had resulted from unremitting intellectual labour and reflection. When at length this great man had put an end to European war, and was called to the councils of his Sovereign, the powers of his mind were never suffered to be idle, his energies never abated. If he took up what was intricate it was with a resolution to unravel it; if he grappled with difficulty, it was with a determination to overcome it. He disdained to be superficial. Nothing short of the complete mastery of a subject could satisfy the craving of his vigorous mind. Thus victory was insured in the study, as it had been in the field. But let me impress upon your minds, my young friends, that the illustrious Duke never presumed to place his chief reliance upon himself. He knew that upon the proudest schemes ever planned by human wisdom affluit Deus et dissipatur; and we find this eminent man, whose career had been distinguished by unbroken success, humbly acknowledging his own insufficiency, punctual and devotional in his religious observances, and placing his trust for the direction of his conduct on the Great Disposer of events. My object in this brief address has been to point out that in the public theatre of this great world, the career of a distinguished individual is, as I before said, created by his character, that the formation of character is almost entirely dependent upon the exertions of the individual—that the laborious process which it is consequently necessary to undergo, engenders habits of mind far more valuable than those derived from the gifts of natural genius—that the highest flight of human wisdom is but weakness unless sustained from on high; and that the noblest minds humbly ascribe their successes not to their own prudence and management, their own strength and might, but to the gracious bounty of Providence. All these instructive truths are illustrated so powerfully in the life of the Duke of Wellington, that I gladly embrace this opportunity of pressing upon your attention the character of the departed hero as the most valuable study for the youth of this institution—for all youth, whatever their destination, but pre-eminently so for those preparing for the military profession. Place it before you as your model. Resolve to become all that you ought to be—all that your friends could wish you to be—all that your Creator requires you to be;—then follow up the resolution with unflinching steadiness of purpose, and there is a presumption, little short of certainty, that your efforts will be crowned with success. Gentlemen, your destination is India, and though the illustrious character to which I have called your attention is an example for all, it is peculiarly so for you, not because the earliest records of his fame are associated with that country, but because his virtues are precisely those which it is most essential that an Indian officer, and especially a young Indian officer, should struggle to possess. The departed Duke was, if I may so express myself, a miracle of order and activity. Let his example preserve you from being seduced by the peculiarities of climate to indulge in opposite habits. Always liberal, yet he carefully proportioned his mode of living to his means, and rigidly restricted his expenditure within his income. Let this command your most careful attention and imitation, and thus avoid the grinding, humiliating pressure of debt. The Duke was temperate to the verge of abstemiousness. Imitate him in this virtue also, and the health and unclouded intellect which he enjoyed will be yours. He was zealous to improve every moment, and turn it to some valuable purpose. In ordinary circumstances your professional avocations will not occupy the whole of your time. Devote the leisure you may possess to some useful object that may prove beneficial to yourself and to others; and, to descend to minor points, minor in appearance, but scarcely so in validity, remember that the Duke was remarkable for punctuality in all matters, great and small. Punctuality is essentially a military duty; but, mark me, you will in vain resolve to be punctual in matters of moment, if you are not equally resolute to be punctual in the ordinary engagements and transactions of life. Keep ever before you, and attempt to imitate, the great model I have so imperfectly endeavoured to portray, and your may at least approximate that perfection of the military character which the departed hero so strikingly exhibited. Gentlemen, I have now only to recommend to you who remain here continued assiduity—to those about to depart, perseverance in the good cause here begun; and to you all I fervently wish that success which I hope and believe you will endeavour to deserve."

EAST-INDIA COLLEGE, HAILEYBURY.

CLOSE OF THE TERM.

Monday (the 13th inst.) being the day appointed for closing the second Term for the year 1852, a deputation from the Court of Directors of the East-India Company visited the College, for the purpose of receiving the Report of the Principal, and of distributing the medals and prizes awarded to the successful competitors in the various branches of Oriental, Classical, and European literature.

A special train left the Shoreditch station of the Eastern Counties Railway at half-past 10 o'clock; and on the arrival of the Directors and the visitors at Haileybury, the distinguished party proceeded to the lodge to pay their respects to the Principal (the Rev. H. Melvill). The Directors then repaired to the Council-room, where they received a highly satisfactory Report from the Rev. the Principal.

The chair was occupied by Sir James Weir Hogg, Bart., M.P., Chairman of the Honourable Court of Directors, who, together with the following Directors, formed the deputation:—Russell Ellise, Esq. (Deputy-Chairman); Sir Henry Willock, K.L.S.; Col. Sykes; Major Oliphant; Ross D. Mangles, Esq., M.P.; W. H. C. Plowden, Esq.; J. C. Whiteman, Esq.; Elliot Macnaghten, Esq., and Major Moore.

Mr. Trotter then read his Prize Essay on the question—"Are the circumstances of Ancient or Modern times more favourable to Literature?" The essayist ably and elaborately reviewed the various circumstances which had affected the progress of literature in all ages and countries; and arrived at the conclusion, that notwithstanding the munificence of patrons and the genius of writers in ancient times, literature had received so great an impulse from the invention of printing, and so large an assistance from the learning of the past, and from other circumstances, that it must be concluded the circumstances of modern times were more favourable to literature. The essay was warmly applauded.

Mr. Herschel (who was received by his fellow-students with marks of universal approbation) read a passage from Gibbon, translated by himself into Persian.

The Chairman then distributed the prizes to the successful students, who were enthusiastically cheered as they came up to the table.

On presenting the numerous prizes awarded to Mr. Herschel,

The Chairman said:—At the last examination, it was my gratifying duty to congratulate you on the manner in which you had exerted yourself, and on the success you had obtained. To-day, I perceive with pleasure that you have proceeded still further in the honourable career you then commenced. I hope that you will continue in a course by which you cannot fail to advance your own best interests, and to do honour to the respected name you bear. (Applause.)

On presenting the prizes to Mr. Hope,

The Chairman congratulated that gentleman on the distinguished career he had passed in college, and the high character with which he left it. He hoped that he would continue in the course he had commenced to his life's end. (Cheers.)

Mr. Hooper next read the classification of the Rank of the Students about to depart for India, as follows:—

The Chairman then addressed the assembled students as follows:—

"Gentlemen Students,—On an occasion like the present it is peculiarly painful to commence with the language of regret. But, recollecting the loss which this College has just sustained in the death of one of its most distinguished professors, I should not be doing justice either to my own feelings or to yours, if I abstained from adverting to the sad event as a subject of deep sorrow. We highly valued the talents and appreciated the eminent services of the late Mr. Empson. We deeply deplore his loss, and we truly venerate his memory. It has frequently been my pleasing duty to preside at these examinations, and I have rarely done so with greater satisfaction than on this occasion. In the Junior Term, I am sorry to say, there are some gentlemen who have failed to keep their term. I will not dwell on that subject further than to express a hope that their future diligence will make up for their past neglect. It is gratifying to observe by the report, that all the students in the highest class have succeeded in passing the tests required to preserve their term, and have been declared fit for the service. We are thus assured that this College continues to carry out the great object for the accomplishment of which it was established. And what is that object? Nothing less than the welfare and happiness of the millions of human beings placed under the British rule. The trust committed by the British Legislature to the East-India Company involves the protection of the vast population of India, and the duty of providing for them wise and salutary laws, and moreover taking care that these laws are administered with vigilance and impartiality. In a word, the duty of diffusing and maintaining the countless blessings which flow from a Government at once strong and beneficent. (Cheers.) The instruments mainly employed in this momentous work are provided here. We look to this College to educate men competent to the arduous duties of the civil administration of India,—men trained in liberal learning, and moral and religious habits—whose minds are exercised in those studies which develop and invigorate the intellect, and fortified by stern principles of duty, giving to men the power and the will to do what ought to be done, under all circumstances. (Applause.) And, gentlemen, we have not looked in vain. The College, since its institution, has sent forth a long array of men distinguished alike by the practical application to the business of life of the loftiest principles of duty, and by the devotion to the interests of India of administrative talents of the highest order. (Cheers.) I will venture to say that the College has done even more than this—that it has protected India from becoming a refuge for the idle, the dissolute, and the incompetent. (Applause.) The East-India Company have always been singularly fortunate in obtaining for this institution the services of gentlemen eminently distinguished by their acquisitions in every department of knowledge, who devote themselves with unwearied zeal to the advancement of the great cause which we have at heart; and it is my gratifying duty to express to the learned Principal and the Professors, the warm and cordial acknowledgments of the Court of Directors for their important services. (Applause.) With their eminent ability we are all well acquainted; their zeal is equally well known; both are displayed in the results we have this day witnessed, and demand that tribute which it is my pride and pleasure to pay. (Cheers.) To you, gentlemen, who will continue to participate in the high means of mental cultivation here provided, I would say, avail yourselves of the advantages thus afforded you; so that, when in after life you look back to the period of your residence at this college, the retrospect may not be embittered by the recollection of time mis-spent and opportunity thrown away. Those who are about to leave the College, and enter on the field of active employment, ought to be aware, and no doubt are aware, that a young civilian cannot enter upon his public duties until he has passed an examination in two of the native languages. It is fit, also, that you should be aware, that if the student fail to pass within the prescribed time, he is sent home and loses his appointment. I grieve to say that there are some recent cases in which this penalty has been inflicted; and the Court of Directors have felt it their duty peremptorily to desire that it should, in all cases where deserved, be strictly enforced. (Cheers.) It is right, gentlemen, that I should also apprise you, that by recent regulations, a young civilian cannot be advanced beyond a specified and a subordinate position in the service until he has passed a further examination, of course a much more trying one, involving a knowledge of official duties as well as of the native languages,—and has thus proved himself competent to the discharge of the duties of the higher grade to which he seeks to be promoted. This will check the progress of the idle and incompetent, and will clear the way for the advancement of the industrious and intelligent. (Applause.) Remember, gentlemen, you are about to enter into a service where merit is the measure of success. Deserve to prosper, and you will prosper. Labour zealously and faithfully, and the reward of zealous and faithful labour will most assuredly be yours. In India there are no party politics, and the local government, in advancing their public servants, are influenced by no consideration but regard for the public good and the competence of the individual. A civil servant in India may enjoy that proud feeling of independence, arising from the conviction that, if he deserves to be advanced, he will be advanced—he must be advanced. (Applause.) He has the glorious consciousness that he owes his rise in the service to no party feeling or prejudice, to no favour or caprice, but to himself alone. Nothing can prevent your advancement, but your own deficiency or your own misconduct,—and either of these will most certainly retard your promotion, perhaps stop it altogether; and if of an aggravated character, will end in your removal from the service—thus blighting all your hopes, and, what perhaps you would feel more deeply, blighting the hopes of those most dear to you. (Applause.) Let me call your attention for a moment to the present circumstances of our position in India as compared with the past. You cannot form too high an estimate of the duties which will speedily devolve on you. In the earlier period of our Indian rule, the subordinate as well as the principal duties were performed by members of the civil service; but native agency and European superintendence, I am happy to say, is now the established usage. Education has made, and I am happy to say is making, rapid strides among the natives of India; and, if our country is to maintain supremacy of rule, we must take care that it maintains the supremacy of mind. (Applause.) You must qualify yourselves not merely for subordinate duties, but for those of superintendence and supervision: and prove by the superiority of your knowledge that you deserve superiority of station. Rest your pretensions on this sure and solid basis, and you will meet with every deference and respect from those who surround you. I hope I need not warn you against assuming any imperious, haughty, arrogant appearance of superiority. In all your intercourse with the natives of India, treat them with forbearance, with kindness, and with consideration. Remember, you are the representatives of your country in India, and that the great mass of the natives have no means of judging as to the character and feelings of the English people but from you. Your country's honour, then, no less than the well-being of India, will be in your keeping. (Applause.) These are no light charges, and you cannot escape from the responsibility attached to them. Entering the distinguished service for which you are destined, you are pledged to regard as holy obligations, its claims upon you. Remember your duties to India, and to those whom you serve there. Remember your duties to the land of your birth, where your earliest years have been spent, and in which you look forward with fond hope to pass the latest that may be allotted to you. The service on which you are about to enter not only provides amply for you during your career in India, but also affords you the means, if you are prudent, of securing an independence on your return to England. It is my devout and my fervent hope that the blessing of Divine Providence may so rest upon you, that all your honourable and virtuous aspirations may be fully realized; and, with the earnest expressions of this desire, I bid you all an affectionate farewell. (Applause.)

The directors, professors, visitors, and students, then left the library, and after perambulating the grounds for a short time, proceeded to the Examination Hall, where an elegant luncheon was provided by Mr. Coleman, the College purveyor. Sir J. Weir Hogg presided, supported by the members of the deputation from the Court of Directors, and by Sir Minto Farquhar, Mr. Farquhar, &c.

At the close of the repast,

The Chairman rose and said,—He had, in the course of his address to the students, expressed his high sense of the meritorious, zealous, and successful efforts of the Principal and Professors of this College; and he believed he was not deceived in thinking that it would be acceptable to all present, if he afforded them an opportunity of expressing their concurrence in that sentiment. (Cheers.) Great as were the exertions of the Principal and Professors of this College, they must all feel that their labours promoted the end sought, by advancing the public interests. Still, however, he hoped it would be acceptable to them to learn that their labours were appreciated; and that they had the warm and grateful thanks, not only of the Court of Directors, but of the public at large. (Applause.) He had much pleasure in proposing “the health of the Principal and Professors of the College.” (Applause.)

The Rev. the Principal rose amidst applause, and said:—It is with great pleasure that I rise to return thanks on behalf of the living; but with great pain that, in a certain sense, I have to do so on behalf of the dead. For, Sir, I cannot concur in the justice of the eulogium which you were pleased to pronounce in the Library on the late Professor of Law, without asserting the greatness of the loss which the College has sustained. He was, indeed, a man of high mark: his literary acquirements and engagements shed a lustre over the College: his many personal virtues endeared him to a wide circle of acquaintance, and his large charities made him the benefactor of the neighbourhood. Peace to his memory,—we shall look long before we find a man of ampler erudition, of stronger head, or of warmer heart. But I will not enlarge on so sad a theme. Let me now express how gratifying it is to myself and to the surviving Professors, to receive such acknowledgments as have just been tendered us of our endeavours to give efficiency to this important institution. I say, of our endeavours,—for we are often deeply conscious that we come far short of that we could desire to attain, though we hope we may honestly think that, whatever may be our failures, they are not such as result from wilful inattention. And, accordingly, it has been highly satisfactory to us to observe that, in the evidence given before the Parliamentary Committees, there is no impeachment of the manner in which the College is worked. Fault may be found with certain parts of the system; suggestions may be made as to possible improvements; but, I do not find that it is either denied or questioned that the authorities here do their best to make the College subserve the training a set of good civil servants for India. And this, I again say, is highly satisfactory to us; for, after all, we are not answerable for the system, though we are for the manner in which the system is worked. And yet I think that the system itself admits of a clear and straightforward defence. For example, we often hear of the injuriousness of a too exclusive system—as though it would be better for your writers, were they trained in the broader scenes of Oxford or Cambridge. Now, gentlemen, I for one, most gratefully acknowledge the advantages derivable from the collisions of the University. I admit I admire the free play of thought, the enlargement of the mind, the power which resides in the very genius of the place, in its historic and ennobling associations. And yet I may be allowed to doubt whether it be not well to club together, and to keep apart, young men designed for a special and distant sphere. I think that the whole mind is thus centered upon India. I think that there is generated an esprit de corps, which could hardly be acquired on a more diversified stage. I think that associations are formed, to continue through life, and which combine, in a most profitable unanimity, the various officers of Government. And I believe, moreover, that, in and through the present seclusion, you keep all the talent which may be nominated, to the Indian civil service; whereas, in the University, much would drain off into the various channels which ability there very quickly finds. But I must not enlarge upon this. My business is rather to thank you, Mr. Chairman, for the very excellent speech which you have this day addressed to our students,—a speech replete with practical good sense. I have also to thank the Company for the kindness shown to myself and the Professors, and to assure them that every fresh proof of goodwill will serve as an additional stimulus to the performance of duty. (Applause.)

The deputation and visitors then retired, and almost immediately returned to London.

The Rev. Thos. Dale, M.A., the Rev. Rob. Eden, M.A., and the Rev. Wm. Stone, M.A., have been appointed by the Commissioners for the Affairs of India Examiners of Candidates for admission into the East-India College next term, which will commence on Wednesday, the 19th of January next.

The examination of the candidates for admission will be held at the East-India House on the 6th, 7th, and 8th of January.

THE PENINSULAR AND ORIENTAL COMPANY held their twelfth annual meeting on the 4th instant, when they resolved to extend their operations to Australia, and, in combination with the increased facilities which will be afforded by their fortnightly communication with India and China, &c., they have determined to lower very considerably their present rates of passage-money between Europe and the East. The future rates will be, for a lady or gentleman to Ceylon, including the expense of transit through Egypt, 95*l.*; to Bombay, 95*l.*; to Madras, 100*l.*; to Calcutta, 105*l.*; and to Hong-Kong, 130*l.*; and for married couples to Ceylon, 240*l.*; to Bombay, 240*l.*; to Madras, 250*l.*; to Calcutta, 270*l.*; to Hong-Kong, 335*l.*

THE CLIMATE OF THE HILL STATION OF INDIA.—Dr. McWilliam read a paper before the Epidemiological Society on the 6th Dec., by Superintending Surgeon F. Corbyn, of the Bengal army, and communicated by Colonel Sykes, F.R.S., on "The Climate of the Hill Stations of India." The object of the first part of the paper was to show that the superiority of the hill stations over those of the plains was not such as was generally supposed, and that in many instances the removal of troops from the low lands to the more elevated districts had been attended with unfavourable results. In the second part of the paper, Surg. Corbyn is disposed to consider, with Dr. Boyer, of the 60th Rifles, that the climate of the hills may be beneficial in some stages of hepatic diseases, more especially in cases of fever. Dr. Corbyn recommends a machine called the "Thermantidote," invented by the late Dr. Ranking, and improved by Captain Simpson, D.A.C. General, as a means of effectually ventilating and cooling the heated atmosphere of the barracks in the plains.

WILLIAM HENRY MAYNE, Esq., whose death is recorded in the obituary of our present number, was the son of John Mayne, Esq., a gentleman well known in the literary circles of his time; especially by a poem founded on an ancient custom in the town of Dumfries, and called the "Siller Gun," which received the public praise of Sir Walter Scott, in the notes to the fifth canto of the "Lady of the Lake." Mr. W. H. Mayne entered the home establishment of the East-India Company at an early age, and remained a member of it until his decease; his service extending over a period of thirty-six years. His official duties were discharged with that strict conscientiousness which marked every action of his life, while his mild and amiable character won the esteem and affection of all who knew him. No one ever descended to the grave leaving behind him a more unspotted name. He died unmarried; a sister, the companion of his domestic life, being his only surviving relative.

The half-caste people of India (persons of mixed blood, European and native,) are not respected either by the natives or Europeans, generally speaking, on account of their extraction. None of them have been found to be very eminent, and they have seldom risen, except in one or two cases, to much distinction.—Mr. Bird's Evidence before the Lords' Committee.

Political and Military Events in British India, from the Years 1756 to 1849. By MAJOR WILLIAM HOUGH. Two vols. Wm. H. Allen and Co.

THE declared object of Major Hough is "to endeavour to produce a work that may be useful to those entering the service, who may not have the means of referring to the numerous authorities quoted." In this modest object he will be found to have succeeded. He has collected a mass of facts and dates, with copious references to the works from whence they are taken, to which the reader, in search of fuller information, may resort, if he have opportunity.

Notwithstanding all the efforts made to give the appearance of a voluntary withdrawal of our troops from Afghanistan, it produced a very material effect upon our reputation throughout India, and upon the condition of the natives, and the whole inhabitants of India, in our troops.—Sir G. Clerk's Evidence before the Lords' Committee.

When Sir George Arthur, in 1843, made a journey to Sas-soor, to visit the ex-Ameers of Scinde, to see that they were properly accommodated, and to offer them every consolation in his power, Meer Roostum made answer, "Better a bush to sleep under in one's own country, than a palace in a foreign land."

East-India House, 15th December, 1852.

THE COURT of DIRECTORS of the EAST-INDIA COMPANY do hereby give notice,

That a Proprietor of East-India Stock has given notice, that at the Quarterly General Court of the said Company, appointed to be held at their House, in Leadenhall Street, on Wednesday, the 22nd instant, he will submit the following motion, viz.—

"That, in accordance with a principle which obtains at the Royal Military Colleges of Woolwich and Sandhurst, it be recommended to the Honourable the Court of Directors to establish at Addiscombe a graduated scale of payments for Cadets, reducing the charge for the sons of Indian officers proportionably to the ascertained means of parents, provided that the same can be effected without increased charge to the East-India Company."

That another Proprietor has given notice of his intention to submit the two following motions, viz.—

"That copies of the Report of the Commission, which was appointed in 1850-51, by the Governor-General of India, to investigate certain charges against Ali Morad, Ameer of Kyrpoor, in Upper Sind, and of the Minutes thereon by the Indian Governments, also of the Report on Sind by Sir George Clerk, late Governor of Bombay, be laid before the Court of Proprietors."

"That some improved organisation of the survey department in India, and of the mapping office in this country, is urgently called for, for making available to the public, in a more convenient form, and with greater expedition than heretofore, the stores of statistical data and geographical delineations with which, there is reason to believe, the records of Government have been long enriched; also for securing to the public, by means of more systematic and timely publication, the advantages of the surveys still in progress, and of those which may be hereafter undertaken in our own territories, as well as in those of our allies."

That another Proprietor has given notice of his intention to submit the two following motions, viz.—

"That this Court is of opinion that the privilege of election of Directors of the East-India Company should be extended to parties holding Stock of the Government of India."

"That this Court is of opinion that an opportunity should be afforded to the natives of India of being heard by their representatives in the discussions about to take place in Parliament relative to the renewal of the Charter of the East-India Company."

That another Proprietor has given notice of his intention to submit the following motions, viz.—

"That there be laid before this Court such information as the Court of Directors deem proper concerning the conduct or services of Captain Mayflower Crisp, in connection with the present Burmese war."

"That the present crisis in the Company's Government of India affords a favourable occasion for requesting the numerous Clerical Proprietors of India Stock to consider the several appeals made by the Metropolitan in India, and others, concerning the further support of Christianity in India."

"That this Court consider the propriety of having a permanent Chairman of the Company."

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON.

For the Assurance of Lives at Home and Abroad, including Gentlemen engaged in the Military and Naval Services.

DIRECTORS.

SIR HENRY WILLOCK, K.L.S., Chairman.
JOHN STURTEWANT, Esq., Deputy Chairman.
Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Armstrong, C.B., K.C.T., and S.
John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P.
Augustus Bosanquet, Esq.
Charles Dashwood Bruce, Esq.
Ellis Watkin Cunliffe, Esq.
William Kilburn, Esq.

ADVISORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.; William Oxenburgh, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 15th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
30	On or before 15th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50		1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60	1847.	1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

* * * The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

UPPER INDIA RAILWAY COMPANY.—

Additional Capital of £3,000,000.

From the great importance attached by the authorities to the early construction of a line of railroad from Allahabad to Delhi, the Directors of the Upper India Railway Company feel it to be essential to the interests of their shareholders that this Company should at once be placed in a position to tender for the whole line. They have therefore resolved, after mature deliberation, to increase the present capital of the Company from £1,000,000 to £4,000,000. This sum, their engineers assure the Directors, is fully adequate to construct the whole line, and such short branches as may be necessary, as well as to provide the requisite plant.

The additional capital will be raised by an issue of 150,000 shares of £20 each, with a deposit of 2s. on each share. Of these new shares, 75,000 will be allotted pro rata to the holders of scrip, as near as may be in the proportion of three shares of the new issue to every two of the old issue; 50,000 will be reserved for India, and the remaining shares, including any not taken in India, or by the scrip-holders, will be reserved, or disposed of for the interest of the Company, as the Directors may deem advisable.

Applications to be addressed to the Directors, at the offices of the Company, on or before the 24th instant. Present holders of scrip, who desire to avail themselves of the option of having new shares, are requested to forward, with their applications, their scrip, for verification, at the office of the Company, on or before the 24th instant.

Forms of application may be had at the office.

FINE HEAD of HAIR.—Of the numerous compounds

constantly announced for promoting the growth or reproduction of the human hair, few survive, even in name, beyond a very limited period; whilst ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, with a reputation unparalleled, continues on the increase in public estimation; and the successful results of the last half century have proved, beyond question, that it is endowed with singularly nourishing powers in the growth and restoration of the human hair, and when every other known specific has failed.

This celebrated oil is now universally acknowledged to be the cheapest, and superior to all other preparations for the hair. It prevents it from falling off or turning grey to the latest period of existence, strengthens weak hair, produces a thick and luxuriant growth, and makes it beautifully soft, curly, and glossy. In the growth of whiskers, eyebrows, and mustachios, it is unrivalled in its stimulative operation. For children it is especially recommended, as forming the basis of a beautiful head of hair. A small pamphlet accompanies each bottle of Rowland's Macassar Oil, wherein important hints and advice will be found on the culture of the hair of infancy, and on its preservation and beauty through the several stages of human life.

Price 3s. 6d.; 7s.; or family bottles (equal to four small) 10s. 6d.; and double that size, 21s.

CAUTION.—On the wrapper of each bottle are the words, ROWLANDS' MACASSAR OIL, in two lines. The same are engraved on the back of the wrapper nearly 1,500 times, containing 29,628 letters. Sold by A. ROWLAND and SONS, 50, Hatton Garden, London, and by Chemists and Perfumers.

"No emigrant should venture to sea without

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE for SEA-SICKNESS."

Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS

HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The bristles being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2S. EACH.

Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back? Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium," or Handless Hair-Brush.

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches. 2, MIDDLE ROW, HOLBORN.

HOLLOWAY'S PILLS A CERTAIN CURE for

INDIGESTION, FLATULENCY, LIVER and BOWEL COMPLAINTS.—Mr. J. Billing, of Newton, Devon, on a letter to Professor Holloway, dated Dec. 4th, 1833, states that he was afflicted for three years with alarming attacks of indigestion, which produced saturny and diseased liver; and that his bowels were at times so violently affected, as to cause serious apprehensions that his life was in imminent danger. He had recourse to medical advice of high standing, but without avail. At length, being advised to try Holloway's Pills, he did so, and in a very short time they removed all symptoms of disease, and restored him to perfect health.

Sold by all Druggists, and at Professor Holloway's establishment, 244, Strand, London; and by all European and Native vendors of medicine throughout the whole of the East Indies.

SUMMARY AND REVIEW.

FROM Burmah there is actually no intelligence by the present mail; that is, none but what was anticipated, nor even so much. The second division of the force was moving up to Prome. On its way, part of it, amounting to the formidable number of 120, landed, and put to flight a force of 3,000 men, who had, it is said, threatened to burn a town on the coast. The only casualty on our side was one man wounded. The town—Henzadah—is now occupied by us.

Pegu is to be again occupied, and by General Godwin in person. The force assigned to this object consists of 300 Madras and 300 Bengal Fusiliers, 350 of the 5th Madras native infantry, 30 artillerymen, and 60 sappers, with two 24-pound howitzers. The steamers Bentinck, Nerbudda, Damooda, and Mahanuddy, with a barge, a pinnace, and a paddle-box boat of the Royal Navy, afford the means of transit. Beyond these items, there is nothing but accidents and rumours. As a specimen of the former, may be mentioned the blowing-up of a magazine on the 1st November. It was a small one, but in the immediate vicinity of a large one, which, if it had been fired, would have caused destruction among the artillery. It is said to be matter of wonder that such accidents have not occurred before, inasmuch as the Burmese are allowed to smoke when carrying powder or doing any other work. It is suggested that no Burmese should be permitted near a magazine, as it cannot be doubted that there are spies among them, who would be glad of an opportunity of dropping a cheroot in a place where it might be effective to mischief. As to the rumours, one of the approaching resignation of General Godwin seems to excite the most general interest.

The Governor-General, who is at Barrackpore, has not made anything known on the subject of annexation. Consequently, upon this point, our amount of information is just what it was before—that is to say, nothing.

From Calcutta the contribution of news is nil; from Madras the same. At Bombay the case is not much mended; but one article of intelligence is the arrival of the new Commander-in-Chief, Lord Frederick Fitzclarence, who seems likely to enjoy a large measure of popularity. "His lordship's good name," says the Bombay Times, "had travelled before him." On board ship he and his family had won golden opinions from passengers, crew, and all. His lordship was about to start on a tour of inspection which would occupy six months, during which he would visit all the principal stations. Thus the tour of inspection would be really what it professed to be. According to the paper just quoted, a tour of inspection has for some years past meant "a visit to the Mahabuleshwar Hills, where ten men are stationed, or to Poona during the gay season, when the climate is agreeable." Scinde, it is said, has never yet received the honour of a visit from a commander-in-chief, and other parts of the territories subject to the Bombay presidency have not been visited for many years. The Governor has returned to the presidency after an absence of about eight months at the hills. The bishop also has returned, after a similar length of absence in the same salutary regions.

The following from Scinde may as well be submitted in detail, as it appears in the Bombay Times :—

"A wing of the 28th N.I. had arrived by steamers from Hyderabad. The vaccinator and conservator of forests, Dr. Bayne, and his establishment, had left Kurrachee on the 15th on his tour through the districts. The construction of a pier at Ghisree, and another at Kumaree Point, had been sanctioned, as also a pukka road betwixt Kurrachee and Ghisree. The weather was becoming cool and pleasant, and the health of the troops improving; fever still prevailed, but not to anything like the extent it had shortly before done. A wing of the 2nd Grenadier N.I. had arrived on the 17th from Bhooj, and one of the 22nd N.I. from Sukkur—the latter very sickly: both were encamped at the Rambagh. Mr. Frere and General Robertson had returned from Manora Point: the commissioner's departure for the districts had been delayed, owing to the sickness of the season. The 83rd foot, encamped at Clifton, was still very sickly,—nearly three hundred men being convalescents. The 28th N.I. were to leave Hyderabad when relieved by the 6th N.I.: the wing of H.M.'s 64th had been ordered to leave for Kurrachee at once, without waiting for a relief. The recruits for H.M.'s 53rd foot and the wing 2nd Grenadiers were to start for Mooltan and Sukkur by steamers, about the 26th. The commandant and adjutant of artillery had left Kurrachee on a tour of inspection. Very severe sickness prevailed at Kurrachee and its vicinity, and as many as ten a day had been cut off by the prevailing fever."

The paragraph which we next quote, relating to the Nawab of Bahawalpore, is from the Lahore Chronicle. It is thought by a contemporary editor to be "rather obscure." It is submitted for the opinion of our readers. "The commencement of the reign of our new 'ally' of Bahawalpore, Nawab Saadut Yar Khan, is not prosperous. He endeavoured to put to death Sirdar Ahmed Khan Muleezaie, with his troop of 100 suwars; but the resolute bearing of the leader and his men induced the Nawab to withdraw the guns prepared for execution, and to banish the leader, confiscating all his property. The sirdar is on his way to Lahore to complain. Other similar acts are reported, and dissatisfaction is rife in all quarters."

The condition of the Nizam's dominions, it is hardly necessary to state, is nearly as per last. The only change is the resignation of the Resident, General Fraser, which the Indian papers announce on "undoubted authority."

The first steam trip along the railway to Tannah took place on the 18th of November. It was of course only experimental. The rail is expected to be opened in February.

Our wallet of intelligence is not particularly well furnished; but it is our province to record news, not to make it.

BURMAH.

We make the following extracts from a private letter dated at Rangoon, the 2nd inst., and received per Berenice :—

"I can't give you any news about the progress of this war; for nothing particular, that I have heard of, has occurred since I wrote last, except the blowing up of a magazine yesterday morning. I was sitting in my room, and suddenly heard an awful explosion in the direction of the Pagoda. On looking out of my window I observed a column of smoke rising into the air from the lower parapet, outside of the Pagoda. Off I ran to the place, and found that a magazine containing some old condemned ammunition had blown up; two natives were killed. It was most providential that several lives were not lost. The origin of the fire has not been ascertained, but there is no doubt that it was purely accidental. The theatre, which was close to it, caught fire, and was burnt to the ground, but I believe several articles belonging to it were saved. I was told that the flooring gave way, and the boxes of powder, &c., falling, exploded. Again, I heard that a native lascar, the man killed, had been in the habit of keeping a light or small fire under the magazine, which is raised from the ground like all the houses in this country, and that when the floor gave way the powder came in contact with it, and at once ignited, but the true cause can never be ascertained. I am only thankful the damage was not greater.

"Detachments are moving up to Prome, the 2nd division detailed to go there, as I mentioned before. I can form no opinion as to when this war is likely to terminate. The sooner the better say I. We have had no particular news from Prome lately.

"Rangoon is flourishing; some good shops have been established, and every description of article, from the back kitchen to the drawing-room, is to be procured."—Bengal Hawker, Nov. 10.

Our Rangoon diarist continues his records :—

Rangoon, October 29.—It turns out that the Burmese lady whom I took to be the "worse half" of the young, but ponderous, Bundoollah, is in fact the "better half" of the son, or adopted son, of the old governor of Rangoon. All these distinguished Burmese prisoners were brought down in the Proserpine, and this morning they were presented to General Godwin, who quietly directed that the men should be sent on board the Fox, to be detained until further orders, and that the woman should go to her friends, or where she pleased.

The Berenice came in to-day, with invalids from Bassein, as well as with the relieved troops. She made the trip in six days, and had the misfortune to stick upon a number of sandbanks, which, however, was not so bad as her grazing on a rock, which it is said has caused the loss or serious damage of her keel.

By all accounts it is all up with the Enterprise; she is hard and fast, and the Medusa is giving her all possible aid to get off by lightening her; but it is ten to one she will have to bury her rotten bones in the Irrawaddy.

October 30.—The Perse has towed out the Hastings to sea. The former goes to Maulmain, the latter to Madras.

The Hugh Lindsay, having been forestalled in the service she was sent upon by the Berenice, has come back.

The general orders deprive Captain Latter of magisterial authority, which is conferred on Lieut. Ardagh, of the 11th M.N.I., who has come round from Maulmain in the Hugh Lindsay.

October 21.—The Pluto and Mahanuddy, as soon as they receive reinforcements on board, will start, the former to Prome, and the latter for Yang-Ying-Shai.

The Mahanuddy is to return immediately, and as soon as she can do so she will embark a party of European troops, and proceed to Pegu, as fears are entertained of a sudden attack in that quarter.

The apprehensions at the Dagon Pagoda of a sudden attack have not yet died away. The greatest vigilance is used, and strict guard kept at every point, with patrols and picquets, who are constantly on the alert. The natives seem to partake of the lion's share of this apprehension, as every family keeps its own watch during the night, to give the alarm in case of a surprise.

But amid all this vigilance and precaution there is a strange anomaly in the challenge of the sentries. They take very good care that no person in European habit shall go unchallenged, but allow the natives to pass without a question. At the entrance of the Dagon Pagoda there are placed after nightfall no less than a dozen sentries at a distance of a few paces from each other. It is clear that the word of parole given aloud to one must be heard by several of them, but these fellows, all Madras sepoy, are provokingly scrupulous; they must each catechise every individual European that passes in and out, as if all the danger was to be apprehended by persons in unmentionables.

The Hugh Lindsay is to take up her position as guard vessel at Kemmendine.

Nov. 2.—The commodore has started towards Prome in the Proserpine. The object is not known, but it is surmised that the old gentleman has taken a sudden fancy to the Burmese king's steamer, which is supposed to be somewhere at Umcerapoorah, together with sundry other little matters of interest.

The Pegus is ordered to take 400 tons of paddy and rice to Maulmain. By the way, grain is getting very scarce, and unless some unexpected change for the better can be brought about, the masses of the people must be reduced to a state of famine.—Ibid.

KHYOUK PHYO.—A letter of the 31st October informs us that the enemy are collecting in great force near the Aeng Pass, where they have erected a stockade. The 69th N.I. were to start immediately for the pass, and the local battalion had been ordered to move up from Sandaway with all speed. The prevalent belief in Arracan was, that the Burmese were anxious to capture the string of elephants expected to pass through the defile on their way to Prome. It will be some weeks, however, before the elephants reach Aeng, and the plain which stretches from thence to Prome may be meanwhile cleared of anything like an armed force. We have heard, though we do not vouch for the fact, that two officers unattended made their way from Prome to the pass without the smallest molestation.

THE FRAUD AT THE BANK OF BENGAL.

The unfortunate shareholders of the Bank of Bengal have to deplore the loss of one-fourth of the dividend they expected to receive at the beginning of next year. In consequence of the abundance of available capital in the market, and the small scope which was presented for the employment of the funds of the bank, the coming dividend was expected to fall to the low and disheartening level of six per cent., equivalent to above four per cent. on the value of the shares. In these dismal circumstances, there was still one consolation left to the proprietors of its stock, viz. that the dividend never could be lower; but even this source of comfort has now been taken away by a most untoward circumstance. On Wednesday last a native sirdar walked into the bank, and coolly carried off one-fourth of the profits of the present half-year, by means of two forged cheques, which he was enabled to pass off without detection. The fullest and clearest account of this singular transaction is that which appears in the Hurkaru, and will be found among our selections. The bank has thus been robbed of a sum of Rs. 76,000, by as clever an act of fraud as the annals of native roguery in Calcutta can furnish. One of our contemporaries attributes the calamity to the recent appointment of a civilian to the post of secretary. But even if the fraud and the appointment are to be considered in the light of cause and effect, still the election of Mr. Grey was the work of the commercial directors, and not of Government, and they alone are responsible for its consequences. But the assumption is preposterous, unless it can be shown that similar forgeries have never been successfully practised on banks in which the secretary or treasurer was a commercial man, trained up in the craft and mystery of banking. Where all banks are liable to the same misfortune, it is idle to attribute the loss of the Bengal Bank to any such individual cause. Indeed, it would be difficult to point out in what mode the bank would have escaped the present loss if Mr. Bracken or Mr. Hogg had filled the office of secretary. There is no ground for any such charge, unless it can be shown that the civilian secretary, in his utter ignorance of the internal management of a bank, had introduced some new system, which afforded facilities for fraud, that did not previously exist. Everyone, however, knows that no alteration can be made in the mode of conducting the business of this institution without the full concurrence of the directors, two-thirds of whom are always merchants, selected by the proprietary body. If therefore the calamity is to be attributed to a change in the internal economy of the bank, the blame must rest with the commercial directors, not with the covenanted secretary. There is no doubt, however, that the fraud would not have been so successful, but for the recent appointment of one Mr. Moultrie to the duty of stamping and signing the orders for payment. His inexperience led him to overlook the suspicious circumstances connected with the two forged drafts and their presentation, which ought at once to have led to detection; and we cannot avoid the conclusion that those who overlooked the just claims of others of greater experience, and placed him in this important and difficult position, have incurred a very serious responsibility. But it is not to be believed, that such a fraud could have been committed without the collusion of some of the native officials, both in the bank and the treasury. The smallest degree of interruption must have led to a discovery of the fraud. Whatever amount of fraudulent temerity we may allow to the native character, we cannot suppose that an unpractised stranger would walk with confidence into the bank, and run the risk of detection and transportation by so daring an act of deceit, unless he was assured of the friendly assistance of men in these two offices who could carry him safely through the transaction.—Friend to India.

The police have hitherto failed in discovering a trace of the party who presented at the bank the forged cheques, upon which the Rs. 76,000 was paid on Wednesday last. They are actively employed, however, in the search, and have reasonable hopes of succeeding.

The time originally appointed for the execution of the scheme appears to have been the eve of the Doorga Poojah holidays. A month ago, the bank received a written application signed "Pemabboy," the principal member of a Goostratee firm in this place, and a constituent of the bank, for a blank cheque book. This was given without, it seems, any search being made to see whether the last set of cheques issued to Pemabboy had been exhausted, which it is now ascertained it had not been. It is the rule and practice of the bank to register every cheque book that is sent out to a constituent; but it turns out that this particular delivery was not registered, and that the omission is the only one of the kind in the bank books. The official (a native), whose duty it was to make the entry, says he cannot explain this omission except by ascribing it to accident.

Whether it was that the authors of the fraud, or their agents, did not find a sufficient crowd in the bank for their purpose on the eve of the Doorga Poojah holidays, or that they were taken aback at seeing Mr. Cooke resume for that day his former seat in the cheque department, they did not present their cheques until Wednesday last. There were two cheques, one for Rs. 41,000, signed "Pemabboy" in Bengali characters; the other for Rs. 35,000, purporting to bear the signature of another native merchant, also in Bengali. The former was the first of the cheques that were delivered upon a written application a month ago—the latter was the last of the same set. Both were payable to bearer, and not to order, as usual, and both were presented by the same man, a Hindoo sirdar, who was accompanied by two bullock merchants known in the treasury.

The process through which every check has to pass before the order for payment is made is this. One native official writes his initials on the face of the instrument, as a certificate that the drawer has assets sufficient in the bank to meet the draft;—another appends his initials at the foot of the signature of the drawer, and affixes a stamp, to indicate that that signature is genuine. Mr. Cooke (now Mr. Moultrie, his locum tenens) then, looking at these authentications, stamps and signs the order for payment; and the cashier, looking at this order, hands over the amount to the party presenting the cheque.

The cheques in question purport to bear the initials of the two native officials through whose hands, in the regular course, they should have passed before going to Mr. Moultrie, and also the stamp which the second official impresses beside his name; but the officials say that both their initials and the stamp are forgeries. It is certain that the stamp is counterfeit, for, upon examination, it proves to be somewhat larger than the genuine engraving. With these initials and this stamp, the cheques were presented to

Mr. Moultrie. Mr. Cooke says that, had they been taken to him for the order for payment, the first circumstance which would have struck him as strange would be the presentation of cheques from a Gooseeratee house by a Hindoo sircar, the up country merchants invariably sending burkundaues or loll pugreewallahs on such occasions:—the next circumstance which would have attracted his attention would have been that both the cheques, each for so large an amount, were made payable to bearer, and not, as usual, to order. Mr. Moultrie, however, less experienced, only went by what purported to be the initials of the native officials. Never doubting that these were genuine, he signed an order for the payment of both the cheques. The bearer then took the cheques to the cashier, who paid him the amount in notes, without, as he says, asking him any questions. In writing a receipt for the notes, the sircar signed the name "Hurrynarain Chowdry," but the formation of the characters in the two cheques does not assimilate, which would be the case if the man wrote an assumed name that he was not accustomed to sign.

Within half an hour after the payment at the bank, the bullion merchants, who had accompanied the sircar thither, offered these notes in the treasury for 5,000 gold mohurs. So unusual an exchange induced Mr. Walker and Mr. Harvey to inquire into the object of it, upon which the bullion merchants said they wanted the money for a wealthy native who, in fulfilment of some vow, intended to have himself weighed in gold mohurs, and distribute the coin in the way of alms! No other questions were asked, and the gold mohurs were given in exchange for the notes.

The bullion merchants are now in custody. They deny all personal knowledge of the Baboo about whom they spoke in the treasury, and say they joined in the transaction upon the representations of two dullols, or brokers, who had come to them to purchase gold mohurs for the Baboo for the purpose mentioned by them in the treasury.—Hurkaru, Nov. 13,

STUDENTS IN FORT WILLIAM COLLEGE.

The Calcutta Gazette publishes the usual reports on the Examination of the Students of the College of Fort William [I. Mail, p. 699] held in the beginning of July, August, and September last. The number on the list is thirty-one, of whom five have been pronounced qualified for the public service, and are now studying for honours. Of the whole number, sixteen entered the college in the present year; of the remaining fifteen, three have been nearly two years at their studies, and the others from eight to sixteen months.

We have already alluded on more than one occasion to the new rules of qualification for the members of the civil service which Government has introduced within the last eighteen months, and which have been found to work successfully. They provide that the civilians, after leaving the college and entering upon the active duties of the service, shall pass two successive examinations, to test their knowledge of the native language, and of the laws and institutions of Government. It is on the result of these examinations that their immediate prospects in the service are in future to depend. It would be altogether redundant to dwell upon the wisdom of such an arrangement, though it would not be inappropriate to commend the boldness with which it ignores the "degrees" of Haileybury and Fort William Colleges. Every one is aware that the certificate of qualification for the public service granted by the College of Fort William to those who are said to have "passed in two languages," is the broadest farce which has been presented to view since the days when every civilian was obliged to obtain the permission of the Governor-General before he could take to himself a wife. Unfortunately, however, it was also a most mischievous farce. The young gentlemen who were thus sent forth with a patent for governing their fellow-creatures, were unable to comprehend a single sentence addressed to them in the court, or to pronounce any order intelligible to the suitors. But as the examiners in the college had pronounced them qualified for the public service, the Government did not deem it necessary to inquire at any subsequent period of their career, whether they had ever acquired the requisite qualifications or not. Hence, men were to be found presiding in courts, who were unable to utter five words of Bengalee, ten years after the examiners of the college had pronounced them to be fully qualified for the public service by their knowledge of it. All this has now been happily changed, by the new and admirable system of examination recently established, and which is a real and genuine test of qualifications for the efficient discharge of public duty, and not the sham test of Haileybury and Fort William Colleges. Having now, therefore, at the end of half a century hit on the plan for qualifying the civilians, it becomes a duty of paramount importance to adapt the previous philological studies of the students to the new system, instead of maintaining arrangements which have been practically superseded. The prospects of promotion in the service, as we have stated, no longer depend on the certificate of qualification given at either of those institutions, but on the result of the civilian's exertions after quitting them. It is, therefore, not only the plain dictate of common sense, but also a matter of justice to the students, not to permit them to be detained for the prosecution of these studies in a position the most unfavourable for success. By the new arrangement, Government has, in fact, declared that the proper sphere for acquiring a knowledge of the languages of the country as well as of our legal institutions, is the cutcherry, and not the college. Government has been fifty years arriving at this truth; but it is the truth: one month in the court in the midst of the natives, hearing nothing during the day but the vernacular language, and scarcely speaking any other tongue, enables the civilian to make more progress than he did in three, and sometimes six months at the College of Fort William. The period allowed for attendance at that institution ought, therefore, to be at once curtailed, and the civilian sent into the country at the earliest period. It is cruel to his prospects to allow him to continue in an institution where he is only wasting his time and retarding his prospects. When Haileybury was established forty-five years ago, the Court of Directors ordered the period of study in the College of Fort William to be reduced from three years to one. That period has been subsequently enlarged to eighteen months, and out of a tender but misplaced consideration for the most indolent of the students, Government has recently extended it to two years. To those for whom the indulgence has been sanctioned it can be of little use, for they are not a whit more qualified at the end of twenty-four months than they were at the end of six. This is one of the most anomalous and unaccountable concessions to indolence and folly which is to be found in the annals of any government. The time has now arrived for abolishing it.

We have stated that five of the students who have already passed in two languages, and received a certificate of being qualified for the public service, are now studying for honours. We find that they have all passed in these two languages in less than six months after entering the college. Six months, therefore, appear to be the limit which should be allowed the students for remaining in Calcutta, to acquire the rudiments of the native languages, and at the end of this period, every civilian should be drafted into the country, and put to school in the cutcherry,—always excepting those who have passed in two languages within that time, and are anxious to remain in the college, studying for honours, as it is facetiously called, but, in fact, perfecting themselves in the languages. The ablest and most industrious students should thus be allowed the opportunity of obtaining a classical knowledge of the languages of the country, and for this purpose should be permitted to continue in the college. When they once enter on the actual duties of their vocation, the labours of the cutcherry will leave them no leisure for such pursuits. A continuance in the college after six months should be allowed, therefore, only to those who have already made the best use of that time, and are likely to benefit by the opportunity allowed them for further study. All others should be removed from the distractions and the temptations of the metropolis, and of European associations, and sent into the country to complete their studies.—Friend of India.

THE ATTACK ON MR. COURT.

We are glad to learn that several of the ruffians who lately attempted the life of Mr. Court, joint-magistrate of Budaon, are in the hands of justice. They were recognised by the bearers and musalchee (the latter of whom was wounded on the head by one of the gang), and on examination of some of their houses, swords of the kind with which Mr. Court was attacked were found there. These swords are straight, and not like the common tulwars; a very material circumstance. It is doubted whether the men can be convicted on the mere testimony of the bearers, and searching inquiries are being made for more evidence. It is supposed that the recent imprisonment of a considerable landholder in the Shah-jehanpore district may have had something to do with the attempt to murder Mr. Court.

We are glad to hear that the wounded gentleman is doing well at Shah-jehanpore under the hands of Dr. Smith. Our correspondent says,—“He has lost the second and third fingers of his left hand, and has only a stump of the little finger left. Dr. Smith hopes to be able to save the forefinger. He had to extract the knuckle-bones of the two fingers, which was a very painful operation, though chloroform was administered. Independently of the above, Mr. Court has two deep cuts on the palm of his left hand, several cuts on his legs, and numerous bruises as if from blows of a stick; so the object of the ruffians could have been nothing but murder.”

Another correspondent writes,—

“A few days before Court left he had a case of ill-treatment and ill-usage against a very respectable and large landholder of

Umeerpore, who had, it appears, been attempting to deprive the other sharers of the village of their rights; they consequently had lodged a complaint against him, and after the case had been tried and proved, he was sentenced by Court to six months' imprisonment, &c. &c., and this was resented by his relatives. This case was decided a day or two before Court left. He left Shahjehanpore on the afternoon of the 31st ult., and had got four or five miles this side of Tilihur, when all of a sudden his palkee was dropped. The musalchee was wounded in the head for not putting the light out, and then his palkee was first of all battered with lattes, and several thrusts of a sword made by the ruffians outside. Court got out on hearing all the noise, and in warding off a blow aimed at his head, got his left hand severely cut,—the three last fingers were all but cut off, and he was also wounded on the palm of the hand. He then attempted to escape (having no weapons of any kind—not even a stick), but was pursued, and wounded again in both legs, but not so severely as to check his progress altogether. Seeing that Court still continued to get off, they aimed a blow at his head, but which struck him on the shoulder: he then fell down, and his hat (a white one) fell off. This the assailants mistaking for his head, made off themselves; and the kahars of the palkee, together with other people, coming to the spot, conveyed Court to the Thana at Kutra, a few miles off, and then at the dispensary he got his wounds dressed, until the doctor from Shahjehanpore could come out. Barnes and Currie came out immediately on hearing of the affair, and then Court was taken back to Shahjehanpore. He has since been obliged to have the two middle fingers of his left hand taken out at the knuckles. By the last account, which we received from Mrs. Court herself direct, he was doing as well as could be expected, and said he hoped to be able to return to Budaon by the 20th instant.

"This is proved now beyond all doubt to have been a most deliberate and premeditated attack, and no dacoites for the sake of property, for Court had nothing with him, and even the few rupees that fell out of his pocket, at the time of the attack, were found some hours after on the spot.

"A reward of Rs. 5000 has been offered by Government, and I hear there is every chance of the case being fully proved against the ruffians.

"The assailants are Pathans of, and about, Umeerpore; and a number of them have been apprehended. Court, I understand, has recognised one, and the kahars say they can identify seven men. The inquiry is going on at Shahjehanpore, and I sincerely hope may result in the full conviction of the blackguards."

We say amen to the hope.—Delhi Gazette, Nov. 13.

THE BENGAL COAL COMPANY.

The annual meeting of the above company was held on Wednesday at noon.

Mr. H. W. Abbott was in the chair.

The following was the report of the directors submitted to the meeting:—

"The total quantity of coal brought down has exceeded that of any former season, being in all 17,95,000 maunds. The profit on the season's operations is Rs. 1,50,999-13, from which we recommend a dividend of Rs. 60 per share to be declared payable as usual on the 1st of January.

"The surplus on the usual valuation of stock now amounts to Rs. 3,14,110-11-4, which would be reduced by the proposed dividend to Rs. 2,39,392-11-4, thus giving us, with the increased capital, a working fund of Rs. 2,89,392-11-4; and we would recommend that an account be opened for such working capital, to which Rs. 2,50,000 of the above surplus should be carried, and that the same should be gradually increased to three lacs. We would also recommend that the reserved dividend be paid off, and that it cease to bear interest after 1st March next.

"The deliveries of coal for the past year have been good, and our engagements for deliveries during the present season, both up-country and in Calcutta, are satisfactory.

"As directed at last meeting, we have taken steps to have the company registered under the Act No. 43, of 1850; and as for this purpose our present deed required considerable alterations, we have taken advantage of the opportunity thus afforded to revise the deed thoroughly. The new deed will be submitted to you as early as possible; but the alterations proposed in it from the former one will require to be approved and confirmed by a second meeting."

The following were the resolutions moved and adopted:—

"1st. That the report of the directors now read be approved and adopted.

"2nd. That the accounts as audited be passed as correct and satisfactory, and the books be closed accordingly.

"3rd. That a dividend at the rate of sixty rupees per share, or six per cent., be now declared payable on the 1st of January next, and that the reserved dividend be paid off at the same time.

"4th. That an account be opened in the books of the company, to be called Working Capital Account, to the credit of which 25,000 rupees be carried, as recommended in the directors' report.

"5th. That the thanks of the meeting be given to the directors, and that they be requested to continue their services.

"6th. That the remuneration be increased to ten gold mohurs for each monthly meeting, to be divided among those who attend."

The meeting was now declared special, pursuant to advertisement, and it was unanimously resolved—

"That the company be registered according to the provisions of Act 43 of 1844."

The meeting then separated, voting thanks to the chairman.—Bengal Hurkaru, Nov. 11.

THE BENGAL MARINE.

We are glad to observe that there is at length some prospect of the officers of the Bengal marine obtaining the reforms in the constitution of their service which they have so long desired, and which the altered circumstances of the times render so necessary. According to the Hurkaru of the 6th instant, a proposal is now before the Government for assimilating the Bengal marine to the Indian navy, and there is every probability that it will be referred to the Court of Directors, with a strong recommendation in its favour. At present, the position of the service is altogether anomalous. It has grown up, as it were, fortuitously, without much fostering from the authorities, and with as little of regular system as it was possible to exist withal. As the value and extent of our provinces on the sea-board has increased, and the importance of steam as a means of uniting them to the central authority has become more fully recognised, the Bengal marine has been gradually enlarged, until it has become a most efficient arm, and a regular department of the state. Gradually, also, the development of circumstances has changed a force originally intended chiefly for intercommunication, into a war navy, and its officers have been called upon to exhibit their courage and ability on almost every coast in Southern Asia. At the same time, partly from the accidental character of its increase, and partly from the practical difficulties which exist in the way of effecting a reform, it has been allowed to remain destitute of that rigid system of control and management, which is indispensable to the perfect efficiency of a fleet supported by a government. The officers are members of no service, and liable to no punishment for failure in their duty except dismissal. There is no regular system of promotion, though the claims of seniority have generally been allowed, and among themselves there is no further subordination than what can be secured by the fact, that they are all alike the paid servants of one government. The officers, moreover, are under all the disadvantages of an uncovenanted service. They have neither privileges nor rank, and though their allowances while actually employed are not inadequate, at least in the higher grades, they have nothing to look forward to at the close of a long and laborious career, except a pension which they are explicitly informed is bestowed as a matter of favour, and not of right. The authority which they ought to possess in their own ships, is diminished by the fact, that in the eye of the law they are simply the skippers of merchant vessels, and the very uniform they wear is allowed them only by sufferance and courtesy.

In time of peace all these inconveniences are felt chiefly by the members of the service, and only act on the Government indirectly by deterring the best men from their employ, for as long as their duties are performed without reference to each other, and merely in obedience to the orders of Government, questions of rank are of comparatively little importance. The senior officers, too, are generally experienced men, who are but little likely to encounter insubordination on board, and with an obedient Lascar crew, even the absence of martial discipline is time of war. Then the steamers, which have been engaged for months in carrying mails to ports on the coast, or bringing troops to the presidency on an "emergent indent," or at best in scouring some wild river of the Eastern Archipelago after a runaway pirate, are all at once transformed into vessels of war. The obedient Lascar crew, useful for pulling ropes, and eating dul, is supplanted by a hundred or more European sailors, swept up from every corner of Calcutta, with whom the officers are expected to perform all that is ever demanded of the most perfectly equipped war steamers. Their powers, however, have not been increased by the change of circumstances. They have exactly the same authority over their men, that the master of a merchantman has over his crew, and have in fact no power whatever except what they can derive from their own characters. The only difference which war makes to them is to treble their responsibilities, and in many cases greatly diminish their emoluments.

That under such unpropitious circumstances they should have proved themselves as efficient as the Indian or the Queen's Navy, is another instance of the degree to which individual character can overcome obstacles apparently insuperable.

It is true that in the present war, the evil of want of authority has been but little felt, and the European sailors have fought as well under officers of the Bengal Marine, as under the tautest captain in her Majesty's service. Moreover, at Rangoon and on the Irrawaddy, the men pass under martial law, and we have heard of one or two cases in which it has been absolutely necessary to employ it. But evils of another class have arisen, which owe their origin solely to the defective constitution of the service. The officers of the Bengal marine, whose steamers are peculiarly adapted for river service, and who really performed a very considerable share of the work on the Irrawaddy, found themselves too frequently set aside and practically superseded by younger officers, and the credit of their achievements in some instances given to others. This circumstance, aggravated perhaps by the appearance of almost contemptuous superiority with which they occasionally saw or fancied themselves regarded, produced a bitterness of feeling, which more than once might have led to serious results. This bitterness of course reacts, and it is said even the commodore has occasionally found occasion to interfere.

We will not allude to more serious cases, but a story reached us some time since from Rangoon, which may furnish a whimsical illustration of our meaning. An officer of H.M.'s navy passing one of the smaller steamers, hailed to ask if "Mr. Blank was on board." The officer in command, who felt like all sailors, exceedingly sensitive in regard to his rank, remonstrated with his superior for what he considered a studied insult. "He had," he said, "a European crew on board whom he had to keep in order with very insufficient means, and every instance of personal disrespect increased tenfold the difficulty of his task." His superior retorted that he had employed the designation which belonged to him, and he should use no other. Captain Blank could not of course carry on the contest, but the next time he appeared before the commodore, it was in a straight jacket, and a long beard. The commodore appeared at first inclined to consider this costume a piece of impertinence to himself; but when he heard the story, and Captain Blank's argument that if he were only a landsman his dress ought to correspond, the kind-hearted old man, after a few words in support of his officer's right to use the offensive term, turned the conversation. The anecdote may seem trifling enough in itself, but such scenes do not improve the efficiency of either party, and the "inferior" service is not likely under such circumstances to feel a pleasure in doing more than its duty.

It is high time that all this should cease. There may exist practical difficulties in the way of amalgamating the Bengal Marine with the Indian Navy, but the obstacles to the plan of constituting it a separate service, ranking on the same scale as its more fortunate rival, appear to be very few. The question of expense is probably the only one at which the Court of Directors will demur, and the change will not only attract into the service men at least equal to those who now belong to it, but it will prevent any lowering of its character by injudicious appointments. The officers will then have the satisfaction of feeling that if they have the responsibility of a war navy, they have also its privileges, and the permanent rank conferred on them will at once correct the slight "slovenliness," which is perhaps the only charge brought against them by their opponents, which rests on more than the shadow of a foundation.—Friend of India.

CUSTOM-HOUSE AT THE HOWRAH TERMINUS OF THE RAILWAY.

The Hurkaru of Friday last informs us, that the consulting engineer of Government has submitted a question regarding the allotment of the ground purchased for the railway terminus at Howrah. He argues that the establishment of railways in the interior will bring down the produce of the country by the trains, and he therefore suggests that it would not only facilitate exportation, but prove a great saving to the merchants, if the goods could be at once shipped from Howrah, and he inquires whether Government is desirous of securing any site for a custom-house. The Hurkaru considers the consulting engineer entitled to the special thanks of the commercial community for the forethought evinced on this occasion. He then informs us that the matter has been referred to the Government of Bengal, and that the opinion of the Chamber of Commerce will be sought on this subject. To us it appears somewhat singular, that so much fuss should be made about a measure of such palpable necessity, and which was disposed of, we believe, by the Press many months ago, after it had been determined to establish the terminus at Howrah. It was then shown that vessels from England with a large portion of their cargo, intended for marts in the North-West Provinces, would find it more convenient to land their consignments at Howrah than on the Calcutta side of the river, and that the erection of a branch custom-house would hence become a matter of obvious and absolute necessity. It is understood that it was partly with a view to this object, as well as to the expansion of traffic, as the railroad extended from station to station, in the upper portion of this presidency, that so large an area has been secured at the terminus, beyond the present exigencies of the rail. The necessity of any immediate reference to Government on this subject, or to that active and enlightened body the Chamber of Commerce, is not apparent. No custom-house will be required until the rail shall have reached one of the great marts of commerce in the Upper Provinces; and if future progress is to be measured by the past, it cannot under any circumstances be required for the next five or six years to come. This premature agitation of the question appears the less necessary because the ground for the new custom-house is already in possession of the railway company, and there is apparently no intention to alienate it for any other purpose. The idea appears simply ludicrous of asking the Chamber of Commerce, whether a custom-house at Howrah would be advisable when traffic, to the extent of crores of rupees, was likely to pass annually from thence to Mirzapore, and back again.—Friend of India, Nov. 18.

THE DELHI BANK.

Proceedings of an adjourned Extraordinary General Meeting of Shareholders of the Delhi Bank, held at Delhi on Saturday, the 20th November, 1852.

Mr. E. Roberts having been requested to take the chair, the Secretary read the advertisement calling the original meeting, the proceedings of the extraordinary general meeting held on the 15th October, and the circular of the directors to the shareholders, dated 5th July last; and the plan for the future management of the bank, as recommended by the directors, was duly proposed, viz. :—

That the bank continue to work independently, under a paid management, as follows :—

A manager, upon a salary of Co.'s Rs. 1,000 per mensem, who must lodge approved tangible security to the extent of one lac of rupees.

A deputy manager and secretary, upon a salary of Co.'s Rs. 700 per mensem, he furnishing security to the amount of Co.'s Rs. 70,000.

A sub-deputy manager and accountant, upon a salary of Co.'s Rs. 500 per mensem, who must lodge security to the extent of Co.'s Rs. 50,000.

That the appointment and dismissal of these officers be vested in a majority of the trustees, and that the managers be required to sign a bond not to resign their appointments without giving six months' notice to the trustees of their intention; also to declare themselves free from all mercantile and other business or occupation, and bound to devote their whole time and thoughts exclusively to the bank's interests.

That the managers be ineligible to borrow from, become security for, or have any account or transaction with the bank, of which they are servants.

That the accounts of the bank be audited every six months by two well-qualified persons, totally unconnected with the bank, and their report be published with the half-yearly accounts for general information, and that it consist not merely of the simple examination of accounts and verification of securities, but embrace a statement and report upon the new business taken up during the half-year, and also that which has been offered and declined by the management.

That the appointment of auditors rest with the trustees, or with the half-yearly general meeting of shareholders, and, if practicable, that the same parties be not employed on two consecutive occasions.

That in addition to the present number of trustees, other influential proprietors be solicited to undertake the office, and that one or more residents of Delhi be of the number.

That every shareholder have the right to examine the books and accounts of the bank, and to receive full information of the state of its affairs when demanded.

The votes received were then inspected, and found to stand as follows :—

265 for, and 25 against, being a majority of 240 votes in favour of the measure; of the majority shown, however, twenty votes were given for the measure conditionally, that a junction with the Agra and United Service Bank could not be effected; but the majority being so great in favour of the plan recommended by the directors, those twenty votes have been included as voting for the measure, and it was thereupon resolved, that a special general meeting of shareholders be convened for Wednesday the 5th January, 1853, for confirmation of the proceedings of this meeting, in view of carrying the same into effect when necessary.

The meeting closed with a vote of thanks to the chairman.

THE PUNJAB ADMINISTRATION.

Some weeks ago we had occasion to describe the new system for the administration of civil justice, which has just been introduced by the Board of Administration into the Punjab. It is distinguished from the system of civil judicature which we have been elaborating for half a century in both sections of the presidency, by its simplicity, and by the absence of all quirks, quibbles, and technicalities. Since the publication of our last article, we have received further information on the subject, which tends to confirm the conviction of its being more suited to the character and wants of a simple people like those who inhabit the Punjab, than the artificial system which prevails in the older provinces. It has also the further recommendation of having given satisfaction to those for whom it was designed. The principle on which it is based, of confronting the two parties, the debtor and creditor, and taking down their depositions from their own lips, is felt to be highly conducive to the great object for which civil courts are established, that of bringing every dispute to an immediate and satisfactory issue, with the smallest sacrifice of time and money. The people are delighted with the opportunity of being brought before the ruler himself, and saying their say; and if they lose their cause, they have the satisfaction of knowing that they have been heard. It is certain that more substantial justice is done between man and man under this simple and expeditious system, than under the more elaborate one which exists in Bengal and the north-west provinces. It is found, moreover, that when the parties are thus confronted with each other, 34 per cent. of the cases instituted are at once compromised.

The rules to which we referred in our former article, were extended to the whole of the Punjab only in April of the present year, but the tehsildars were invested with judicial powers in the Lahore division in the year 1850, and their agency has been largely employed in the decision of suits. In the district of Umritsur, which is under the direction of one of the most efficient officers in the Punjab, Mr. Saunders, the deputy-commissioner, says that these native judges have been found so useful, that in the course of a twelvemonth no fewer than 5,429 suits have been disposed of, chiefly through their instrumentality, and that the average duration of each was only ten days. From these decisions there were 156 appeals, of which 102 were confirmed, 23 modified, 18 reversed, 2 withdrawn, and 11 remained undecided at the close of the year. The multiplicity of cases in the district of Umritsur is to be attributed to its peculiar character; it is a most populous and thriving district, the great commercial mart of the province, and the centre of trade and business.—Friend of India.

MILITARY FUND.

We yesterday briefly acknowledged the receipt of a report on the accounts of the Military Fund, and we now proceed to notice this somewhat important document more at length. The sub-committee, by which it has been drawn up, was appointed at a special meeting of directors on the 5th of August last, and consisted of Major H. P. Burn, Captain E. L. Ommamney, and Captain O. Cavanagh. The duty prescribed to it was to examine the accounts of the office establishment, and to determine what amount was actually necessary to place the establishment on an efficient footing; and further to take into consideration the objections made to the accounts at the special meeting held at the Town Hall on the 9th of July, and to determine whether those accounts cannot be made out in a clearer form.

The sub-committee now reports, with considerable minuteness of detail, the result of its inquiries. With regard to the office establishment, the opinion is recorded that it requires no increase of numerical strength. Indeed it is deemed safe and expedient to retrench one of the five ledger-keepers, at a saving of Rs. 25 a month. A pension of five rupees, which apparently ought never to have been granted, is cut down to one-half. On the other hand, it is recommended that ten rupees be added to the pay of the head writer, and five to that of the second. The establishment as at present existing costs Rs. 888 a month; as revised by the committee, it will draw only Rs. 875.

Having disposed of this comparatively trifling matter, the sub-committee take up Col. Sage's criticisms on the accounts for the year ending 31st December, 1851, made at a special meeting on the 19th July last. These objections, which were supported by signed statements, which we published at the time, are embodied in the following:—

"Memo.—The object sought in giving to the officiating secretary to the Military Fund the statement contrasting the receipts and expenditure of the Military Fund for the last ten years, as given to the army in Statement No. 9 of the 22nd of January, 1852, and again in Circular No. 16 of the 26th of May, 1852, was full explanation of the yearly discrepancies which that statement exhibits in the amount of receipts and disbursements, while the balance for nine of those years remains the same, or very nearly the same, in both statements, although the difference in 1849 amounts to the sum of Rs. 6,49,107-0-0, fractions omitted.

"In like manner the statement taken from Circular No. 16, of the 26th of May, 1852, was given to elicit the fullest explanation on the following points:—

"In 1851, with an increase of forty-five subscribers, and a decrease of ten pensioners, the expenditure exceeded the receipts by Rs. 89,028-4-2, according to the showing of the officiating secretary, although in preceding years, with a considerable and gradual increase of pensioners, the receipts had more than covered the expenditure, leaving considerable balances to the credit of the fund.

"Of the ten years' expenditure, only thirty-nine quarters are exhibited; but the whole receipts of the forty quarters are carried to account; and it follows that if an equivalent sum is due for the last quarter, to those expended for the four quarters charged in 1851, the excess of expenditure over receipts is not Rs. 39,028-4-2, as represented by the directors, but Rs. 3,48,708-0-0, fractions omitted.

"If the above exhibited expenditure is a reality, and not likely to diminish, an increase to the subscriptions becomes an imperative necessity; but I will hope that so large an increased expenditure, without any immediate visible cause, may be found on a searching examination to be erroneous.

(Signed)

"WM. SAGE, Lieut.-colonel.

"July 20th, 1852."

"The remarkable discrepancies exhibited in Col. Sage's comparison of the two statements of receipts and disbursements rendered in January and May, are by the sub-committee, as by the officiating secretary at the time, attributed to an alteration in the rate of exchange in making out the accounts for the last year, the home payments and receipts having been converted at 2s. 6d. per rupee, instead of as formerly at 1s. 11d. This, though it will apparently alter the relation of receipts and disbursements, would not affect the balance of the year; and as the committee observe, these coincide in the two statements throughout the ten years reported on, except as to 1842 and 1843, the discrepancies in which arose from an error explained in the report by a figured memorandum from the officiating secretary. The yet more startling differences observable in the statements as to the accounts of receipt and disbursement in 1849 and 1850, are ascribed to an omission of Rs. 6,30,795-12-4 in the former year, and of Rs. 4,25,718-8-7 in the latter, to correct a manifest and very gross mistake made in drawing up the yearly statements, the home payments being twice entered on the credit side of the account. We suppose this explanation must be regarded as satisfactory, though the state of affairs which these errors indicate can hardly be considered so.

Colonel Sage's other objections are dealt with in the following paragraphs of the report, which we need not attempt to explain:—

"The increase of forty-five subscribers noted by Colonel Sage, has, as will be seen by the accounts, increased our income. In 1850 we received Rs. 11,48,833-4-9, and in 1851 our receipts were Rs. 11,99,609-3-7, or Rs. 50,865-14-10 more than we had received in the preceding year. The decrease of ten pensioners in 1851 could in no way affect the disbursements given in our statement of actual payments made during that year, as the home payments are only charged to the 30th June, 1850; and, moreover, of the sixteen unaccounted-for widows removed from our books in 1851, whose removal caused the decrease, not one had drawn her pension since 1847. All this is clearly shown in the Annual Statement.

In the table in Circular No. 16, exhibiting the amount of pensions paid to our widows during the last ten years, thirty-nine quarters' pension only is accounted for, that being the actual payment made by the fund, and charged in the accounts for those ten years. Instead of the last quarter's pension alone being due, as supposed by Colonel Sage, we owe, and have still to charge in our accounts for the six quarters ending the 31st of December, 1851, which have been advanced for us, in Europe by the company. This is also shown in the annual statement for last year.

Your committee nowhere see that the directors "represented the excess of expenditure over receipts as 39,028-4-2 instead of Rs. 348,708-0-0, fractions omitted." The balance sheet of our annual statement shows the actual receipts and disbursements of the year, and does not attempt to show the real state of the fund

This is shown in the "estimated state of the fund, where the pensions due on the 31st of December, 1851, but not yet charged in our accounts, are set down at twelve lakhs and odd thousand rupees. Of this estimated state of the fund we shall have to speak hereafter."

The sub-committee then proceed to examine the several charges in the accounts for 1851, item by item. And first of the "pensions to widows;"—a statement is given showing that the amount charged is less than that due to the 511 widows then on the list, and that hence there could be no overcharge under that head.

The items of "passage-money to widows," "passage-money to officers, outfit allowance, and income to subscribers," can be checked, the committee say, by the subscribers themselves.

The "home agent's charges" and "office charges" are pronounced correct.

In the matter of "interest" the sub-committee has made a somewhat important discovery,—that the fund has erroneously paid to Government in the last twenty years a sum of Rs. 6,38,019-7-5, to which the Government had no claim! On the establishment of the fund upon its present footing in 1824, all advances made by the East-India Company in England were drawn for on the directors of the fund in India at 2s. 4d. the sicca rupee, and these drafts were, as it appears, payable with interest at five per cent. from the date of the advance to that of payment. In 1832 the Company altered the rate of exchange, and ordered that all future advances should be taken at 1s. 11d. the sicca rupee, repayable in India at twelve months' date. As the advances were usually repaid before the expiry of this term, of course no interest could in ordinary cases be due, yet the Treasury continued the old system of charging five per cent. from the date of advance, and does so still. The sub-committee believe that the greater part of the six lakhs and odd thousands thus overpaid is "doubtless recoverable," and as the money would evidently be very useful to the fund just now, we trust an appeal to the justice and honesty of John Company will not be in vain.

The intricate subject of "exchanges" is discussed at some length; but we need not go into it further than to say that the committee very sensibly recommend an application to the Court of Directors to abolish the sicca rupee from the fund's accounts, and to give to the Bengal institution the same exchange which they allow to Madras and Bombay, 2s. 3d. the current rupee.

The sub-committee give a melancholy picture of the financial state and prospects of the fund. "Our existing liabilities," they say, "exceed our assets by thirty-two lakhs, fifty-five thousand, six hundred and twenty-seven rupees, seven annas, and eight pie, and our income is below our expenditure." In such a state of affairs they "see no prospect of providing for the contingent pensions of existing wives without a considerable addition to the rates of donation and subscription, and they would propose an immediate increase of both somewhat similar to that proposed in December, 1844, and agreed to by a very large majority of subscribers." They also urge the necessity and justice of reducing the pensions of all widows above the grade of captain to the rates allowed to widows of those grades at the other presidencies.

Finally, after recommending greater simplicity in the system of accounts, the sub-committee conclude with a reference to the present anomalous state in which the directors of the fund have been left by a recent decision of the army. Their term of office ceased on the 31st December last, yet they are still acting at the request of the last general annual meeting. The reason of their retention in office appears to be that nobody else at the presidency will accept the thankless and unpopular appointment. In filling up former vacancies, out of 147 subscribers asked to serve, only three consented to do so, and they are all now directors. Verily the state of the fund demands immediate and earnest attention to arrest that ruin which seems to be impending. In the mean time the subscribers owe their best thanks to Major Burn and Capt. Ommoney and Cavanagh, for this careful and important though not very gratifying report.—Hurkaru, Nov. 18.

THE EXPRESS, with news from London to Oct. 8, arrived at Delhi Nov. 12, and at Calcutta on Nov. 15.

LEGISLATIVE ENACTMENT.—The Gazette of Nov. 8 contains the draft of "An Act for the Amendment of Procedure in Cases of Appeal to the Sudder Courts in the Presidency of Fort William in Bengal." This proposed enactment is designed, according to the preamble, to simplify and shorten the procedure and modes of pleading in regular appeals to the Sudder Dewanny Adawlut. It begins by repealing Act IV. of 1850, and Sections I., III., and IV. of Act XXX. of 1850, and then prescribes the modus operandi to be followed in appeals. It seems a promising measure of law reform, likely to fulfil the purposes for which it is designed.

THE CIVIL SERVICE.—Mr. Palmer, of the Bengal civil service, just returned from the Cape, resumes to-day the office of Abkaree commissioner of the Calcutta division, and Mr. Reid, who has been acting during the absence of Mr. Palmer, proceeds on leave for one month, after which he will rejoin his regular appointment. The Abkaree department in the lower circle will, therefore, for another year continue under the immediate control of the commissioner; but it has been decided that after Mr. Palmer's resigning the civil service the excise will be placed under the revenue commissioners, and upon the same footing as we have lately mentioned has been the case in the Dacca division. We understand that Mr. Dunbar is expected to return from the Cape in the course of this month, and that Mr. Mytton will therefore have to vacate his appointment of officiating judge at the Sudder Dewanny. As the commissionerships of Dacca and Chittagong have been filled up by puckab nominations, the return of Mr. Dunbar would be somewhat inopportune, were it not that Mr. Mytton intended resigning the service in March, which, under the present circumstances, we are told, he will do at once.

CONVERSION OF A HINDU LADY.—We extract the following from the Christian Advocate of Saturday last:—"We have received from the best source some information of a remarkable kind respecting a lady of the Tagore family, who is now awaiting a fitting opportunity to make a public profession of Christianity. When very young, she became a widow; a Benagli Bible was given to her by the late wife of Baba G. M. Tagore, which has proved the means of her conversion to Christianity. Any further remarks at present would be premature; this, however, we may say, that when such cases begin to occur in Hindu society, we may hope that the day of India's redemption draweth nigh." This is a remarkable illustration of the power of the Scriptures when read in the right spirit. We have heard further, that the lady, who is a grand-daughter of Baboo Chunder Coomar Tagore, has steadfastly resisted many temptations, pecuniary and otherwise, held out with a view to prevent her renouncing the faith of her ancestors.—Hurkaru, Nov. 8.

FREE TRADE.—Some of those who feared that the introduction of the free-trade principle in navigation would throw the carrying traffic betwixt England and India into the hands of the Yankees, will perhaps be agreeably surprised to learn, that in consequence of the scarcity of American tonnage at Calcutta just now, two English vessels, the Shand and the George Kendall, have been chartered to take cargoes to Boston. Not fewer than eighteen ships are expected to arrive there within a short time from the Straits and China.

UMBALLA.—We are glad to find by letters from Umballa that the station is returning to a state of healthiness. All enclosures are rigidly kept down to four feet in height, and all foliage is being thinned as far as it can be done without causing absolute inconvenience to individuals; this of itself will do much towards general salubrity. Our correspondent adds that as the state of the roads is at its possible worst after the late floods, some hope may be reasonably entertained that a repair will be undertaken by Government. "And they say hopes of amendment may be taken at a high figure where great men suffer, and our evil ways may probably be amended, as I hear that the brigadier was most soberly upset out of his buggy when returning from a party." General Godwin is reported to have given instructions for the sale of his furniture and abandonment of the property he had rented, and our correspondent thinks this looks like the prospect of a protracted residence at Burmah.—Hurkaru.

LIEUT. TOTTENHAM, 7TH LT. CAV., who continues under arrest at Peshawar, is, we are told, to be brought before a second general court-martial, on a new set of charges.—Lahore Chron.

THE UNION BANK.—The case of J. W. Fulton v. The Union Bank, which has occupied the Supreme Court during a portion of the last three days, arises out of a transaction in August, 1847, a few months before the bank's failure. Mr. Fulton, on leaving India in that month, placed various securities in the hands of Mr. W. P. Grant as his agent, and (amongst other property) certain company's paper of the value of nearly Rs. 50,000, with authority to lend them to a certain association formed for the purchase of Union Bank shares upon specified terms,—which association was represented by Grant to Mr. Fulton as consisting of eight individuals. It seems that the association, in fact, consisted of only six,—of whom Mr. Grant was himself one. Mr. Grant held a general power of attorney from Mr. Fulton, and under this power endorsed the company's paper to the secretary of the Union Bank, sending him at the same time a letter directing him to raise money upon the paper, and place the proceeds to an account opened by the bank with the six, which account was at the time much overdrawn. This was accordingly done. The letter from Mr. Grant to the secretary misstated the terms of the loan really authorised by Mr. Fulton; and the secretary, Mr. Abbott, was misled by the statement. No mala fides was imputed to anybody, but the bill sought to charge the bank as having constructive notice of Mr. Grant's breach of trust,—the letter from him to Mr. Abbott being calculated, it was contended, to put the bank upon further inquiry. The court has taken time to consider its judgment. When the decision is pronounced we shall publish a full report of the case. It is understood that there will be an appeal to the Privy Council, whichever way the decision is given. Hurkaru, Nov. 15.

THE INFANTRY OF THE GUIDE CORPS marched, on the 3rd of November, from Aboozain towards Hazara, under the charge of their new commandant, Lieut. W. S. Hodson. Lieut. Turner and Dr. Lyell accompanied the detachment.—We are glad to hear that there is some improvement in the sanitary condition of the troops stationed at Peshawur, and although the number of sick Europeans is much the same, there is said to be an improvement in their appearance. The native sick have certainly decreased in number. There were 700 men in hospital on the 1st of November, at Peshawur itself, and about 300 at the several outposts. Nine European soldiers died in the week ending 1st November, and ten during the previous week. Altogether H.M.'s 22nd regiment lost fifteen men in October, and H.M.'s 53rd, fourteen.—We regret to learn that Brigadier Carnegie, who has recently assumed command of the station, is suffering from indisposition.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 10.

ORDERS WERE ISSUED, AT RAWUL PINDEE, on the 5th of November, for a wing of H.M.'s 22nd regiment, and the remaining four guns of Major Fitzgerald's troop of horse-artillery, to hold themselves in readiness for immediate service in Hazara, whenever required. The wing to be made up to 400 rank and file. These preparations are in anticipation of the sanction of Government to a move against the Husunzaia tribe.—Ibid.

THE 3RD REGIMENT NATIVE INFANTRY, and the 9th Irregular Cavalry, ordered on from Jelam, to take the place of the Kelat-i-Ghilzai regiment, and of the 16th Irregulars, gone on to Puklee, marched into Rawul Pindie on the 4th instant, and went into the lines of the regiments they have temporarily relieved at that station.—Ibid.

THE 66TH GOORKHAS, at Peshawur, had been ordered to hold themselves in readiness to move from that station, in case their services should be required across the Indus, in the course of the possible operations against the Husunzaia.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 13.

THE KHAGUR CHIEF, SAUD ZUMAN KHAN, has refused to obey a second and peremptory requisition, forwarded to him by Major Abbott, deputy commissioner in Hazara, to appear before him, and formally tender his submission to the British Government. It is therefore probable that force will have to be resorted to, unless the recusant should consider it dignified to refuse to obey the summons of the district officer, and to surrender only on the receipt of a communication, which has, it is asserted, been forwarded to him direct from the Board of Administration. The two regiments pushed on from Rawul Pindie were, on the 7th of November, encamped at Gandee, in the Puklee valley, at no great distance from the borders of the Khagur district, therefore ready for any movement they may be required to make.—Ibid.

AN ORDER has been received by Capt. Repton's corps, the 3rd regt. Sikh Local Infantry, to march from Hoosheerpoor to the north-west. They would have been by this at Wuzerabad, had they been relieved, as proposed, by a corps of the line. Their destination is Hazara. Another Punjabee corps (perhaps the Guides) is mentioned by a correspondent as having crossed the Indus on the way to Hazara a few days ago. The local force thus assembled ought to be a match for the contumacious in those quarters.—Ibid.

MAJOR RAMSAY, the commissary-general, has been requested by his colleagues in the military board to proceed on a tour of inspection in the commissariat offices of Lahore, Ferozepore, Jullunder, Umballah, Kussowlee, Meerut, Peshawur, Wuzerabad, Rawul Pindie, and Mooltan. He will prepare a regular report upon the state of the department in that division, and, better still, ascertain from personal observation the character and efficiency of his subordinates.

OPIMUM.—The following is the account of the last monthly opium sale:—

Behar, Chests	1,920	Average	1,129	Proceeds	21,68,750
Benares, "	880	"	1,152	"	10,14,475

The price is still falling rapidly, the present average being a decline of Rs. 48 on the Behar, and Rs. 42 on the Benares drug.

BERHAMPORE, NOV. 3rd.—We had rain here, though not heavy, on the 23rd, 24th, and 25th, and it has done much good to the country as well as the weather. The indigo planters have taken advantage of it, and completed their October sowings under favourable circumstances. The paddy crops look very full and promising, and the yield is likely to be an abundant one. The Bhaugerutti is falling very fast, and it is feared that by the end of this month the entrance will be impassable even for moderate-sized boats. This place is particularly dull and quiet, but some gaiety is expected after the races come off. A party went out pig-sticking the other day; they had very poor sport, the country having hardly recovered from the effects of the late severe inundation. The roads out in every direction are in a most horrid state, and have been cut up in many places by the ryots for the convenience of draining their paddy lands. We have had a large influx lately of racehorses and jockeys, and it is expected there will be some good racing this year. The 37th N.I. expect to march for Barrackpore about the 17th instant. They have been relieved by the 7th N.I. The Sikh regiment a few days ago had 200 men sick, who were accommodated in the European Hospital, where they are fast coming round. They expect to move upwards. The weather now is very cool and pleasant.

GOVERNMENT OBSERVATORY.—Mr. V. L. Rees, the superintendent of the Government Observatory in Calcutta, has retired on a superannuation pension, and we are glad to perceive, from the Hurkaru, that the office has been bestowed upon Baboo Radhanath Sikhdar. This native gentleman, lately head computer in the same establishment, has long been known as first among the few natives whose scientific attainments emulate those of the Europeans. His services to the great trigonometrical survey were prominently mentioned by Capt. Thuillier, and we have little doubt that he will ably fulfil his duties as head of the office, of which he has long been the soul.

THE GOVERNOR-GENERAL intends, it is said, to visit Assam and Sylhet during the ensuing cold weather. The former province has not been honoured for a very long period by a visit from the supreme authority, and the present will be a favourable opportunity for his lordship to observe the working of the non-regulation system, which is said to have received a fuller development in Assam than any other province, except perhaps Mysore.

AT MOOLTAN the cold weather has begun to set in, and although the excessive range of the thermometer, from 60° to 130°, has caused a good deal of sickness, still, as the pleasant season lasts till the end of April, five months of bracing weather will soon restore the invalids. Fevers, however, are very prevalent, scarcely any resident escaping at least two or three attacks every autumn; and one officer, Lieut. M'Queen, of H.M.'s 60th, recently died after an illness of a very few days. Regular steamers from Kurrachee now reach Mooltan every month.

COMMISSIONER AT LAHORE.—The Lahore Chronicle states, that Mr. H. C. Tucker will not proceed to the Punjab, but Mr. C. Raikes will probably be appointed commissioner of the Lahore division.

SURGEON B. A. R. NICHOLSON has been acquitted by the court of inquiry, employed in investigating certain charges brought against him.

THE NEW CALCUTTA MEDICAL COLLEGE HOSPITAL is to contain three hundred berths in all. The ground floor is for the poorer natives, the second floor for the more respectable, and the third, or upper floor, for Europeans and Christians.

HINDU CONVERTS.—A great native meeting of the orthodox has decided that no Hindu, convert to Christianity can be re-admitted to caste until he has been absent and unheard of for twelve years, and has been regarded as dead, and had his obsequies duly performed. He is then, on his return, a new-born orthodox Hindu.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.—We understand that the military auditor-general has thought it imperative upon him to deduct from the Commander-in-Chief's pay, the time which he has spent beyond the limits of his command, and that the Government has taken the same view of the matter. If so the journey must have been an expensive one.—Englishman.

THE COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF was not expected to be at Simla before November 15.

LIEUT. CASTLE.—The Englishman "regrets to record the death, at Dacca, on the 16th Nov., of Lieut. Castle, the adjt. of the 38th L.I. Though the fever has spared few, this is the first death which has taken place among the officers since its ravages commenced. Lieut. Castle was a very promising young officer, and will be much regretted. His death promotes Ens. Dundas to the superior grade."

LIEUT.-COL. FARQUHARSON, formerly of the 8th N.I., and now commanding the 46th N.I., is not going home this season, as was so confidently stated by our contemporary of Meerut.—Bombay Telegraph.

ESTATE OF MACKINTOSH, JUN.—The 8th dividend at Co.'s anna one and nine pies per 100 sa. Rs. is now payable at the official assignee's office, Calcutta.

OPIMUM GAMBLING.—One of the great opium gamblers of Calcutta has absconded, leaving a lac of rupees of 10,000l. liabilities behind him.

SUPREME COUNCIL.—Two vacancies will soon occur in the Supreme Council; that occasioned by the retirement of Sir John Littler will be filled up by Sir Walter Gilbert; but who is to take the place of Sir Frederick Currie? Mr. Dorin's name has been mentioned.—Hurkaru.

CAPT. W. P. BIGNELL.—The Agra Messenger announces with regret the death of Capt. W. P. Bignell, 69th Regt. N.I., in command of the escort in attendance on the Hon. the Lieut.-Governor. He was seized, on the 16th Nov., with a spasmodic attack in the stomach, but appeared to be doing well under medical treatment. However, next morning he died almost suddenly. His funeral was to take place at Cawnpore.

ON DIRS.—The wing of H.M.'s 29th, under Major Stepney, was to leave Fort William immediately for Dinapore, by steam.—The 4th troop 1st brigade Horse Artillery, under charge of Lieut. Bunny, reached Meerut Nov. 15th.—The right wing H.M.'s 64th, have about 150 in hospital. They reached Kurrachee about Dec. 15th.—The left wing of H.M.'s 75th Regiment only left Umballa on the morning of 3rd Nov., on their way to Agra. The party were so weakly, that they could only proceed by half marches. They reached Meerut Nov. 16th.—The 2nd Europeans, under command of Lieut.-Col. Spens, marched into Fort William, Nov. 10th.—The 72nd and 10th Grenadiers have arrived at Allahabad.—The 15th N.I. arrived at Umritser Nov. 8th.—The 19th N.I. arrived at Meerut Nov. 6th, and resumed its march towards Cawnpore Nov. 8th.—H.M.'s 3rd Light Dragoons leave Wuzerabad on the 20th of Nov., it is said, but apparently without certain information whether they are to march to Mooltan, or to Ferozepoor!

COURT MARTIAL.

ASSISTANT-SURGEON JOSEPH EDMUND UMPHELBY.

Head-Quarters, Simla, Oct. 28, 1852.—At a general court-martial assembled at Fort William, on Saturday, Oct. 2, 1852, Assist.-surg. J. E. Umpelby, med. dep., and attached to H. M.'s 80th regt. of foot, was arraigned on the following charge :—

For conduct disgraceful to the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Calcutta, on July 7, 1852, subjected himself to the indignity of being publicly kicked by Mr. A. P. Pennefather, a clerk in the office of the Administrator-General, without adopting any sufficient measures, either immediately or for three days, to obtain reparation for such insult.

Finding.—Not guilty, and honourably acquitted.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM,
Gen. C.-in-C., East Indies.

Oct. 18, 1852.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—The Commander-in-Chief is glad that he is able fully to approve and confirm the honourable acquittal of Assistant-surgeon Umpelby of the disgraceful imputation brought against him, and his Excellency trusts that the painful position in which this officer has been placed will be a lesson to him to be more careful in future in the choice of his associates, and more guarded in his language and behaviour.

Assistant-surgeon Umpelby is to be released from arrest, and will return to his duty.

LIEUTENANT CAMPBELL MITCHELL, H.M.'s 75TH REGT.

Head-Quarters, Nov. 9, 1852.—At a general court-martial, assembled at Umballa, on Monday, Oct. 18, 1852, Lieut. Campbell Mitchell, H.M.'s 75th regt. of foot, was arraigned upon the following charges, viz. :—

1st. For behaving in a scandalous, infamous manner, unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at Umballa, on Aug. 26, 1852, when playing at the game of billiards with Capt. G. Hamilton, of the same regt., intentionally and repeatedly played in an unfair manner, with intent thereby to gain an undue advantage over Capt. Hamilton, and to cheat him of the amount he had staked on the result of the game.

2nd. For conduct unbecoming the character of an officer and a gentleman, in having, at the same time and place, unwarrantably applied the epithet "damned liar" to Lieut. J. R. S. Fitzgerald, of the same regiment.

Finding.—Guilty of both charges.

Sentence.—To be cashiered.

Approved and confirmed.

(Signed) W. M. GOMM,
Gen. C.-in-C., East Indies.

Head-Quarters, Camp Bowlee,
Oct. 30, 1852.

Remarks by His Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.—From what appears in the evidence on the proceedings of this trial, and from circumstances that have lately come under the cognizance of the Commander-in-Chief, his excellency is apprehensive that gaming is still indulged in at some stations of the army, notwithstanding the frequent prohibitions against it. His excellency calls upon all commanding officers to exert their influence to put a stop to this pernicious practice, and they may depend upon receiving his full support in carrying out any measures they may deem necessary for the repression of a vice destructive of the morals of every regiment in which it is followed, and so frequently terminating in the ruin and disgrace of those indulging in it.

Lieutenant Mitchell is to be struck off the strength of Her Majesty's 75th regiment, from the date of the publication of this order at the head-quarters of his regiment, which will be reported to the adjutant-general of Her Majesty's forces, and to the military secretary to his Excellency the Commander-in-Chief.

MADRAS.

THE CENSUS OF THE POPULATION AT MADRAS.

The results of the census of the population of the Madras territories, taken by order of Government in 1850-51, have just been given to the world, by a lengthy general statement in the Fort St. George Gazette, showing the adult and juvenile population of each several district, both male and female, divided according to creed and occupation. It is a highly interesting and important document, and one that gives a far more promising view of the growing populousness of this presidency, than we were at all prepared to expect. It had long been doubted by some of the ablest and best informed officers of Government, whether the population of certain provinces at any rate, if not actually retrograding, had not at least stood still, but supposing that the late returns speak truth, it is now clear that, with the exception of a single district, the increase of the inhabitants of the presidency has been everywhere more or less considerable within the last thirteen years. The exceptional case is that of Masulipatam.

The grand total of the entire population, is reckoned at 21,308,507, exclusive of that of Kurnool and Madras—the former containing 273,190, and the latter 726,000 souls. Including these, the sum amounts to 22,301,697, in 1850-51, against the return of 13,967,395 in 1839; showing an increase of 8,334,302 souls. This, as we have said, is highly satisfactory information, and we rejoice at its being made public, because it allays very unpleasant apprehensions that were before current. Looking into the tabular details of the statement, which contains such a mass of figures that we cannot well transfer it whole to our pages, without marring their arrangement, we find the following facts:

The total Hindu population numbers 19,673,726, of which the agricultural portion amounts to 13,183,258, and the non-agricultural to 6,485,464.*

The total Mahomedan population, and other not Hindu, is given as 1,634,781: of whom 831,017 are agriculturists, and 803,764 non-agricultural.*

Hindu adults are reckoned at 13,096,364, and Hindu children at 6,575,362; Mahomedan adults at 1,056,998, and Mahomedan children at 577,783, respectively in number. These figures are irrespective of the population of Madras, of which, strange to say, no details seem to exist. Its gross amount, even, is assumed, and not proven by a census. The subjoined general abstract places all the material points of the Tabular Statement in a clear and concise light:—

Males	11,047,139
Females	10,534,558
Adults	14,332,259
Children	7,249,438
Agricultural	14,192,941
Non-agricultural	2,368,756
Hindus	19,001,098
Mahomedans and others	1,679,699

Madras is here again excluded from the estimate. The area of the Presidency in square miles, is given as 136,872, including the Capital and Kurnool; the largest number of persons to the mile in any Mofussil district being 450, and the smallest 94. Of these figures, the former proportion relates to the small district of Tanjore, comprising only 3,900 square miles, and the latter to the large one of Bellary, which contains 13,056. As it may be interesting to our readers to know the relative population of the several Districts of the Presidency, we append that part of the Tabular Statement:—

Districts.	Area in square miles.	Number of Persons to each mile.
Ganjam	6,400	173
Vizagapatam	7,650	254
Rajahmundry	6,050	167
Masulipatam	5,000	168
Guntoor	4,960	120
Chingleput	2,993	177
Salem	8,200	167
Madura	10,703	229
Nellore	7,930	118
North Arcot	5,790	257
South Arcot	7,660	219
Tanjore	3,900	450
Trichinopoly	3,242	145
Tinnevely	5,760	227
Bellary	13,056	94
Cuddapah	12,970	114
Coimbatore	8,280	175
Canara	7,720	125
Malabar	6,060	250
Madras	27	27,692
Kurnool	2,643	103

With reference to the increase of district population above alluded to, the largest growth of the past thirteen years has been in Madura, where it amounts to 1,204,314, and the smallest in Bellary, reaching only 94,692. We should like to know what causes occasion such an extraordinary difference in the fecundity of the two districts, and how far emigration from the one, and immigration into the other, may have aided in producing it. Looking at their comparative number of inhabitants when the last return was made, it is altogether inexplicable. Madura had then but 532,477 souls, while Bellary held 1,129,907, and yet the subsequent increase of the former district has been 1,104,622 souls in excess of that of the latter! We wish that the great statistician of our presidency, Dr. Baillou, would take in hand the solution of this puzzling problem. There is, indeed, a good deal in the census statement that would afford exercise, with advantage to the public, for his peculiar talent aided by medical knowledge. Other districts besides Madura show a remarkable disproportion in the ratio of their increase, to that of other districts beside Bellary, as the following figures make appear:—

	As per Return transmitted to Government on the 28th January, 1852.	Increase in 1850-51.
Ganjam	4,36,174	4,88,736
Vizagapatam	10,47,414	2,06,858
Rajahmundry	6,95,016	3,17,020
Musulipatam	5,44,672	"
Guntoor	2,67,426	3,02,657
Chingleput	3,21,921	2,51,641
Salem	8,98,293	2,97,144
Madura	5,32,477	12,04,314
Nellore	3,23,736	6,06,864
North Arcot	5,23,246	9,62,635
South Arcot	4,64,806	5,21,205
Tanjore	11,28,703	5,47,356
Trichinopoly	4,85,242	2,23,954
Tinnevely	8,50,891	4,18,325
Bellary	11,29,907	99,692
Cuddapah	10,81,261	3,70,660
Coimbatore	7,83,392	3,70,470
Canara	7,66,123	2,83,210
Malabar	11,63,791	3,49,118

We confess ourselves wholly at a loss to account for such seeming freaks of nature as are exhibited above; with which remark we shall quit the subject, at least in the meantime.—Madras Spectator, Oct. 8.

[REMARKS BY THE FRIEND OF INDIA.]

Last week we republished from the Madras Spectator a synopsis of one of the most important public documents which has appeared for many years,—the result of the census of the population of the Madras territories, taken by order of government in the year 1850-51. From that return we learn that the population, which in 1830 was computed at 13,907,395 souls, is now found to be 22,301,697, shewing an increase of 8,334,302. As the population of these territories is not augmented by immigration it must be self-evident that the increase is entirely imaginary. It is impossible that any population can increase by natural causes at the rate of sixty per cent., in eleven years. An examination of the details of particular districts, moreover, will serve still more to establish this assertion. The district of Madurai, for instance, is said to have contained 5,50,000 souls in 1839, and no fewer than 17,50,000 in 1850-51, showing a clear increase of 218 per cent., in eleven years, which is utterly incredible. The United States, with a current of immigration to which there has hitherto been no parallel in the world, doubles its population only in twenty-seven years; it is therefore absolutely impossible that a district like Madurai, with no accessions from abroad, should more than treble its population in eleven years. Hence, we are driven to the conclusion that the census of 1839 was defective, and altogether untrustworthy.

The two presidencies of which we have any accurate census are the North-West Provinces, and Madras. The census of 1848 gives us for the population of the former, 23,199,668

Of whom the number of Mahomedans, and others not Hindoos, was ... 3,747,022

The population of the Madras territory is now stated at ... 22,301,697

Of whom the number of Mahomedans, and others not Hindoos, was ... 1,070,868

Thus we find that in the provinces which were longest in the occupation of the Mahomedans, the proportion of the professors of that creed to the Hindoos, is twice as great as in the southern provinces, which were among the latest of their conquests.

The proportion of the agricultural to the non-agricultural population at the two presidencies, is deserving of notice.

Population of the N. W. Provinces, .. 23,199,000

Agriculturists, .. 14,724,000

Population of the Madras Territories, (excluding Madras) .. 21,581,000

Agriculturists .. 14,192,000

The proportion is as nearly as possible the same, that is to say, two-thirds of the population are connected with the cultivation of the soil, and depend for their subsistence on its produce. It is to watch over all the diversified interests of this vast population, that the British Government has appointed revenue boards at each of the presidencies; and we trust the Examiner, before he again ventures to compare the functions and duties of our revenue boards with those of the commissioners of stamps or excise in England, will give due consideration to this fact.

The largest number of persons to the mile in any district in the interior of Madras is 450, and the smallest, 94. In the north-west provinces the most thickly populated district which has no populous town, is that of Azimghur, in which there are 521 persons to each square mile. The most sparsely populated district is Hurriana, which exhibits only 68. But the general proportion of population to the square mile is far less in the south than in the north. The account stands thus:—

North-West Provinces.
Sq. Miles.	Population.	Persons to a sq. mile.
71,985	23,199,000	322
	Madras Territories.
136,845	21,581,000	166

We have yet to look for a similar census of the lower provinces of Bengal and of the presidency of Bombay. The former cannot be furnished until the revenue surveys are complete, which we can scarcely expect for three or four years to come; but we are inclined to think the Government of Bombay is in possession of sufficient data for the compilation of a census. It appears probable that when the population of the Punjab and of Scinde is brought to account, the number of souls under the immediate government of the British authorities will be found to amount to ninety millions.

A TRIBUTE to the memory of the late Duke of Wellington has been executed in appropriately complimentary terms by a literary correspondent of the Madras Athenæum. It is interesting for its local references.

MILITARY ON DITS.—The head-quarters and right wing of H.M.'s 25th regt., under the command of Lieut.-Col. Schonawar, marched out of the cantonment (Nov.) en route to Cannanore, after having been stationed here nearly three years. Their departure is regretted by every one; for a finer regiment, or one composed of steadier, better behaved men, it would be impossible to find in India. They appear to have left in excellent spirits, the men cheering, and the band playing merrily. The left wing of H.M.'s 9th regt. will march for Bangalore soon after being relieved by the 25th.—Brev. Lieut.-Col. Bend, of H.M.'s 15th Hussars, is about to retire from the service.

Mr. Ross, the Assay-master, has been removed from his appointment by order of the Court of Directors, who have sanctioned the grant of a retiring pension of 2,000*l.* per annum to that gentleman.—U. S. Gazette.

THE KHAGUR SAUD has acknowledged receipt of the last official missive addressed to him, and may be trying to gain time until the season for operations in the hills is past, as he says he is afraid to "come in," under present circumstances, with troops threatening him. He professes the greatest desire to do so, but, as usual, there is an obstacle which he cannot overcome.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 17.

THE FATE OF LIEUTENANT WYBURG is again exciting some little attention, and we are told that another attempt is to be made to ascertain, with some little correctness, what has really become of him. A Saud, who has connections with Bokhara, and who is believed to have religious influence in that country, has received an advance of Rs. 1,000 for authentic intelligence, with an official promise of a further reward in case of his returning with Lieutenant Wyburg, or bringing some decisive proofs of his fate.—Ibid.

ZUMAN SHAH has fled to the upper part of the valley under the Chelas mountains; it is hoped and believed he will be obliged to come in, and surrender at discretion. A reward of 10,000 Rs. has been offered for his capture. Colonel Mackeson, the commissioner, is still in the neighbourhood, pushing on troops and supplies. The campaign of Khagur may be said to be over without one British soldier, regular or irregular, having been employed, though the 16th Irregular Cavalry, the Khelat-ec-Ghilzies, the guides, and police battalion were prudently and properly kept at hand as comforters, and for employ, if necessary. We have no doubt that if the season were not so far advanced, the Hausas affair, which will be the stand by of some of our friends, might be settled in much the same manner. Since the above was written we learn that Zuman Shah has surrendered to Major Abbott, and thus rendered any further demonstration even unnecessary.—Lahore Chronicle, Nov. 21.

MR. JOHN LAWRENCE, SENIOR, Member of the Board of Administration, has returned to Lahore, after some few weeks' absence.

NEW OFFICE.—The Athenæum says it is in contemplation to create a new office, that of Uncovenanted Assistant to the Collector of Land Customs at Madras.

SETTLEMENT OF A MISUNDERSTANDING.—Mr. Ross, the deputy-mint master, quarrelled with his immediate superior, Major Smith, and got dismissed for his pains, the hardship being somewhat abridged by the grant of a pension of 200*l.* a year. We believe (Athenæum) that in Mr. Ross's case the Court of Directors merely gave sanction to what they thought was the wish of that gentleman.

UNIVERSITY OF MADRAS.—The Madras papers speak of the conversion of the "Tweeddale Folly" into the University of Madras. The Penitentiary was one of the sites recommended by the present Board in their report to Government, for educational head-quarters at this Presidency, and we are glad to hear that Sir Henry Pottinger has sanctioned Rs. 50,000 for the purpose of adapting it to its new employment. Its greater proximity to Black Town must compensate for a less agreeable situation, as compared with the present institution; and the more convenient locality, set off as it will be by the reduction of the present fee for admission, 50 per cent., or from Rs. 4 to Rs. 2, will perhaps help the governor and the Madras public to get at the cause of that slender attendance at the High School, which apparently countenances the application of the term "failure" to this solitary experiment of the Madras Government in the way of public instruction.—Athenæum.

A SILVER MINE.—The Spectator publishes the following interesting extract from a private letter:—"Mr. Decimus Lonsdale has discovered a silver mine at Koedan, in the Tenasserim Provinces, and Messrs. Booth and Maling are supposed to have made a discovery of a similar nature at Henzie." We presume the facts, if correct, have been reported to Government; but the search after the precious metals in India has failed too often to allow any great degree of confidence to be placed in the present rumour.

THE EDITOR of the Madras Advertiser has resigned his post, and turned his face to the "diggins."

SERINGAPATAM.—So serious a disturbance took place at Seringapatam, about four or five days ago, as to require the interference of a strong military force from the French Rocks—and it appears that the gallant 25th, who were passing by (en route to Cannanore) had something to do in subduing the Moslem mettle—in fact, they did every thing before the natives could arrive from the Rocks, although the latter were smart enough in their movements, for they were at Seringapatam within about four hours after the receipt of the requisition from the civil authority, by the officer commanding. Some of the ringleaders, about five or six, I believe, have been apprehended, and such of them as could travel—some were seriously wounded—having been marched off to Mysore under a strong escort of native infantry. The disturbance was occasioned by the pollution of the mosque in the fort; portions of a slaughtered pig, it is said, were thrown into it. It appears, so a letter from Mysore says, that Captain Clerk, the officiating superintendent of the Astagram division, had a very narrow escape—the sword of a Mussulman was uplifted over him and ready to strike when the assailant was shot dead by a soldier of the 25th K. O. It was lucky, I think, for the town that the Europeans were present. The town is tranquil again—a detachment of the 12th N.I. however still remains there.—Bangalore Herald.

PROPOSED NEW BATTALION.—The Madras Athenæum has heard that Mr. Strange, the gentleman who was deputed by the Madras Government to inquire in the cause of the Moplah outbreaks, has recommended the formation of a Nair battalion to be stationed in the disturbed districts. As the Nairs are the hereditary foes of the Moplahs, and do not share in the dread of their prowess displayed by the Mussulmans, perhaps such a measure would be advisable. It is said, however, that the oppression of the Nair landlords is one great cause of the Moplah turbulence, and the formation of such a brigade might possibly strengthen their hands beyond what policy would warrant.

CONVERTS.—An interesting ceremony has taken place at the Scotch Church, thirteen native converts having been received at one time into the Christian faith. The conversions were those of grown persons and their families, removed above the suspicion of having been coerced or swayed by interested motives.

Mr. MOREHEAD, one of our Sudder judges, has returned to Madras in greatly improved health. This vacates the acting appointment of Mr. Inglis, and by-and-by, when Mr. Strange returns from his travels, we may hope to see a permanent bench established, to the great benefit of the litigant public.

THE HEALTH OF THE HON. DANIEL ELIOTT is, it is stated, in that shattered state, that his physicians recommend a change of climate as the only chance of recovery. Mr. Elliott, however fortunate as a member of the service, in the enjoyment for many years of some of its richest prizes, has cause (says the Athenæum) to complain in the refusal to return the overplus of his subscriptions to the Civil Fund. He has paid more than Rs. 70,000 in excess of the stipulated sum, and the authorities will not give him back a single anna. His unexpected retirement at the close of his term in council will increase the goodly number of valuable appointments in store for the younger members of the Civil Service. A rumour which has been current for some time past in Madras, to the effect that the Hon. Daniel Elliott, on the termination of his five years' service in council, is to be made accountant-general, has crept into the United Service Gazette.

ACCIDENT TO PRINCE ERNEST.—A serious accident had occurred at the Red Hills, from the incautious use of firearms. The Prince Ernest of Saxe Leiningen, who is one of the officers of H.M.S. Hastings, was handling a gun in the presence of one of his fellow midshipmen, a son of the Marquis de Lisboa, Brazilian Chargé d' Affaires, when the piece exploded, and the latter received the whole of the contents in the side of his head. It is hoped that the lad will recover, but the sight of one of his eyes is lost, it is supposed, for ever. "We regret to announce," says the Madras Spectator of the 22nd Nov. "the death at the Presidency, on Friday night, the 19th instant, of the Marquis de Lisboa, the midshipman of H.M.'s ship Hastings. This is the unfortunate young gentleman lately the accident to whom at the Red Hills we recorded. The hopes then entertained of his recovery grew fainter during the week, until wholly extinguished. He was a fine youth and a promising officer, and much beloved by his shipmates. His remains were interred on Saturday evening in Saint George's Cathedral."

OFFICIAL DOCUMENTS.

The official documents which are lying mildewed and moth-eaten in the archives of the secretariate and other departments would, if published to the world, afford information respecting India of inestimable value. There are thousands of documents, which have exercised many a bright intellect for weeks and months in producing, carefully preserved under lock and key, and covered with the dust of years. They are guarded with the most jealous vigilance, lest the world should derive any benefit from a single idea paid for with the coin of the Honourable Company. There is perhaps no government in the world which could produce a more splendid collection of records than that of Bombay. There is scarcely a village or a river but what has been described by both the pencil and the pen, and yet the public knows nothing about them except what is to be derived from Holland's Route Book, a valuable work certainly, but, nevertheless, merely a route-book or guide for the march of troops. We have also a Route map, by the same author, compiled with great care and industry from the most authentic sources; but beyond these we are entirely destitute of any authorized official information. Why are not the surveys of Burnes and of Holland in Cutch and in Rajpootana, and those of Delhoste and of Campbell in Guzerat and Scinde made patent to all? Mr. Frere, the Scinde commissioner, has thus denounced this tape and foolscap secrecy, with reference to the want of information experienced by masters of vessels regarding the navigation of the Scinde waters:—"Here, where the most minute surveys and careful sailing directions are peculiarly wanted, none are to be obtained. A very intelligent officer commanding one steamer frequenting the port (of Kurrachee) told me he could never obtain in Bombay chart or sailing directions of any kind, and he had none on board. Another had sent to England for the latest edition of Horsburgh, dated, I think, 1849; but Kurrachee did not appear there at all. Under the head of 'Carotchee' were only the old surveys of Lieut. Careless, taken, I believe, before we first had a force there, and now, owing to alteration of landmarks, and changes in the river mouths, probably more dangerous than if there were none at all. I believe very complete and admirable surveys exist in manuscript, the publication of which would probably repay its expense. At present the surveys in question are viewed as official documents; and the copies in the hands of officers of the Indian navy are guarded with an extreme jealousy, most commendable as long as they are papers intrusted to government servants under the seal of official secrecy."

Mr. Frere is quite right in supposing that the sale of the majority of the documents, if published, especially maps and charts, would meet the expenses of publication; but in most instances it is generally works which are of interest to one or two that are published, and as a matter of course, great expenses are incurred; and the consequence is, that sterling works are left to be consumed by mildew and moths. Personal vanity has a good deal to do with the publishing of documents. Some officers having a weakness in this particular point of their character: they dream of fame, and the ambition of their life is gratified when they see their signatures done on copper by Walker, the Company's geographer. It is no doubt an amiable weakness, but it is an expensive one, and completely obscures unassuming merit. The records of the Bombay Secretariate would afford materials for histories gorgeous as Macaulay's England, and romances startling as those of Scott or James: they are, however, sealed to all, save those who look upon them merely as the productions of section writers.

That Government will—now that the subject has been so prominently brought to their notice by the Scinde commissioner—give orders for having the charts of the sea around the southern coast of Scinde and the mouths of the Indus engraved or lithographed, we feel convinced of; but the good work we are afraid will stop there. There have been, it is true, lately some signs of a more liberal and enlightened policy with regard to official documents, copies of Colonel Campbell's map of Scinde having been sent to Mr. Dunlop's for sale. The military board has also called upon the survey departments, and also the Quarter-master General, for registers of all the maps, plans, charts, surveys, &c., in their respective offices, for the purpose of being transmitted to the Honourable the Court of Directors. That this call has resulted in consequence of Mr. Frere's representation is most probable, and we think, now that India is beginning to excite public attention at home amongst almost all classes of society, the Court will issue such instructions as will cause to be unlocked to the public many of those bureaux of information which hitherto have been so carefully sealed. Professor Green is amongst the first who has been trusted with a sight of the forbidden treasures, and his valuable pamphlet on the Deccan ryots, and their land tenure, shows what the Government have to dread from publicity. Perhaps Indian Governments were never exhibited in a more impartial or favourable light. The imagination colours everything that is secret, and invests harmless tape and foolscap with all the terrors of omnipotent despotism. The Friend of India is justly and deservedly praised for the temperate and calm tones of its strictures, while other journals are condemned for their injustice and severity; but were the same privileges accorded to the other portions of the Indian press which the Friend enjoys, the majority would maintain as high a character.

The dawn of a new era is, however, breaking over the land, and we venture to predict, that the day is not far distant when the press will be looked upon by the enlightened and liberal members of both services as the coadjutor, and not the antagonist of Government.

It augurs favourably when the highest civil servant of the Bombay presidency is crying out against the insane secrecy, which at present pervades all the departments of our Indian Government.—Telegraph, Nov. 10.

RAILWAY TO TANNA.

THE first steam trip along the railway to Tanna took place, as it was stated by us a few days since it would, on Thursday, Nov. 16, when the engineers and directors, with a party of their friends, enjoyed the first opportunity presented them of inspecting the line through nearly the whole of its length. The Great Indian Peninsular Company's own engines are at present only being put together, and will not be fit for use for some weeks to come. The complete opening of the line can hardly take place before the month of February, if so soon. The expedition was got up at the instance of Mr. Faviell, the contractor—the Falkland ballasting engine, which has been at work since February last, being the only locomotive available. The rails have not yet been laid down all the way to Fort George—they stop short opposite the sepoy lines, and the passengers were appointed to meet the train at noon, opposite the Boree bander. A tender had been very neatly fitted up with awnings and curtains for the occasion, and everything was snug and comfortable as any provisional arrangement whatever could be made. A little after twelve o'clock the party started. It consisted of Major Swanson, Captains Crawford, Baynes, Hunt, and Barr, Messrs. Dickinson, Spencer Compton, Le Geyt, Howard, Lumsden, Malet, Scott Berkeley, Verral, Dr. Buist, Jugganath Sumkerrett, Cursetjee Jamsetjee, Manackjee Cursetjee Furdowjee, Shapoorjee Dhuwajebhoy, Dadabhoj Manackjee, Vensik Row Jugganathjee, &c. &c. From the Boree bander the railway proceeds by a very dense-peopled district till, skirting along the shore, it passes the lofty precipice of Nowrejee Hill. Here the public road twice crosses it nearly at right angles, where the huge gates were seen to do the double duty of shutting up the railway, or cutting off the public road, according as they were in one position or another. After passing under the Mazagon viaduct, opposite the Sudder Adawlut, which was crowded with people, and which commands an excellent view of the line, and also of the engine and its train on both sides, the railway describes a very graceful double curve of large radius, and then crosses the Boree road near the bishop's house, and passing under the still unfinished viaduct, and across the temporary public road beyond, which not being provided with gates was protected by a strong body of police, it so reached the flats near the race-course. From the curious gravel bank called Phipp's Cart it stretches along the flats to Sion, over a dead uninteresting level for the space of six miles in almost a perfectly straight line. At Sion it passes under the public road and along the base of the hill, on the summit of which is an old Marathi fort and a Portuguese church contiguous. Here it is joined by the branch which goes along to Mahim, at present an unimportant fishing village, but likely to be transformed by the railway into a port of importance. The branch is about ten miles in length, and has just been completed. From this the line sweeps across Sion marsh, the embanking of which at one time threatened to be very troublesome—the material thrown in sinking amongst the mud, which afterwards rose up, forming a little island on each side along the line. Here, immediately adjoining and nearly parallel to the railway, we have the Sion-causeway on one side, and full in view two miles off the magnificent work of the like kind constructed by Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy, and first opened in 1844. The railway now bends considerably to the right, and passing through a long line of salt pans, it enters Salsette, and encounters the only formidable obstruction on the line; a beautifully wooded ridge traversed by an open cutting about half-a-mile in length, and about 120 feet across where it is widest, and about fifty feet in depth. Here the fire-stopped stopped, and took a vast quaff from the cellar close by. The nine miles had been performed in eighteen minutes; the speed at one time being above fifty miles an hour, and the average thirty. From this, for the next fourteen miles, the line is perfectly level, the rails being laid along the surface of the ground, with merely so much embanking as to save them from the risk of flooding during the rains. The country for a considerable distance is open on both sides, and the view extremely beautiful. To the left are the low rocky wooded ridges of Salsette,—woodlands and richly cultivated fields, hamlets and cottages, filling up the intervening space. On the right, parallel to, and close beside, the railway, for about eight miles, is the salt water creek called the Tanna river, and just beyond are the magnificent ghauts. The railway, on approaching Tanna, becomes embowered under magnificent trees. On entering the village, it turns rather quickly round towards the viaduct, by which it crosses the river, which is here divided into two by a long and rocky island. The channel on the Tanna side is shallow, and the arches here are of moderate span. On the mainland side, the channel is deep and narrow, and an iron bridge, somewhat on the tubular plan, eighty-six feet in span, permits the shipping to pass under it. The whole viaduct from shore to shore, including the part over the river, is about 1,000 feet in length, the ferry way about forty above the high water mark. From this the line runs along the base of the hill, at a distance of about three miles, right on to the projecting spur of Parick Point, which it penetrates by a tunnel, which is about a hundred yards in length. On the other side, the traveller finds himself passing for about a mile along the margin of Callian river, surrounded by some of the most magnificent scenery in the world, when a second tunnel is encountered, and no further difficulty presents itself till the village of Callian is attained. Here the line stops for the present. It will be remembered that the first sod was turned on the 31st October, 1859, and very little was done for the next eight months, till Messrs. Faviell and Fowler at one end, and Mr. Jackson at the other, took matters in hand. Since then, matters have proceeded with great celerity, and a work which took the India House and the Court of Directors eight years to talk about, will have been begun and finished in about twenty months. Such is the difference between saying and doing, when the sayers are high-salaried public men, paid by the year—the doers, private individuals paid by the piece, and who are remunerated as they work. The line at first was meant to have been a double one; it was afterwards resolved to be a single line, with a double embankment; ultimately the original idea was fallen back upon, of having a double-line to Tanna and a single line from thenceforward on. One line is now laid down complete to Tanna, and the second is in rapid progress. The viaduct will still require six months for its completion. Here the engine stopped, and the party proceeded on foot to the other side, where they were taken up in covered tracks drawn by horses to the tunnel, which is not yet quite complete to be traversable on foot. The upper drift is open, but the rock requires to be cleared away for about seventy feet. A splendid tiffin was laid out under the further end of the tunnel, where about sixty gentlemen (European and native) sat down. The whole affair was got up and the party given by the contractors, Messrs. Faviell and Jackson (the former has the line from Boree Bunder to Tanna village, and the latter the very difficult continuation across the river, including the viaduct and the two tunnels), both of whom have given the very highest satisfaction to their employers.—Bombay Times.

THE INDORE RESIDENCY AND IDOLATRY.

We have much cause of thankfulness in the fact that government connection with idolatry in this country has greatly diminished of late years. Public feeling in England—public feeling even in India, is greatly opposed to it; and the Court of Directors seem really anxious to uproot the abominations by which Englishmen in India once so much dishonoured their God and disgraced their country. The evil seems waning to extinction at Nagpore, where it was but a few years ago unhappily prominent. Will our correspondents kindly tell us how matters now stand at Baroda?

But unless report does great injustice to the residency at Indore, things there are in a very bad state. Mr. Hamilton, the resident, we sincerely respect as a man who has abundantly proved himself an active and enlightened friend of native improvement; and it is with considerable pain that we couple his name with the grave errors to which we now call public attention.

It would appear, that on the recurrence of the heathen festival of the Dussera, the British residency at Indore is the scene of the utmost festivity. Guests are invited from all quarters; dinner parties and other entertainments are given daily, and visits of ceremony are exchanged between the residency and the raja's palace. One day towards the end of the festival, the resident, accompanied by a large party of guests, left the residency and proceeded to a garden in the suburbs belonging to the raja, where they partook of tiffin. They then mounted their elephants and joined the raja, accompanying him about two miles into the country to a spot where his highness engaged in certain acts of idolatrous worship, after which the whole party returned. On their way back to the city the cavalcade halted to witness the slaughter of a buffalo, which was performed in the following manner:—A child (probably the son of one of the principal men in the city) was led up to the animal, and went through the form of giving the first blow, on which a number of men fell upon it sword in hand, and began to cut and hack at its hind quarters, and slice the flesh from its flanks, until the wretched animal was seen crawling about with its entrails protruding through its wounds.... What might have been nothing wonderful in Jeswant Rao Holkar some fifty years ago, cannot be pardoned in Tukaji Holkar of 1852. His highness must be told that he cannot enact two characters,—he must either be a civilised man or a barbarian; and if the matter be rightly set before him, we cannot doubt what part he will prefer.

But what of the resident's share in this pitiable and disgusting spectacle? By what wretched sophism, or what "mighty magic," can a person of Mr. Hamilton's character have been led to countenance a ceremony so afflicting to the heart of a Christian—so revolting to the feelings of a man.—Guardian, Nov. 12.

THE LONDON MAIL of October 25 arrived at Bombay Nov. 24, per Victoria. The London mail of Nov. 9 arrived at Aden Nov. 27, en route to Bombay.

THE RESTRICTION ON LEAVE to officers in the Bombay army, consequent on the war in Burmah, has been removed. A reference was made to the Supreme Government, and the reply intimated that the restriction did not extend to the Bombay presidency.

COL. OUTRAM.—A correspondent of the Bombay Telegraph and Courier informs us, that the Gaikowar having failed to crush Col. Outram, has had recourse to "enchanted," which he hopes will result in the death of the gallant officer. He has already advanced ten thousand rupees to Brahmans from the north-west, and has promised them twenty thousand rupees more if they succeed in effecting the desired object. The Brahmans, it is said, perform their incantations dressed in robes dipped in buffalo's blood, and will probably protract so profitable an amusement as long as possible.

THE REV. DR. STEVENSON has been elected president of the Bombay branch of the Royal Asiatic Society, in room of Sir Erskine Perry, resigned, on his return to Europe.

CAPT. P. W. CLARKE.—We are sorry to observe that Capt. P. W. Clarke, 2nd Bo. Grdars. who formerly held the appointment of 2nd in command of the Kolapore Local Infantry, has been removed from the service by order of the Court of Directors, on a pension of the half-pay of his rank.

22ND N.I.—The ship Duke of Argyll arrived on Monday from Kurrachee with the 22nd N.I. on board; the regiment is under the command of Col. St. John, and consists of five European and fourteen native officers, one European staff sergeant, and 658 rank and file. The corps is on its way to Malligaum.

THE RIGHT HONOURABLE THE GOVERNOR returned to the presidency on the morning of Dec. 1, after an absence of eight months in the Deccan and on the Mahabuleswar Hills.

A SUBSTITUTE FOR GUTTA PERCHA.—The Bombay Times publishes an interesting note from Dr. Riddell, containing the result of some experiments upon the juice of the madar (asclepias gigantea), a plant which grows on every roadside in Bengal. The juice of this plant, when exposed to solar evaporation in a flat dish, hardens and settles into a substance which appears to possess all the properties of gutta percha. The demand for the latter article is extending in Europe and America so rapidly, that the production must hereafter cease to keep pace with it, and any substitute possessing the same properties will become a valuable article of export.

MR. JACKSON, Advocate-General at Calcutta, is, it is said, likely to succeed to the Puisse Judgeship of Bombay.

MR. JOHN WARDEN is appointed by Government president of the Board of Education in room of Sir E. Perry, and a better appointment could not have been made. Mr. Metcalf Larken, of the Sudder Adawlut, fills up the vacancy in the Board.

THE REV. MR. FRASER, late of the Free Church, Bombay, has been appointed by the Board of Education, professor of English literature in the Sanscrit College, Poona, in the room of Professor Green, lately placed at the head of the Sir Jamsetjee Jeejeebhoy educational establishments.

GOVERNMENT GENERAL ORDERS.

THE NEW COMMANDER-IN-CHIEF.

Bombay Castle, Nov. 24, 1852.—His Exc. Lieut. Gen. the Right Hon. Lord Frederick FitzClarence, G.C.H., appointed by the Hon. Court of Directors to be Commander-in-Chief of the Company's forces serving under the presidency of Bombay, having this day taken the oaths, and his seat as second in Council of Bombay, the Right Hon. the Governor in Council orders and directs that all officers and soldiers on the establishment of Bombay do obey Lieut. Gen. the Right Hon. Lord Frederick FitzClarence, G.C.H., and that all returns be made to him as Commander-in-Chief accordingly.

CHARGE OF CRUELTY AGAINST CAPT. T. STOCK, ASSIST. ADJ. GENERAL.

Head-Quarters, Bombay, Nov. 20, 1852.—The Commander of the Forces is pleased to publish to the army the following extract from the proceedings of a court of inquiry recently assembled at Belgaum, and of which Lieut. Col. R. W. Honner, 4th N.I. (rifles), was president, to investigate and report upon an accusation of cruel treatment made against Capt. T. Stock, assist. adj. gen., by the late gunner Duncan M'Inness, of the artillery, in an address to the troops assembled to witness his execution for murder on the 4th October last.

The accusation was made in the following terms:—"Captain Stock: I forgive you for the cruel treatment I received when in confinement." The words of a dying man are generally received as true; and when uttered against the character or conduct of any individual, are calculated to inflict much injury. Captain Stock, although conscious that he had acted in a kind and considerate manner towards the late gunner Duncan M'Inness during the time he was in confinement, was too keenly alive to the unfavourable impression the words of the dying criminal would, in all probability, produce, to permit his remaining passive, and therefore requested that his conduct, with reference to his treatment of the late gunner Duncan M'Inness, might be submitted to public investigation. The publication of the opinion of the court of inquiry, in which the Commander of the Forces fully concurs, the major-general considers will render it impossible that Captain Stock's character should sustain the slightest injury from the late gunner M'Inness' malignant slander.

Extract.—"From a review of the evidence recorded in this case, the Court is of opinion that the late felon, Gunner Duncan M'Inness, had much cause for gratitude and thankfulness for all the kindness and indulgence he received at the hands of the many good men, including Captain Stock, who administered to him in his last extremity, and none whatever for the malevolent and untrue assertion he gave utterance to on the scaffold towards Capt. Stock, who treated him, in common with all others whose duty brought them around him, with every reasonable and mild consideration, consistent with the rules of the service and his situation.

(Signed) "R. W. HONNER."

H. HAWCOCK, Lieut. col., Adj. gen. of the Army.

CEYLON.

FUNERAL OF THE LATE ADMIRAL AUSTEN.—Trincomalie, Oct. 28.—On the 26th instant, I had barely time to inform you that the Rattler war steamer had arrived here, bringing the remains of the late Admiral Austen, who died near Prome on the 8th instant,—for interment in this place;—I now shall endeavour to give you some further details in connection with the melancholy event. It will be remembered that the late naval commander-in-chief left Trincomalie in the Hastings, accompanied by the war steamer Rattler, for Rangoon, on the 26th August last, leaving his much-respected family, comprising his lady and three daughters, at the former place. The Hastings arrived off the Rangoon river on the 2nd September, but owing to want of sufficient depth of water, she did not reach the Rangoon anchorage till the 6th September. The late admiral, having shifted his flag to the Phulo steamer, proceeded, accompanied by his personal staff, in her, on the 15th of that month, towards Prome. When close to that city, his Excellency was seized by an attack of cholera, on the 6th of Oct., at 10 a.m., of the effects of which he died on the following day, at 4 p.m., aged seventy-three. To all who had the privilege of the slightest acquaintance with the late distinguished officer, it would be superfluous to add that his death was resigned and happy. His remains having been placed in a leaden coffin, were immediately transferred to the Rattler steamer, and accompanied by Capt. Austin, his Excy's nephew and son-in-law, Mr. G. P. Martin, sec., Flag-lieut. Burdon, and the Rev. W. Onslow, chaplain of the Hastings, arrived here, as already stated, on the 26th inst. The agonizing distress of the ladies of his Excy's family, at this dreadful blow, may be conceived, but cannot be described. Yesterday evening, the 27th Oct., the mortal remains of the late naval commander-in-chief were interred in St. Stephen's burial-ground, Trincomallee. The procession consisted of—

A company of the Ceylon rifles, commanded by Lieut. Annesley.

A company of the 15th light infantry, commanded by Lieut. Hague. The whole commanded by Major Wingfield.

The Revs. Messrs. Onslow and Glenie.

The coffin on a gun-carriage covered with a flag, and having the admiral's flag floating over it.

Supported, as pall-bearers, by Col. Cochrane, Capt. Higgs, R.N., and Master-Attendant H. Warrington, Esq., N.S.; G. Pett, Esq., O. S. H. O'Grady, Esq., and Lieut. Dorville, R.N.

Chief Mourners.—Captain Austen, G. P. Martin, Esq., secretary; and Lieutenant Burdon, flag-lieutenant (bearing several orders and medals, bestowed on the late admiral, on a black velvet cushion).

Then followed a party of sailors; and the procession was brought up by every gentleman, civil and military, at the station.

The affecting service over the grave was rendered more than usually impressive by the attendance of the late admiral's three daughters.

The late Rear-Admiral C. J. Austen, C.B., entered the navy in 1790; was promoted to lieutenant, 1797; commander, 1804; captain, 1810; rear-admiral, 9th Nov., 1846; was midshipman on board the Unicorn at the capture of the French frigate Tribune, in 1796, and of the Endymion, in the attack upon the Dutch 74-gun ship Brutus, and two brigs, in 1797; lieutenant of the Scorpion, at the capture of the Dutch brig of war Courier, and commanded the Bellerophon at the bombardment of St. Jean D'Acre, in 1840, when he received his C.B.

By a singular coincidence, Commodore Lambert had hoisted his first-class broad pendant only the day before the admiral's death. The advantages accruing to that gallant officer by this circumstance are very great, now that he is Acting Naval Commander-in-Chief; and, as one of the first, we are glad to learn that he had promoted Commander Tarleton,—whose services since the first commencement of operations at Rangoon have been of so dashing and gallant a character,—to be his (the Commander's) flag-captain, and Lieut. Rowley Lambert, 1st lieutenant of the Sphinx, to be commander.

The Rattler, it is understood, will leave this place for Madras on the 30th inst., where she will leave Mr. Martin, the late admiral's secretary, who will proceed to England by the next mail with the despatches. The steamer will then return to the scene of action at Rangoon. She has sustained some damage by having been frequently aground in the river, and will have to be docked so soon as she can be spared long enough for the purpose Yours, &c.—Ceylon Times, Nov. 12.

CAPE OF GOOD HOPE.

GRAAFF-REINET.—LOCUSTS.—As yet the town of Graaff-Reinet has escaped this scourge, although the young locusts are within twelve miles. We have been informed that they are lying several inches deep in the streets of Colesberg, and the destruction of every green thing along the road is most complete. The farmers in this neighbourhood are continually occupied in keeping them off the cultivated lands with flags and fires; but it seems quite probable that at least one-fourth of the crops of the district will fall a sacrifice to their voracity. In the Somerset district they are beginning to fly, and their course is said to be towards Colesberg.—Graaff-Reinet Herald, Nov. 10.

The Styx, which came round from Simon's Bay on Thursday last, will leave for Algoa Bay on Wednesday next, whither she is to convey the wives of the soldiers who were left in the barracks here when the men embarked for the frontier. The 73rd regt., which has been in the field since the commencement of the war, may, it is said, be expected here shortly. — Zuid Afrikaan, Nov. 15.

ALLEN'S INDIAN MAIL,

LONDON,

THURSDAY, December 30, 1852.

LONG flourish Patriotism and Philanthropy—especially when there is anything to be got by them. No subject connected with India has furnished more food for pathetic declamation than what is called the Salt Monopoly. Here was a case, as represented, of a Government enriching its treasury to an enormous extent by depriving the greater part of its people of a due supply of one of the prime necessities of life—rioting in the privations and sufferings of the masses—fattening on disease and death, consequent, as these were said to be, on the aforesaid monopoly. What speeches have been delivered on this theme! What pamphlets circulated! The want of salt was the great bane of India; the withholding it the great sin of its rulers. Only let British salt come in, and all would be well. It is true that this would benefit those who manufacture such salt, and those who export it. But of course the beneficent persons who bawled so loudly against the salt monopoly, cared nothing for these things. Pure sympathy with the oppressed people of India, pure hatred of tyranny and oppression—these were their only motives. But whatever their motives, they succeeded in their object, and salt was allowed to be imported into India at a fixed duty. This system has now been tried for some years, and, according to an article in the Bengal Hurkaru, has failed of producing the slightest advantage to the people of India. It is said, indeed, to have operated injuriously for them. The importation is immense; but salt is no cheaper, while those previously engaged in its manufacture are ruined. Their expenditure of the fruits of their earnings has of course ceased, and those who profited by this expenditure have suffered greatly by its withdrawal. Much of the salt imported is said to be of foreign origin; and thus the Cheshire-men have been too cunning for themselves. Their Liverpool coadjutors have done better. Wherever the salt may come from, they will secure a share of the trade; or, indeed, of any other trade. They enriched themselves by the slave-trade, so long as it was legal; and even now it is broadly hinted that they have some millions invested in the traffic, felony though it be to engage in it. So, in the salt affair, they have no doubt managed to get the lion's share of the benefit, while the poor people of India get no share whatever.

EMIGRATION, which has thinned the numbers of the people of Great Britain to such an extent that it is said the population is actually on the decrease, while in Ireland it has half depopulated the country, is at work in India, and in a part reputed to be not much given to movement. It appears, however, to be confined to the class which partake of both European and native blood—a class not apparently marked out by nature for the purpose, as for the most part it is by no means distinguished by adventurous energy; but as men who in Ireland wasted their time and powers in idleness and want, have in America become industrious and thrifty, it is possible that a change of locality and circumstances may effect a like revolution in the habits of the Euracians. One cargo only has as yet been despatched; probably more will follow. The emigrants, before their departure, were entertained at dinner by Sir William Burton, and most of the distinguished personages of Madras (the Governor included) came to see them eat. Some squabbling on the subject has taken place in the local papers; but looking at what has been done as a mere experiment, it appears in this light worth a trial. Those who head the movement are stated to have guarded those whom they patronize against vain notions of leading an easy life at their new home. They are not to expect to live by driving the quill; for which occupation, however, if attainable, we should have thought they were best fitted. We presume not many of them will appear at the diggins. They may, perhaps, supply the places of some of those tempted to abandon their ordinary avocations and sojourn for a while in the country "paved with gold." All the emigrants sign a declaration, of which the following is the concluding paragraph:—"I, the abovenamed —, do acknowledge that the privilege of a passage to Sydney, granted me by the East-India Emigration Society, is allowed on the faith that the above statement is true, and that I am of good character, and that I really go to the colony intending to work for wages, and that I am ready and willing to engage in the above capacity, or in any other for which I am qualified, for reasonable wages in the opinion of the Government agent at Sydney." It may be suspected that the value of this declaration is not great. Suppose on arriving at Sydney the subscriber should repudiate it. Will the emigrant directors forcibly seize the man and carry him back to Madras, or what will be their course? We ask this, not to discourage the attempt, but to point out the uselessness of requiring foolish declarations which a man will adhere to or not as best may suit his purpose.

Few facts in medical statistics are more extraordinary or more appalling than the extension of the visitations of small-pox which late years have witnessed. Half a century ago we flattered ourselves that this mighty enemy of the human race had been vanquished, or speedily would be vanquished, by the discovery of the preventive powers of vaccination.

But even in countries where the practice is resorted to, if not universally, at least all but universally, the foe has reappeared, sacrificing his victims as of old. The matter may be beyond the power of man to explain; but medical research could scarcely be better directed than towards this fearful subject, with a view, if possible, to diminish the amount of human suffering therefrom. While in Europe the ravages of small-pox are not slight, there are parts of the world in which they are actually frightful. According to a correspondent of the Madras Athenæum, Malabar is one of those ill-fated localities. It is stated, that within that collectorate there have occurred, since January last, upwards of 8,000 cases of small-pox, of which no less than 4,000 proved fatal! We mean not to impugn the arrangements made for vaccination in Malabar—we know not what they are; but surely such facts as these above mentioned call for inquiry; and if the result of inquiry should be to indicate deficiency in the means of safety, the adoption of prompt and energetic measures for extending them should follow.

EAST-INDIA HOUSE.

A Quarterly General Court of Proprietors of the East-India Company was held on Wednesday, the 22nd December, 1852, at their House in Leadenhall-street.

Sir J. W. Hogg, Bart. (Chairman), in the chair.

The minutes of the last Court were read.

The Chairman informed the Court that the following papers had been laid on the table:—

An account of the superannuations granted since the last Quarterly Court.

Also a Report of the Select Committee of the House of Commons on the East-India Company's Charter, and a copy of the evidence.

Also copy of a Report of the Commission appointed to investigate certain charges against Ali Moorad, Ameer of Kyrpoore, in Upper Scinde.

The Chairman then announced that the warrants for the payment of the half-yearly dividend would be ready for delivery on Thursday the 6th January next.

THE COLLEGE AT ADDISCOMBE.

Captain McGregor reminded the Court that on the 24th March last, he moved for and obtained certain papers relating to the Military College at Addiscombe. He then explained that his object was to furnish grounds of submitting a case why the cost of education at Addiscombe should be reduced in favour of the sons of Indian officers, and that a graduated scale of charge, according to the rank and means of the father, might be established in substitution for the present uniform rate. It appears that, calculated on the average of the last four years, the cost to the Company for each cadet is 149*l.* 15*s.* 7*d.* of which he has to pay 123*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.* so that the excess expenditure per cadet borne on the public accounts averages the sum of 25*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.* The amount of this excess is not objected to, seeing the great public purpose in view, though it may be thought that it might be less, or that more should be got for it in return, but it is desired to confine attention to the amount shown to be paid by the family of the cadet to the Company. That amount, large as it is, when compared with the means of many of those who have to meet it, is still considerably under the actual charge which they incur. It represents merely the requirements of nine months of the year. The expenses of the lad during holidays, his travelling to and from college, his plain clothing, &c. must swell the amount to an average of 160*l.* a-year. How is this to be met by the widow receiving for her son perhaps no more than 40*l.* and that to cease on his completing his sixteenth year, when, in most cases, he would still be at Addiscombe? How is this to be met by the retired officer on his pension, or by the regimental officer, except in the higher ranks, unless they have besides private means, or personal friends to assist them? It cannot be done without debt or difficulty to themselves, and possibly to the cadet, which may be a burden to them all for years. In March last, two instances were mentioned; one where a debt of 250*l.* was incurred, and the other where a lad, promising well for the Engineers, was obliged to leave Addiscombe, solely from the charges there being in excess of the means of his family. These circumstances bring me almost naturally to the consideration of the very different treatment these lads would have experienced at Sandhurst and at Woolwich. At Sandhurst, the following classes and rates of payment prevail. 1st. Sons of all officers in the army under field-officers, including surgeons and paymasters, and all orphans of officers of whatever rank, who have died in the service, and are found to have left families in pecuniary distress, 40*l.* a-year. 2nd. Sons of regimental field-officers, 50*l.* a-year; sons of colonels and lieutenants, colonels having corps, 70*l.* a-year; sons of all general officers, 80*l.* a-year. 3rd. Sons of private gentlemen, 125*l.* a-year. And, as regards Woolwich, the scale of payments to be made by the friends of cadets is still more liberal, inasmuch as for the sons of officers who have died in the service, and whose families are proved to be left in pecuniary distress, only 20*l.* a-year is charged, and there being also connected with the Woolwich academy a training school, under the sanction and control of the Master-General of the Ordnance, where nearly the same financial arrangements obtain as at Woolwich. It may be stated, that for boys of the best class in the Woolwich scale, that class which corresponds most with the circumstances of those whose cause is now advocated, their education, from the age of eleven years upwards, may be conducted at the rate above mentioned, of 20*l.* a-year. Allowing for extras not included in the above rate, it would appear that the expense at Woolwich may not be more than one-fourth of what it must be at Addiscombe. It was answered on the former occasion, that the Directors had the power, and frequently exercised it, of giving direct appointments in cases of necessity. The existence of such a power is well known, and it is very creditable to exercise it as alleged; but while it is a mitigation, it is also an admission of the evil complained of. But the hardship remains as before as regards those in whose favour it is not, indeed, for want of means cannot be exercised, who are obliged to take an Addiscombe appointment because they cannot get any other. And even as to those who are relieved, there is nothing new or peculiar in the benefit. It exists elsewhere. In the royal army, when the privileged classes at Sandhurst, those on the reduced scale, are full, and applications for admission exceed probable vacancies, the sons of old officers may, and often do, get esignicacies at once, or without going to the military college at all. Their immediate commission is equivalent to the Company's direct appointment. It was also urged that the allowances received by the Company's officers in India were on a much more liberal scale, and therefore, they were much better able to pay for their sons than officers in H.M.'s service. But in that part of the royal army serving in India, the regimental officers receive precisely the same local allowance, and therefore, have just the same means of meeting the cost of education of their sons as the Company's officers. Generally speaking, too, the superiority of Indian allowances is only the measure of and compensation for the disadvantages inseparable from Indian service, as occasioned by the necessities of climate and the established social scale and style of living, the increased risk of health, and long exile from Europe. Subalterns are not better off in India than elsewhere. Married captains cannot afford 160*l.* a year for a son at home; still less can their widows. But these ranks, after allowing for staff absentees, comprise more than one-half of the service, and they also furnish more than one-half of the widows. From another remark which followed from the same quarter it seems, however, that the subject had not escaped the notice of the Directors, that it has been several times under consideration; but after weighing the advantages and objections of such an alteration at Addiscombe, it was determined that the objections to it were more weighty than the benefits to be derived from it. It was not mentioned what were the objections, and therefore, they could only be conjectured. But it were useless to waste time by anticipating objections which may never be made, or combatting apprehensions which may not be entertained. It has always been your boast, and certainly a most laudable one, where true, that you are more liberal to your own army than other states are to theirs. You are not now asked to be more liberal to your own officers; but to be at least as considerate to them as you find that, in that respect, others are to theirs. The cost may be reimbursed by your adoption of the rules and rates which exist at Woolwich and at Sandhurst, for the sons of private gentlemen, namely, that you should require from this class the same payment at Addiscombe to which they are subjected at the two other places named—viz., 125*l.* a year for the future, instead of 100*l.* as heretofore. If that increased rate be applied to this class at Addiscombe, and if it be supposed that this class constitute only one-half of the 150 cadets—in June, 1851, the proportion appears to have been more—namely, as 89 to 57; and in December, 1851, as 80 to 69; you would then have 75 paying 125*l.* a year, and 75 paying only 75*l.* a year, without entailing any additional expense on yourselves, and with a great relief to the latter class. Nay, more, as there must always be a considerable proportion of the effective class of your Indian servants, whose sons are cadets at Addiscombe, who can, from their still serving in or having the privilege of returning to India, in the higher ranks, well afford to pay the present rate, as the number of these well circumstanced may without any severity be increased by retired civilians, and, in some cases, by retired officers of other branches, as also there will be instances where the widows or families of deceased civilians and others may still be sufficiently well off to meet the present charges, you may continue those charges in those cases, in order that you may be able still further to reduce the cost to those on whom even 75*l.* a year, with the heavy unavoidable extras, will be a severe tax. If you agree to act thus, it is believed that you will be able without any augmentation of the public charge to make the maximum cost for the sons of your less fortunate officers only 50*l.* a year; and doing so, you would thus have at Addiscombe four classes of payments; viz., of 125*l.*, 100*l.*, 75*l.*, and 50*l.* a year. These progressive payments might easily be regulated according to a graduated scale of ranks. In nineteen cases out of twenty the incomes of Indian officers, whether effective or retired, at home or in India, are already ascertained; no arbitrary or inquisitorial research is necessary for the purpose. The like general knowledge of the means of widows exists, so that in their cases also no objectionable test need be applied. It will be sufficient that as an auxiliary regulation, the Directors should have the power, where they see fit, of instituting an inquiry into the means of a service candidate, which may be such as to disentitle him on the compassionate grounds, by which it is sought to recommend the change for adoption, from being placed in the class which the mere rank of his father might indicate. If necessary, he should be placed at the present highest rate of payment, or at any intermediate one deemed to be more suitable; but the cases where any such preliminary inquiry would be required must be very rare, and as to the mode of inquiry, the simple affirmation of the parent or guardian, as to the extent of means available for the maintenance and education of the lad, should be accepted as sufficient for the purpose. Where deception should be practised, it would not, improbably, be discovered sooner or later, and penalties might then attach to such misconduct as would prevent its recurrence in similar subsequent cases. It will be observed that the increase of 25*l.* per annum for the sons of private gentlemen merely raises the rate for that class to what prevails at both the Royal Military Colleges, and which the sons of officers of the Indian Army pay there equally with all others. But it is not sought to apply against the sons of officers of H. M.'s Service the principle of regarding them as the sons of private gentlemen, and thus subjecting them to the maximum charge. It is submitted that there should be no difference of treatment whatever between the two services, not even a restriction of the benefit of the reduced scale of payments to those officers who are actually serving in India. The more liberal course can be no loss, if the main point be attended to of seeing that at least a moiety of the Addiscombe cadets belong to the class which can afford to pay the highest rate. The subject may be dismissed with a remark of some consequence derived from a comparison of the payments made by parents into the Company's treasury for sons at Haileybury and at Addiscombe respectively. The fact is one with which the Directors are probably familiar, but to the proprietors at large, it will probably come as new and unexpected, namely, that while the receipts for the cadet are shown to average the yearly sum of 123*l.* 16*s.* 4*d.*, those for the young writer are 118*l.* 1*s.* 9*d.*, for the year ending at Midsummer last, showing an excess from the former of 5*l.* 14*s.* 7*d.* Items are included in the cadet's payments which are not provided for the writer, but the circumstance is of much importance, seeing that the excess of expense to the Company for such cadet beyond his payments is on the average only 25*l.* 19*s.* 2*d.*, while for each writer it is not less than 157*l.* 13*s.* 9*d.* a year. The honourable proprietor concluded with the following motion:—

"That, in accordance with a principle which obtains at the Royal Military Colleges of Woolwich and Sandhurst, it be recommended to the Honourable the Court of Directors to establish at Addiscombe a graduated scale of payments for Cadets, reducing the charge for the sons of Indian officers proportionably to the ascertained means of parents, provided that the same can be effected without increased charge to the East-India Company."

Colonel Dickenson seconded the motion, and referred to Marlborough College, and also to Eton, as illustrations in point.

The Chairman.—I beg to assure the honourable and gallant proprietor that the proposition which he has submitted to the Court has received, and will receive, due consideration from the Court of Directors. I am quite sure that the motives which have induced the honourable proprietor to make this suggestion to the Court are very creditable to himself; but however creditable the motive, or however plausible the principle which the honourable proprietor has announced, I declare, after listening to the honourable proprietor's statement, I came to the conclusion that he himself felt utterly bewildered and incapable of working it out in detail. There is no institution I should feel more pleasure in having prominently brought before the public than the institution at Addiscombe. I feel obliged to any honourable member who affords me the opportunity of speaking of that institution, because I believe that if there is any institution in this country that has pre-eminently answered its purposes, that institution is Addiscombe. It is within my own knowledge, that the heads of the departments at Woolwich and at Sandhurst, who favour that institution twice a year with their presence, invariably express their admiration at the manner in which it is conducted. Now I do beg the honourable member to bear in mind that however anxious he may be to support the claims of the Indian officers, it will not do for him, or for the Court of Directors, with regard to an institution maintained to a considerable extent by the public funds, to attempt to make that institution in its appearance exclusively an Indian institution. Anxious as we are to consult the interests of the Indian officers, we must not lose sight of the claims of the public at large. The Indian empire was not established for the exclusive benefit of those who conquered, or of those who govern it. The government of India was entrusted to the East-India Company because their management was considered to work well for the public good; and while great liberality has been shown, and I hope will continue to be shown, to the Indian public services, civil and military, I hope we shall never forget that the public at large have a claim to participate in the patronage of India. If we were to attempt to establish a contrary principle, the voice of public opinion would be justly raised against us, not only in this country, but throughout all India. The institution has always engaged the anxious consideration of the Court of Directors, and some such scale of expenses as has been suggested—a scale proportioned to the means of the parents of the cadet—has repeatedly been under the consideration of the Court. It has been viewed in every possible light in which it could be placed, and a member of the Court, entertaining a strong feeling on the subject at one time, made a motion in the same direction as that of the honourable proprietor, but after repeated discussion and consideration, the plan was abandoned as surrounded with difficulties, and more than this, as open to the objection of being injurious to the public service. Now, the foundation of the scheme of the honourable proprietor is this, that you should proportion the sum to be paid for each cadet according to the means and competency of the parents. I really do say that would be not merely difficult, but absolutely impracticable. By the adoption of such a plan, you would be establishing a scrutiny into the means of individuals that would not be submitted to. It is not a plan that proposes that a subaltern, an ensign, a captain, or a major, should pay so much, and those of a superior grade should pay so much; but the plan is that the amount of payment shall depend upon the competency of the parent. Now look at the working of such a plan. It may be that an improvident colonel may be so encumbered with debt and difficulty, as to be unable to pay the modicum required for his son's education; whereas, a prudent captain or a subaltern, who has taken care for those whom he has been instrumental in bringing into the world, may be able to provide for them; so that you would in fact be establishing a sort of premium for the improvident and the reckless. The hon. gentleman does not appear to attach any great importance to what I say. It will be for the Court to say, whether what I urge, practically is or is not the case. You would have to inquire in each individual case, whether the party was or was not able to pay the sum required. But the hon. proprietor appears to forget that the child must be educated somewhere; if not at Addiscombe, he must be educated somewhere else. If the hon. gentleman has two sons, and sends one to a private institution and the other to Addiscombe, he would know what the expenses were at each; and if the private institution was of that character to which a gentleman would send his son to be prepared to pass the required tests, my opinion is that he would find the expenses approximate very nearly to those at Addiscombe. The costs of Addiscombe, it should be remembered, are not covered by the contributions of the cadets. Supposing the Court of Directors should to a considerable extent give appointments to Addiscombe to persons in a subordinate grade in the service, or entitled to claim the proposed remission, what would be the result? It would be this, that you would place it in the power of those who had patronage to throw the expenses at Addiscombe almost exclusively upon the state; if the 150 youths educated there were of the grade that paid the least amount, you would convert the institution into a class institution, where the sons of Indian officers would be educated chiefly at the public expense. The hon. gentleman has made a comparison between the treatment of the officers of the Indian army and that experienced by the officers in her Majesty's service. It is not judicious to make any such comparisons. I would ask him, does he wish that the condition and allowances to the officers of the Indian army should be assimilated generally to the condition and allowances to the officers in the Queen's service? I hope that argument is not to be pushed so far; and if it be not, let me impress upon him and upon the friends of the Indian army not to bring forward comparisons tending to show that the Indian officer is placed in a worse position than the Queen's officer. With respect to the allowances at Woolwich and at Sandhurst, and the observations of the hon. proprietor upon that subject, I reply, that if any officer has the misfortune to fall in the field, or is compelled to resign, surely, I need not tell him that there is not a branch of the service that has not a liberal institution for the support of the widows, and for granting allowances to children. And those institutions are not entirely supported by the contributions from the services themselves; the support given by the state is very large. I do conscientiously believe that there is no Indian officer of moderate prudence who is not in a condition to support a son at Addiscombe, and who would not be most thankful to have the opportunity of doing so. Let me assure the hon. proprietor that he will never get the public to concur with him. They will tell him that he ought not to draw upon the public purse to make up for the want of prudence on the part of the Indian officer, who might be in a condition of independence if he had exercised it. The seconder of the motion adverted to other institutions; but those are institutions established by the will of the founders. If the hon. proprietor should found an institution, he can annex to it his own conditions. He can say it shall be for the benefit of some particular class, or persons coming from some particular country, as he may choose. But with regard to Addiscombe, the case is different. Addiscombe was not founded for the benefit of the Indian army, but for the benefit of India itself—to supply fit and proper persons for the public service in that great portion of the British empire. I love the Indian army too well to leave its interests undefended, and I do not wish Addiscombe to be placed in a false position before the public. What would be said if they were to send the sons of Indian officers to Addiscombe, at a reduced charge, while they at the same time required the sons of professional men in civil life, whose widows might be left with very moderate means, to pay a large one? The hon. gentleman believes that the Court of Directors, in their distribution of patronage, do take into consideration the circumstances of those to whom they give Addiscombe appointments, and that they are only given to those who can afford to bear the expenses. Does he not see how his plan would tend to destroy that salutary system. It would take away the caution and consideration now exercised altogether. The Directors would have the power of causing the sons of the Indian officers to be educated at the public expense—a power which, if they possessed it, I hope would never be abused, but a power which it would not be wise to place in the hands of any body of men, because it would be most liable to be abused. I repeat my assurance to the hon. proprietor, that this subject has been as fully considered as any subject could be, not once or twice, but repeatedly, and considered with the desire of making the institution answer the purpose for which it was originally established, always bearing in mind the just and fair claims of the Indian service. I am sorry the hon. proprietor should have instituted a comparison between Addiscombe and Hayleybury; I am the more sorry because, after making it, he seemed to be satisfied that there was no reason for it. When the hon. proprietor should have a son at Addiscombe and another at Hayleybury, he would be able to form an estimate of the two establishments. I am happy to say that there are no institutions in England where there are, in reference to the number, so many men of eminence and distinction. I hope the hon. proprietor will feel satisfied with having discharged his duty, and with the assurance that every consideration will be given to his suggestion.

Mr. Lewin spoke briefly, and thought it unnecessary to keep up peculiar institutions for education, though he had not the smallest doubt that, as far as Addiscombe was concerned, the pupils did receive a first-rate education.

Mr. Grant, after the discussion which had taken place, deemed it quite clear that a difficulty existed in carrying out the proposition of the hon. proprietor, which, moreover, he thought uncalled for: as he supposed that not more than one-third of the cadets went through Addiscombe. Making that establishment a class institution, as proposed, would, in his opinion, be equivalent to destroying it altogether.

Mr. Doveton wished to be informed whether the salaries paid at Addiscombe were included in the returns laid before Parliament, or not.

The Chairman.—They are.

Mr. Doveton expressed his satisfaction.

Captain M'Gregor, in reply, said he regretted he had not the same facility of expressing his sentiments as the hon. chairman possessed. But with regard to what had fallen from him, he (Captain M'Gregor) did not conceive that it was at all close to the question. Four-fifths of the arguments used amounted generally to this, that Sandhurst and Woolwich, where a system had been for years in successful operation, were bad institutions, and did not produce the same results as the Addiscombe institution did. (No! no!)

The Chairman.—I never made such a statement as that; and I trust it will not go to the public that I did. I appeal to all of you whether anything like it was said by me. (No! no!)

Captain M'Gregor would put it in another way. The hon. chairman said he thought the introduction of a change would be prejudicial to Addiscombe and to the Indian service, and to the whole of India. Now, if this would be the effect of the introduction at Addiscombe of the same system as was adopted at Woolwich and Sandhurst, would it not be admitted as an inference that an imputation was in a degree cast upon that system? (No, no.) If they adopted an increased scale upon the sons of private gentlemen, they would save the sum proposed to be reduced. It was objected to, that it involved, what had been expressly disclaimed, an inquisitorial inquiry into the circumstances of families. That would not be at all necessary with regard to the sons of private gentlemen; and with regard to the other parties, their circumstances would be pretty well known already. The hon. proprietor concluded by requesting that he might be furnished with a statement of the items constituting the salaries and wages at Addiscombe.

The Chairman said the hon. proprietor must confine himself entirely to the motion before the Court. He had just introduced altogether new matter without notice.

Captain M'Gregor said he would bow to the chair.

The Chairman.—Does the hon. proprietor withdraw his motion?

Captain M'Gregor.—I leave it entirely with the Court.

Mr. Weeding.—I think the motion should not be withdrawn, but should be put and negatived.

The motion was put and negatived.

ALI MOORAD, AMEER OF KHYRPORE.

Col. Dickenson rose to move, in pursuance of notice—

"That copies of the Report of the Commission which was appointed, in 1850-51, by the Governor-General of India, to investigate certain charges against Ali Moorad, Ameer of Khyrpoor, in Upper Scinde, and of the Minutes thereon by the Indian Government, also of the Report on Scinde by Sir George Clerk, late Governor of Bombay, be laid before the Court of Proprietors."

The Chairman.—I beg to inform the hon. proprietor that all the papers for which he is about to move have already been rendered to the House of Commons, and are now before the Court of Proprietors.

Col. Dickenson was proceeding to state his reasons for bringing forward the motion, when

Mr. Ayrton rose to order, and submitted that as the papers now asked for were on the table, the object of the motion was answered.

The Chairman.—The hon. proprietor (Col. Dickenson) must be aware of the usages and forms of that assembly, which we endeavour in our proceedings to follow; and that when any member of the House of Commons is informed that the papers for which he is about to move will be granted, it is not usual for such member to address any observations to the House. If the object of the mover is to discuss the contents, then it is usual to have that discussion at a subsequent period. All the papers included in the hon. proprietor's motion have been laid before the proprietors, with one exception. It is my duty to state that exception. The exception is the report on Scinde by Sir George Clerk, late Governor of Bombay. Ministers having thought fit to refuse the production of that report at present, I am quite sure the hon. proprietor will not urge the Court of Directors to produce it. It is not usual for the Court of Proprietors to require the production of a document which her Majesty's minister has felt it his duty to refuse to Parliament.

Col. Dickenson said, when he gave notice of his motion the papers were not before the public—many had not yet seen them, and few would read them; he therefore thought it hard to be prevented stating his reasons for moving for these papers.

The Chairman.—The hon. proprietor will allow me to state again that every single document, with the exception of Sir G. Clerk's report, is before the proprietors. It is our duty to lay before this Court all papers which have been laid before parliament. Those were the only papers laid before parliament a week ago. He is quite correct in stating that when he gave notice of his motion the papers were not before parliament.

Col. Dickenson suggested that the very document omitted might be a necessary link in the chain of evidence.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee implored the hon. mover not to inflict a speech on the Court.

Col. Sykes.—The hon. proprietor has moved for papers. The chairman informs him that they are upon the table, and it is perfectly competent for him to notice them next court. All the papers are granted with the exception of Sir G. Clerk's report on Scinde. I have read that paper, and I see nothing in it to prevent the Government granting it to Parliament at the proper time. But it would not be courteous at the present moment for the proprietors to compel the Court of Directors to produce that document.

Mr. Lewin and Mr. Sullivan objected to the decision of the chairman.

The Chairman.—What I stated was that the minute of Sir G. Clerk had been refused to the House of Commons by the ministry of the day, and I therefore thought it inexpedient and imprudent that its production should be urged by this Court. This Court has the power and privilege of calling for all papers in possession of the Court of Directors. It is a valuable power, and a valuable privilege, and one which I hope will always be maintained; and it is because I know its value I wish it to be exercised with discretion, so as not to endanger its existence.

Mr. Sullivan again pressed for the production of the paper withheld from Parliament.

Col. Dickenson thought the course taken by the hon. chairman calculated to raise suspicions in the mind that there were statements in the document withheld which ought not to see the light. He considered that the proceedings on the part of the chairman would give a great shock to the independence of the Court.

The Chairman.—I assure this Court that while I have the honour of presiding in this chair, I shall endeavour to do my duty to the East-India Company, whose chairman I have the honour of being, as well as that of my colleagues in the direction. I may also say that when a gentleman gets up to make a motion for papers, the production of which has already been made, I should be ashamed of myself if I gave that gentleman the trouble of making, or the proprietors the trouble of listening to a long speech, in requesting that that might be done which has been done a week before. If that is a breach of duty I plead guilty. It is quite competent for the hon. proprietor to move for the paper withheld from Parliament if he please; but I told him that the paper had been moved for in the House of Commons, and that the minister of the Crown had stated that, in his opinion, it ought not to be produced. And, unless under extreme circumstances, I do not consider it my duty to state that that is right to be done, which the minister of the day, upon full consideration, and in accordance with the opinion of the Cabinet, has stated ought not to be done. To call for the paper withheld from the House of Commons it would be putting this Court into a state of conflict with the ministers—a conflict from which I shall never shrink when circumstances may make it necessary, but one which I shall never advise the Court unnecessarily to provoke.

After some observations from Mr. Sullivan,

The Chairman said the hon. and gallant colonel will make his motion or withdraw it, whichever he pleases.

Col. Dickenson entered, in considerable detail, into the events in Scinde to which his motion related, and concluded by moving for the production of the Report of Sir George Clerk, in addition to the other evidence already produced.

Mr. Sullivan seconded the motion.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee hoped that the motion would be withdrawn; if not, that it would be rejected by a large majority.

After a few words from a proprietor,

Mr. Ayrton defended the conduct of the chairman, and recommended that the motion should not be suffered to be withdrawn, but be decidedly rejected.

Mr. Grant inquired whether the document was kept back permanently or only temporarily?

The Chairman.—The hon. proprietor has asked me a question. Now it must be obvious that I cannot explain here what may be passing elsewhere. One who presides at public meetings has quite enough to do who makes his mind up as to what is passing in the present, without being required to speak of what may happen in the future. The question now before the Court is, whether the report of Sir G. Clerk is now to be produced or not. I cannot take upon myself to answer as to what determination may be arrived at by the authorities, either at the West-end or here, at a future time.

Mr. Lewin made a few remarks in favour of the motion, and

Mr. John Cook against it.

In answer to a question from Mr. Sullivan,

The Chairman said the paper was not in the secret department. The motion was then put and negatived.

THE SURVEY DEPARTMENT IN INDIA.

Colonel Dickenson said he had given notice of moving the following resolution:—

"That some improved organisation of the survey department in India, and of the mapping office in this country, is urgently called for, for making expedient to the public, in a more convenient form, and with greater expedition than heretofore, the stores of statistical data and geographical delineations with which, there is reason to believe, the records of Government have been long enriched; also for securing to the public, by means of more systematic and timely publication, the advantages of the surveys still in progress, and of those which may be hereafter undertaken in our own territories, as well as in those of our allies."

But he had since seen the maps of Mr. Walker and of the Surveyor-General, and the hon. proprietor was understood to say the inspection of them had given him satisfaction.

The Chairman.—I believe those two maps will realize everything the hon. proprietor can wish; and I think the hon. proprietor will see that he has been anticipated, and that everything he can ask has been done. I think he will see that the map prepared by Mr. Walker combines clearness with a fulness of detail. The hon. proprietor has also seen the map prepared by the Surveyor-General, and I am glad to hear from him that both maps have afforded him satisfaction.

The motion was then withdrawn.

ELECTION OF DIRECTORS.

Mr. Lewin then rose to move the following resolution:—

"That this Court is of opinion that the privilege of election of Directors of the East-India Company should be extended to parties holding Stock of the Government of India."

The hon. proprietor said that he had lost his papers, and should therefore not detain the Court at any length. It is known to most of the proprietors that there are proprietors of stock in India as well as in England, and his reason for wishing to extend the privilege of voting at the elections of directors to those parties is simply this,—that those persons, being resident in India, are better acquainted with India, and have a greater interest in the welfare of India, than the proprietors of stock in this country. Formerly, when it took a year to communicate with India, there might be some reason why those parties should be excluded; but now, when they could get at votes within five or six weeks from thence, there existed no reason why they should be excluded, while there was every other reason in favour of receiving them.

Colonel Dickenson seconded the motion.

Mr. Ayrton said, it was this notice which drew him to the court for the first time. Of all persons in the world the proprietors were the very last who should raise such a discussion as this; let not any proprietor propose to give up the charter. He would ask the hon. proprietor to withdraw his motion.

Mr. Serjeant Gazelee saw this preliminary objection to the proposal, that the parties to be admitted must necessarily vote by proxy. Some great houses would manage to get all the proxies, and the present constituency would be swamped. Unless proxies could be got rid of, nothing should induce me to support the motion.

Mr. Arbutnot was inclined to concur in the request that the motion should be withdrawn, as there was no probability of the motion being carried by the Court of Proprietors, nor was it the most suitable place in which to bring it forward.

Mr. Sullivan concurred with Mr. Arbutnot.

The Chairman.—May I add my request to the hon. proprietor to withdraw his motion? I should be very sorry that a proposal should be made in this Court, and recommended by them, which would have the direct tendency of swamping the whole of the proprietors in this country. If such a proposal is to be adopted, let it come from some superior authority. Do not let the proprietors themselves propose such a suicidal motion as that of extending the franchise to all the holders of stock in India. Besides, it would not be becoming of the Court of Proprietors to make such a proposal. It would be almost contrary to parliamentary authority that you should be annihilated as a body, even with your own consent, which would unquestionably be the case, if the proposal were carried out. Give votes to all the natives of India possessing stock! Why, what would become of the mere handful of proprietors here? You would cease to exist, to any practical purpose. The House of Commons would be more considerate for your interests than to assent to any such measure. If you read the evidence already given before the committee, you will find there is one dominant opinion prevailing, that if such a proposal as this were adopted, you would completely swamp the East-India proprietors. Not only would a system of proxies be introduced, but the proposed extension would entirely put an end to what hitherto, rightly or wrongly, has been considered the privileges of those proprietors. But, after all, the question is one which properly belongs to Parliament. If this discussion is to take place, I think it is better that it should take place there. I hope the hon. proprietor will withdraw his motion, and not let it go forth to the world that it has been deliberately debated in this court, whether they should continue to be a constituent body of the Government of India, or whether that power should be brought entirely to an end.

Mr. Lewin admitted that the system of proxies was a point which did not suggest itself to his mind; but he did not understand why proxies in India should be worse than in this country. The extension of the principle of representation would be most valuable to India.

The Chairman.—Do you withdraw your motion?

Mr. Lewin.—Oh! no, certainly not.

The question was then put, and negatived.

REPRESENTATION OF INDIA IN PARLIAMENT—DISCUSSION OF THE CHARTER.

Mr. Lewin rose to submit the following motion:—

"That this Court is of opinion that an opportunity should be afforded to the natives of India of being heard by their representatives in the discussion about to take place in Parliament relative to the renewal of the Charter of the East-India Company."

Mr. Lewin alleged, that although the most able men had been brought to support the Charter as it exists, the witnesses had no practical experience. In noticing Indian affairs since 1813, he complained of the monopoly which lasted till the last Charter Act, of the want of an appeal by the people of India, of the former restrictions on the press, of the bad accommodation on board steam-vessels, of the neglect of education at Madras, of the incompetence of the persons sent out to India as governors, and of the tobacco monopoly,—urging, on those grounds, the absolute necessity of the people of India having some representatives in Parliament to watch over and advocate their interests.

Mr. M'Gregor seconded the motion, observing, however, that he did not go along with all the observations made by the hon. proprietor. He thought there were abuses in India which required correction, but the general result is satisfactory.

Mr. Weeding said that he had come to this conclusion, that the best representative of the people of India is the Court of Directors of the East-India Company. They have ever been ready to advocate the interests of the people of India, and he hoped this Court will consider that they are the only proper persons to be intrusted with that power.

Mr. Ayrton thought that the hon. gentleman who spoke last had suggested the men who should be considered the representatives of India.

The Chairman condemned the language held by the mover towards individuals holding high situations, with which he himself was once connected, and he could not allow it to be stated that scarcely anybody had been examined before the committee of the House of Commons who had any practical experience in India. It was exactly the reverse. [The Chairman here read the names of several gentlemen who had been examined before the committee.] Then as to the motion itself. The hon. gentleman who spoke last has stated some of the prominent difficulties as to who were to call themselves the representatives of the people of India. The committee are willing to receive all information relative to the subject-matter referred to them which may be tendered by competent persons, and it would be scarcely decent in us to dictate to the House of Commons the course they should adopt.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee thought the motion a proper one, and that it had been brought forward at a proper time. He did hope that, as the Court had negatived all the motions yet brought forward to-day, they would at least support the present one.

Col. Sykes wished to suggest a practical difficulty in the solution of this question. What is the present question? It is an abstract proposition that the people of India should make their case known through the medium of their representatives. If you negative this proposition, and thereby declare that the people should not be heard by their representatives, you place every well-wisher of India in a false position; and if you come to an affirmative vote, who are to be the representatives? Certainly not European delegates. Those are not the parties who are competent to represent the feelings, habits, prejudices, hopes, and expectations of the people of India. Then who are to come? Not the educated man, 'Young India,' who had been taught to spout Shakspeare and smatter the languages. Those persons do not represent the people of India. There are some young men in Bombay who meet together secretly to eat beefsteaks and drink strong liquors; and these are the very parties who would be likely to come here. Is it upon them you would rely? Would it not be much better, then, to leave the matter to the committee of the House of Commons, and let them call upon anybody they like. They may call upon European residents, or upon this 'Young India,' but if they look to the real benefit of India, they must go elsewhere.

On this occasion, the previous question will furnish a proper mode of disposing of this motion.

The Chairman.—I shall feel it my duty to move the previous question.

Mr. Sullivan, while favourable to the motion, did not think it at this moment advisable to bring it before the Court, but would rather wait till the whole subject of India was further in advance.

Mr. Arbutnot was prepared to vote for the motion.

Mr. Lewin having replied,

The Chairman inquired if he withdrew his motion?

Mr. Lewin.—I do not withdraw it.

The Chairman.—Then to avoid the inconvenience which has been pointed out by my hon. colleagues (Col. Sykes), I shall feel it my duty to move the previous question. Unless I do so I am afraid we shall not see our way out of the difficulty before we shall see our way out of the Charter; for our Charter expires within fourteen months. I repeat that if any gentleman wished to be heard before the committee on behalf of the natives of India, I do not believe that the committee would refuse to hear him; but I think it would be injudicious for this Court to prescribe any course which the committee ought to pursue. I now beg leave to move the previous question.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee suggested that this was out of order.

The Chairman.—I concluded my speech by expressing my hope that the hon. gentleman would withdraw his motion, and I could not move the previous question until I had ascertained whether he would do so or not.

The previous question was then put, and the result being fatal to the original motion, it was not put from the chair.

ADVOCATE-GENERAL OF INDIA.

Mr. Serjt. Gazelee inquired whether Mr. Prinsep had been appointed Advocate-General of India?

The Chairman.—He has.

NOTICE OF MOTION.

Mr. Lewin gave notice of the following motion for next court-day:—"That the practice of advertising a list of names by the Court of Directors of persons whom they recommend for election, on the occasion of a certain number retiring by rotation from the direction, be discontinued."

The Court then adjourned.

THE NEW INDIA, CHINA, AND AUSTRALIA MAIL SERVICE.

(From The Times.)

Southampton, Monday, Dec. 27.

THE Peninsular and Oriental Company's steam ship Eurine, Capt. F. Meehan, took her departure this afternoon for Malta and Marseilles, between which ports she is, in conjunction with the steamer Sultan, about to take up her station in conveying the mails under terms of the new contract concluded between the Admiralty and the Peninsular and Oriental Steam Navigation Company, which comes into operation next month.

The general features of the new scheme have already been made known to the public through the columns of this journal. The difference between the new and the old arrangements consists mainly in the acceleration of speed that is to be introduced into the whole of the operations of the company, as well as that a double instead of a single trunk line of steam communication, semi-monthly in place of monthly, is to be maintained between Southampton, India, and China, and a branch packet, in correspondence with the main line, is to run every two months between Singapore and Australia, thus affording, via Singapore, six communications each way yearly between England and the Australian colonies. Besides this, the Malta and Marseilles portion of the mail service, heretofore performed by Government steamers, will be accomplished by vessels of the Peninsular and Oriental Company.

The details connected with the extended service, which have recently been published, are very voluminous. According to the arrangements therein made, the India and China mails are to be despatched from Southampton on the 4th and 20th of every month, but there will be no outward mail on the 4th of January, the scheme only taking effect from the 20th proximo inclusive. The first homeward India and China mail, under the new contract, will be due at Southampton on the 20th February. The schedules of routes and distances published by the Peninsular and Oriental Company subdivide the intended operations into four distinct lines and one branch line, viz. :—

- No. 1. Southampton to Gibraltar, Malta, and Alexandria.
2. Suez to Aden, Ceylon, Madras, and Calcutta.
3. Bombay to Ceylon and China, via Singapore.
4. Singapore to Sydney.

The branch line is from Marseilles to Malta.

The first mail for England, under the new contract, will leave Hong-Kong on the 28th of December, and Calcutta on the 6th of January. The time to be occupied to the various ports from the date of departure from Southampton, including all stoppages, is estimated as follows:—Gibraltar, 5 days; Malta, 10; Alexandria, 14; Suez, 17; Aden, 22; Ceylon, 34; Madras, 38; Calcutta, 42; Penang, 40; Singapore, 42; Hong-Kong, 50; Batavia, 46; King George's Sound, 58; Adelaide, 64; Port Phillip, 67; and Sydney, 70 days.

There will be no alteration in regard to the dates of despatch of the Marseilles portion of the mails from London, but by the mail of the 8th of every month there will be a direct communication with Calcutta, and also with the Straits and China, thus affording, by way of Marseilles, a fortnightly postal service between England and the whole of the ports embraced in the scheme, in place of a monthly one.

The first mail under this contract for the Australian ports, viz.—King George's Sound, Adelaide, Port Phillip, and Sydney, will be despatched from Southampton on the 4th of March (from London via Marseilles on the 8th), and will be forwarded from Singapore by a steamer leaving that port on the 16th of April. The subsequent mails for Australia, by means of this company's steamers, will be despatched on the 4th of every alternate month thereafter, and as the departures of the Royal Australian Mail steamers via the Cape are arranged for the intervening months, there will be, by the agency of the joint services, a monthly steam communication to and from England and the several Australian ports. The first homeward contract mail will leave Sydney on the 20th of January, to catch the China steamer at Singapore, the mails by which will be due at Southampton on the 6th of April next.

Besides these widely-extended operations of the contract mail service, the company proposes to establish immediately a line of steamers between Calcutta and China for commercial purposes, and not under contract for the conveyance of mails. These vessels, after arriving at Hong-Kong, will proceed to Shanghai and the northern ports of China, making two trips between Hong-Kong and those ports every month.

In combination with the large increase of the proposed operations of this enterprising company, and the increased facilities for travelling by the overland route, we understand that a considerable reduction is to be made in the tariffs of freight and passage-money, commencing with the ensuing year, the passage money hereafter being fixed as follows:—To Aden, 70*l.*; Bombay, 95*l.*; Ceylon, 95*l.*; Madras, 100*l.*; Calcutta, 105*l.*; Penang, 105*l.*; Singapore, 110*l.*; Batavia, 120*l.*; Hong-Kong, 130*l.*

The new service will be opened on the 20th of January by the departure of the Indus (which vessel has been greatly accelerated in speed), to be followed on the 4th of February by the new screw steam-ship Bengal, of 2,400 tons and 600-horse power, and by the Ripon on the 20th of February. The Euxine and the Sultan are to occupy the Marseilles and Malta branch till two very powerful paddle-wheel steamers, the Vectis and Valetta, of 900 tons and 400-horse power, now building especially for this service, are completed.

The company for the performance of their additional duties in the Eastern Seas have recently reinforced their fleet by despatching to India the steam-ships Bentinet, the Madras, the Bombay, the Chusan, the Shanghai, and the Formosa, for the Bombay and China and Singapore and Australian services. These vessels will, it is expected, be on the spot in time to commence at the appointed dates; so that there is every reason to believe that the admirable and efficient arrangements made by the company will cause this vast and comprehensive network of steam communication to go into prompt and punctual operation precisely at the stipulated time and date at all the several ports.

The practical monopoly of the overland communication with India and China is now unreservedly in the hands of the Peninsular and Oriental Company. It is no less for the benefit of the company than for the benefit of the public service that the greatest pains should be constantly devoted to improving, cheapening, and accelerating the route wherever practicable ameliorations present themselves. The late energy of the company in constructing a fleet of new ships, and improving the old ones at vast expense, is an earnest that no future efforts will be spared to maintain this important and gigantic chain of communication in the highest state of efficiency, regularity, and general usefulness.

BOARD OF COMMISSIONERS FOR THE AFFAIRS OF INDIA.—Sir Charles Wood, Bart., M.P., has been appointed president of the Board, and R. Lowe, Esq., M.P., and A. H. Layard, Esq., M.P., joint secretaries.

UNIVERSAL LIFE ASSURANCE SOCIETY.

Established in 1834.—Empowered by Special Act of Parliament.

1, KING WILLIAM STREET, LONDON.

For the Assurance of Lives at Home and Abroad, including Gentlemen engaged in the Military and Naval Services.

DIRECTORS.

SIR HENRY WILLOCK, K.L.S., Chairman.

JOHN STUART, Esq., Deputy Chairman.

Lieut.-Gen. Sir Richard Armstrong,

C.B., K.C.T., and S.

John Bagshaw, Esq., M.P.

Augustus Bosanquet, Esq.

Charles Dashwood Bruce, Esq.

Ellis Watkin Cunliffe, Esq.

William Kilburn, Esq.

AUDITORS.—Robert Gardner, Esq.; Robert Hichens, Esq.;

William Oxborough, Esq.

BANKERS.—Bank of England, and Messrs. Currie and Co.

SOLICITOR.—William Henry Cotterill, Esq.

PHYSICIAN.—George Burrows, M.D., F.R.S., 18, Cavendish Square.

ACTUARY.—David Jones, Esq.

The principle adopted by the Universal Life Assurance Society, of an annual valuation of assets and liabilities, and a division of three-fourths of the profits among the assured, is admitted to offer great advantages, especially to those parties who may wish to appropriate their proportion of profit to the reduction of future premiums.

The following Table will show the result of the last division of profits, as declared on the 12th of May, 1852, to all persons who had on that day paid six annual premiums, being a reduction of 45 per cent. on the current annual premium. This will be found a most liberal reduction, if the original premiums be compared with those of other offices adopting a similar plan of division of profits:—

Age when Policy was issued.	Date of Policy.	Sum assured.	Original Premium.	Reduced Ann. Premium for current Year.
20	On or before 12th of May, 1847.	£1,000	£19 6 8	£10 12 8
30		1,000	24 8 4	13 8 7
40		1,000	31 10 0	17 6 6
50	1847.	1,000	42 15 0	23 10 3
60		1,000	66 11 8	36 12 5

. The attention of Gentlemen connected with India is particularly requested to the Regulations of this Society; as, on comparison with other offices, its terms will be found peculiarly advantageous, especially as regards the liberal plan adopted on the return of Indian Assurers to reside permanently in this country; and the Indian Rates have been calculated from extensive data and Tables exclusively in the possession of this Society, by which the true risk of life during residence in India has been most accurately ascertained.

BAKER'S ANTIDOTE for SEA-SICKNESS. Testimonials sent on receipt of a postage stamp.—Sold in bottles at 2s. 9d. each by respectable chemists.

BAKER'S "SINE MANUBRIUM," or HANDLESS HAIR-BRUSH (registered). The bristles being set transversely, it acts as a comb and a hard searching brush one way, a soft surface brush the other, and when used sideways it forms two medium penetrating brushes of different actions by merely turning it. The hair by its use soon becomes both glossy and curly. They are cheaper than any others, as only half the wood is used, and they take only half the room in the carpet bag.

GOOD BRUSHES FROM 2s. EACH. Question.—When using your hair-brush, do you grasp the handle or the back? Answer.—Invariably (after a moment's reflection), I take hold of the back; I find I have more power.

Inference.—Then of what use is the handle, except to take up double the room in your carpet bag or dressing-case?

The Editors of most of the newspapers strongly recommend Baker's "Sine Manubrium," or Handless Hair-Brush.

Baker's Six New Pattern Tooth-Brushes, 6d. and 9d. each.—Baker's Pocket Tooth-Brush, made to unscrew and fit in its handle, takes no more room than a penknife.—Highest award at the Great Exhibition.—Ladies' and Gentlemen's Dressing-Cases, fitted complete, from 10s.—Fancy Soaps and Perfumery in all its branches.
